I may say to the able Senator from Wyoming that I voted not only for all of the appropriations for T. V. A., a project so ably presented to the Senate and to the Congress and to the country by the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], but I voted for for the appropriations for the Muscle Shoals Dam away back in 1917. I voted for every bit of the T. V. A., and I am proud of my votes. That project is not in Minnesota. It is way down South. Bonneville is in Oregon and Washington; Grand Coulee is in Washington. None of those projects are in the State of Minnesota; but I am an American. I think of my country as an entirety. I am interested only in the United States, and I voted for the Gilbertsville Dam, the dam in which the senior Senator from Kentucky was interested, and the appropriation which he succeeded in having adopted, and now I know he will join us in voting for this extra $50,000,000, so that we may have some little dams in our State, inasmuch as he gets a big dam in his State. [Laughter.]

NORRIS DAM

I am interested in these great structures because they are enduring. The great Norris Dam will be in existence a thousand years after we are gone. The great Muscle Shoals Dam, the great Keokuk Dam, the Hetch-Hetchy Dam in California—I visited all these structures, and I am proud of them. They are American structures. They were raised by American engineers and by American labor. They are erected by American industry, and they benefit the American people.

LET US FIRST TAKE CARE OF OUR OWN

Mr. President, I am not ashamed to say that I am a nationalist. I want to build in my own country, for my own people, and the only way we will ever be able to help the world is by first building our own economy, so that we will be an example to the rest of the world. If we then have a surplus, I shall be glad to have some of the surplus sent abroad. But let us first take care of our own. He who will not first take care of his own is worse than an infidel; and I do not want to be an infidel.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, if I understand the Senator aright, his nationalism is just as broad as the United States. It is not a nationalism which wants to take care of those who are still able to get along some way or other by appropriations and subsidies, but it is a nationalism which reaches down to those who have been thrown overboard and who now, with their wives and children, are hungry and ill clad and ill housed.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I thank the Senator. My nationalism extends to any point on earth where flies the American flag. But I should like to see the Philippines turned over to the Filipinos. I have no objection to the establishment of an aviation station or to harbor dredging at Guam, but I am not in favor of huge appropriations for Guam in the amount of $200,000,000, as has been suggested by naval authorities.

I am not in favor of our adventuring into Europe. I am not in favor of any frontiers on the Rhine, or placing our frontier on the Vistula, or on the Danube. I am not in favor of our going to the Congo, or to Bombay, or Calcutta, or Hong Kong, or Australia, or Africa, or Europe, or Asia. I am interested in economy here in the United States.

I think the $50,000,000 proposed to be added will clearly be beneficial to our own people. But I will say to Senators that if we are to adventure into Europe, Asia, and Africa, if Senators outvote me and we go there, I will support the venture with my vote for appropriations, as I did during the World War. I know no other country than America, and I will sustain my country in any effort for victory, even though we may undertake a mistaken adventure. I hope we will not do that. I hope we will confine our efforts to the unsolved problems at home.

I now read from the Seattle Post Intelligencer of March 21, 1929:

CRISIS ON RELIEF FACED BY COUNTY—LACK OF FUNDS TO BRING CUT OF 5,000

King County probably will be compelled to make large emergency appropriations to feed and house indigents because of the drastic reduction in the State appropriation for the same purpose, County Commissioner Tom Smith predicted yesterday.

"If the county is compelled to take over the burden again," Smith said, "we will demand return of the control of the county welfare department from the State to county commissioners."

FIVE THOUSAND TO BE DROPPED

Administrator L. L. Hegland, of the county welfare department, announced Friday that approximately 5,000 persons must be cut from county general assistance rolls April 1 because of the 50-percent cut in State appropriations for the ensuing biennium as compared with the past 2 years.

Some here are voting in the negative on the $50,000,000 item, while Seattle is having an emergency. I am afraid Seattle is not the only city where there is an emergency.

It looks from this distance like the situation possibly may involve issuance of emergency warrants by the county, Smith said. "We are concerned because the county now is preparing to fund its outstanding emergency warrants through sale of bonds and addition of this new burden will make the situation difficult."

I now refer to the New York Times of April 2, 1939.

W. P. A. here to drop 10,800 this week on Capital's order. Eight thousand in construction jobs, 2,800 white-collar workers will be dismissed.

Half to go on city relief.

A little later I shall read a telegram from Mayor LaGuardia as to what will happen in New York City. I will read telegrams from the mayors of Chicago, Philadelphia, Cleveland, Toledo, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Minneapolis, St. Paul, Duluth, great cities throughout the United States, if the Senate will bear with me. I think that if the hungry are to be turned out to starve, if we are to inflict that terrible punishment upon them, we may well spend an hour or two in the Senate Chamber surveying the situation which confronts us. I read further from the New York Times:

FURTHER FEDERAL CUT EXPECTED UNLESS CONGRESS GRANTS FULL APPROPRIATION REQUEST

Dismissal slips will be given this week to 10,800 W. P. A. workers in this city under instructions received from Washington yesterday by Col. Brehon B. Somerville, local Works Progress administrator. The dismissals will begin tomorrow and continue at the rate of 2,000 a day.

In other words, 2,000 a day are being thrown onto the streets of New York City. Multiply that by three and a half or four, three and a half, to be very conservative, and we find that nearly 8,000 people in the great city of New York, without any income or any source of income, are being dismissed. Ten days would make it 80,000 people. If those 80,000 people marched past this Capitol, there would be a greater parade than we witnessed on the 6th of April, 1939.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. LUNDEEN. I yield.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. And even that great number does not include other millions who are unemployed. It does not include those who have never been able to get on the rolls because there was not enough money to give them sustenance.

Is it not true also that the rolls, instead of shrinking, under present conditions are bound to increase, because those American workmen who have been able to stay off relief, those who have accumulated a few dollars for a rainy day, in the last 4 or 5 years have been gradually consuming that money? More and more of them are getting to the inevitable point where they have to find work, and if private industry does not give it to them, the Government must give it to them, and if the Government does not give them honorable work, daily work, then as to a great number of them the Government will later give it to them as convicts, because they will have been compelled to break the laws to keep themselves and their families alive.

Mr. LUNDEEN. The Senator has very well stated the situation. There are hundreds of thousands who have been certified for relief who have never been able to get on the rolls.

THE BATTLE BETWEEN BATTLESHIPS AND BREAD

I do not like to refer to this subject again, but, Mr. President, we are too busy building $100,000,000 battleships, and in the battle between battleships and bread I am for bread, although I have voted for appropriations for building battleships. So far I have gone along and voted for adequate defenses of this country. But we are too busy appropriating nearly $2,000,000,000 this year for armaments. I can produce plenty of testimony from American admirals and generals to the effect that up to the time the present appropriation was made we had adequate means of defense not only for the United States of America but for the defense of the Monroe Doctrine. I join with Senators in defending the Monroe Doctrine. I am willing to extend our defenses to include all of North and South America and the outlying islands. But, Mr. President, we are too busy with that particular subject.

I wish to call attention to another matter. I have no quarrel with such splendid gentlemen as Eugene Grace, of Bethlehem Steel. He is one of the finest men ever to grace modern industry. But in 1 year he received $1,635,000 salary and bonus. That is more than the President of the United States receives, plus the salaries of his 15 Cabinet members, plus the salaries of the 9 members of the Supreme Court, and plus the salaries of all the 96 United States Senators, and there is left a quarter of a million dollars on top of all that—and one man received that great sum of money in 1 year. That is what I mean when I say that the top-heavy structure of American wealth has become so great and ponderous that it has become a danger to these men themselves, and it may in time destroy the American democracy which we are sworn to uphold.

While these men have these huge fortunes and receive these huge salaries I am willing to vote some money out of their treasuries. I want to be very kind and liberal to Eugene Grace, of Bethlehem Steel. I should be willing to let him have $35,000 out of the $1,635,000 he received as salary and bonus. All I want to do is to tax the $1,600,000 away from him, and put it in the social-security fund. I do not want to deflate him too quickly. Let him have the $35,000. He has made this money under the rules of the game. I am not finding fault with the gentleman. I merely say that we here in authority should deal with that situation.

Mr. President, those who picked up their newspapers last night and this morning may have read whole pages devoted to the publishing of lists of salaries, salaries so large as to stun one who reads of them. I do not know just why such persons should object to paying a little here and there to make up the $50,000,000. It would require only a trifle to be taken from their salaries, to be used for the unemployed and the hungry.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PEPPER in the chair). Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. LUNDEEN. I yield.

UNEMPLOYMENT IN MONTANA

Mr. MURRAY. I should like to observe that the unfortunate thing about the whole situation is that all the big leaders of industry to whom I have referred do not appear to be making any effort whatever to offer a solution for our economic problems. All that we hear is a cry for the curtailment of these appropriations to aid the poor, unfortunate, hungry people. Letters and telegrams have come to me from Montana calling my attention to the situation out there. I just received a telegram this morning from a committee in Montana which has been studying the situation. The telegram reads as follows:

BUTTE, MONT., April 7, 1939.

JAMES E. MURRAY,
Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Silverbow County relief conference, April 2, 174 delegates and individuals, representing 38 organizations with membership approximating 14,000, urges immediate increase W. P. A. quota for Montana of 1,000 to aid in meeting desperate situation.

HENRY MERMIN, Chairman.
NORMAN LEFEVER, Secretary.

Mr. LUNDEEN. What was the expression used—"desperate situation"?

Mr. MURRAY. "Desperate situation." There has been a 10-percent reduction in the operations of the copper-mining corporations of the country. In one mine alone which closed down a short time ago a thousand men were thrown out of employment. There is no industry there to which these men can turn for employment. The only way they can be taken care of is through the W. P. A. As I said, business apparently is making no effort and offering no solution whatever for the desperate situation that confronts the country. They themselves acknowledge that the economic system under which we are operating has broken down.

A distinguished editor, writing in Fortune magazine, of last June, points out that the development of our economic system was marked with serious conflict, and at times, bloody revolutions.

He points out that notwithstanding the more or less successful establishment of many of its principles, it has failed in this country in some serious respects. He says:

The capitalistic democracy came to be regarded as the fortress of enlightenment and stood out against the dark, tyrannical, chaotic background of history as an irreversible human achievement. Yet, with the successful establishment of many of its principles, the system, which they conceived, has finally faltered. Its irreversibility is no longer apparent. Three of the biggest nations in the Western World, and many lesser ones have rejected it almost in its entirety, and even in the so-called democracies, its basic concepts have been questioned and its basic practices violated. Capitalistic democracy no longer stands forth as the emancipator of mankind. Its enemies denounce it as humbug—a system that pretends to emancipate all mankind, but in actuality, has emancipated only some men in certain portions of the earth, under favorable circumstances. Its friends, on the other hand, fail to defend it, their words result in oratory and their deeds in confusion.

That is a statement made by one of the great periodicals of this country which represents big business and speaks for big business. This distinguished editor further says:

The fact is that in operating the capitalistic economy American business has constantly misappropriated the principles of democracy. American business has made use of those principles to its own enormous profit, but it has failed entirely to grasp the social implications of its profit making. As representing the capitalistic economy, business has an obligation to build a workable economy system, but by 1932, it was evident that it had failed to do this. It had failed, and it has since failed, to provide for approximately one-third of the American people. It has failed to provide them with a livelihood, to say nothing of a democratic opportunity, and in so failing, it has created a class of persons for whom income and sustenance is more immediately important than the preservation of those political assumptions upon which business grew to power.

This is the language of an able and courageous spokesman of American business and industry. At the time it created considerable excitement and interest among students of the economic problem. An editorial in the Washington Daily News commenting on it said:

When business is criticized by the New Deal that is no surprise, but when Fortune blames business for a lot of its economic ailments business should at least give heed. * * * Fortune, in its June issue, talks like a Puritan father to business.

The path of American business is indeed a narrow one, but it is perfectly clear. The evils of our industrial system must be stamped out. Monopolies must be removed from the path of free competitive enterprise. There must be a more equitable distribution of the profits of industry, and Government and business must cooperate to work out a system which will overcome the recurring periods of mass unemployment.

That is the situation which is confronting the people of this country, and apparently no effort is being made to work out some program by which we can correct these conditions. I cannot understand how anyone could fail to support the appropriation which is being sought.

I have just received information to the effect that the President has issued a statement, to which I should like to call the Senate's attention. The statement is the result of a telegram which was just sent to the President by the head of Workers' Alliance of America, Mr. David Lasser. In response to it the President, through his secretary, has issued the following statement:

Please tell Mr. David Lasser that the President has received his telegram in Georgia and feels as strongly as ever that the full amount should be appropriated, and that the responsibility for any cut whatsoever must rest on the Congress.

It seems to me it is up to Congress to take any action on this matter, and I do not see why it should fail to recognize the conditions that are confronting this country.

BUSINESS HAS FAILED TO PROVIDE A REMEDY

Mr. LUNDEEN. The Senator from Montana has well stated the position of business today in these matters. I do not think there is any call for business to lecture the American Congress after its own failure. I have repeatedly called attention to the fact that captains of industry call for our early adjournment, they want to get us out of here so that we will not legislate to the detriment of business and lessen confidence in the country, but no sooner do we get home before they shout for us to come back to appropriate some more money to pull them out of the ditch from which they are unable to extricate themselves.

Business has notably failed to provide a remedy. If they have a remedy let them speak now. Now is the time to speak up. Now is the time to come forward with the employment they are talking about. Now is the time to show the American people what they can do, if they have the remedy. But where they are unable to meet the situation the Government must step in, because our Government is instituted to see that there is opportunity for life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness among the American people.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUNDEEN. I yield.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I have heard of a few remedies, none of which the Senator or I would approve of, however. Sometime ago I was one night in a sleeping car and talking to the head of a great industrial institution out west. He said, he thought one of the remedies would be, instead of plowing under every third row of cotton, to plow under a third of the unemployed. Another gentleman said that he had read history and he knew that the only remedy was a great war to kill them off.

The other day a Member of Congress, not of this body, advised some people in my State, not how to remedy this situation but how to help it temporarily. He said that as a young man he used to fry grasshoppers with bacon and eat them, and he thought that if the people on W. P. A. out there would eat grasshoppers that would solve the problem. So, Senators see there are remedies presented, but they are not remedies which, if applied, will leave this Republic intact.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, the other day the able Senator from Florida read from a newspaper article which perhaps a little facetiously referred to drowning the people on relief. We heard that article read on the floor of the Senate. I was aghast when the article was read. It took me a little while to come to after hearing the first part of it read.

Other remedies are now proposed by businessmen who want the people on relief to eat grasshoppers. If we get into another war, that businessman may be eating grasshoppers, because if we engage in the confiscation of capital wealth, as has been done in some of the countries of the world, but which I am not standing here to advocate—if we engage in another war, this man may be reduced to such extremities that he will begin to share in his fellow citizens' sufferings and sympathize with them.

Mr. PEPPER. I wish to remind the Senator of something of which he has already taken notice. I refer to the proposal which was made with respect to drowning the unemployed. Even that expedient would be financially costly. I know that some of our friends believe so much in economy that they would not be agreeable even to the expense which would be necessary to dispose of the disagreeable and burdensome unemployed in that way.

Mr. President, I am very much interested in some of the fundamental observations being made by the Senator from Minnesota. I know that he has never missed an opportunity to vote for constructive measures which would be of benefit to all the people of the country. I know that his attitude on the pending measure is not inconsistent with his attitude on all other helpful, constructive measures which have come before the Congress.

As I understand the Senator's attitude, he does not advocate the appropriation of this money for extravagance. He is not trying to excuse in the W. P. A. any profligacy in the use of funds. He is not trying to keep anybody on the pay roll who ought not to be there. I judge from his remarks that he believes that this activity never should have been called "relief," but that it should have been called "job opportunity." It is just as honorable to work on the W. P. A. as it is to do any other kind of work, public or private. So, I wonder if I properly understand the Senator when I interpret his remarks as meaning that he is in favor of a great construction program in this country, building useful projects, projects which provide an economic return for the expenditure of the money spent, projects which tend to enrich the country rather than to pauperize it, projects which not only put money in circulation and provide jobs, but which also make the country richer than it otherwise would have been.

If the country spends its money upon useful, constructive, economically justifiable projects, then I wonder if it is the opinion of the Senator from Minnesota that a Congress which appropriates funds for such purposes is a profligate, inconsiderate, extravagant Congress, or whether, as a matter of fact, it is engaging in one of the most constructive things that could be done for the economy of the whole country.

Before the Senator concludes I hope he will address himself to the query propounded yesterday by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS], and the day before by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE]. Does the Senator know how those Senators will obtain the distribution they speak about, which will bring back prosperity to the country, without some supplement being given to private enterprise by some kind of a public agency representing the people of the country? I hope the Senator will address himself to the question whether or not he has heard any proposal from the sponsors of the policy of economy which will tend to aid in bringing about the distribution of our income which will make possible greater purchasing power, which our friends, the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from Georgia, and other friends of the economy attitude say they so earnestly desire.

Mr. LUNDEEN. In the course of my remarks I think I shall deal with the Senator's suggestion.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, at the conclusion of my remarks, some of the articles to which I have referred, notably the one which I am now reading, and certain other articles which I had intended to read in full.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GUFFEY in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Minnesota? The Chair hears none, and the matter referred to may be printed in the RECORD.

(The matter referred to appears at the end of Mr. LUNDEEN's speech.)

OUR EDUCATIONAL SYSTEM HAS SUFFERED

Mr. LUNDEEN. I pass over the remainder of the article to which I have been referring and come to one from the Philadelphia Record of March 21, 1939, which, I understand, is included in the permission to print:

Seven hundred school teachers in Schuylkill County go payless. One thousand will be on list by April if State fails to act.

Those are Pennsylvania school teachers. We have seen reference to previous instances in which our educational system has suffered severely in almost every State in the Union. I bring this matter to the attention of the Senate in order that we may not forget our educational system.

Another article from the same issue of the Philadelphia Record says:

Unpaid teachers in Luzerne do odd jobs for livelihood.

They do not receive enough salary for teaching, so they must do odd jobs in addition to teaching so that they may live.

Five hundred and thirty-three employees in Governor James' home county go without salaries. Three hundred and ninety-seven more face payless pay days. Two million five hundred thousand dollars needed to carry on.

The salary of Eugene Grace would just about take care of the $2,500,000 needed for 1 year in this Pennsylvania county. I understand that gentleman received a bonus of $10,000,000 during the World War. Just what for, I do not know. I am not in the slightest degree criticizing the president of Bethlehem Steel personally, or any of his methods. No doubt he is a very able and distinguished businessman.

EVERY MAN HAS THE DIVINE RIGHT TO WORK

It is my belief that every man has the divine right to work. If he cannot find work in private industry, it is the duty of the Government to create work.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. LUNDEEN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. I wonder if I correctly understood the Senator to say that Mr. Grace received in 1 year a salary sufficient to take care of the losses in the whole State of Pennsylvania for 1 year?

Mr. LUNDEEN. No; not for the entire State of Pennsylvania. The statement involved only one locality, one county, where $2,500,000 was needed. I said that his salary of $1,635,000 would be approximately enough to take care of the need of that locality for 1 year, although I do not propose to strip him of his entire salary. If I had my way about it, I would leave him $35,000 out of the $1,635,000.

Mr. President, back in 1932 the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] asked that $5,000,000,000 be appropriated for public works. As I remember the RECORD, that was not done. In 1933 the Senator from Wisconsin came forward with a proposal asking for $10,000,000,000. So the figures I have proposed at various times which may seem large, are not so large when compared with the $10,000,000,000 which has already been proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin for public works.

Mr. President, it is pretty generally agreed among students of political economy that had the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin in 1933 been adopted, perhaps we should not find ourselves in the difficulty in which we are today.

In the past we did not have a plan. We did not have blue prints. We did not have engineering data. We did not have sounding for the foundations for dams. Such things take time. Had we engaged in such work back in 1932 and 1933, we should have a different situation today.

I have before me a statement which appears in the May 28 issue of the Nation, which states:

Even with the spending program people today are starving in Chicago, in Cleveland, and all over the country.

I call attention to the statement of Lloyd George, the great war Premier of Great Britain, who said in one of his speeches not long ago that there is more misery in one great American city than in all of Great Britain.

WEALTH MAY HAVE A SAD AWAKENING

It seems that those who receive ample salaries from the Government, or who have huge fortunes, are not concerned. However, if the present situation continues the day will come when we will be concerned, whether we are Members of this body or whether we are back home. Even with the spending program of today people are starving in Chicago, Cleveland, and all over the country. Perhaps the Nation is too progressive, too liberal, or too radical.

I turn now to the Washington Evening Star. I quote G. Gould Lincoln:

There are more millions of unemployed today than there were last year, or even during the Hoover administration. There has been a tremendous falling off in industrial production along many lines.

THEY WILL NOT ALWAYS STARVE

I have before me a report by Gov. Herbert Lehman, of New York, dealing with public relief to transients and nonsettled persons in the State of New York. The report deals with persons sleeping in the open, persons who have no homes, but who sleep in the open and are starving. But, sir, they will not always starve. Some day they may come to Washington, as did the veterans in the days of the bonus march.

There is no desire on the part of those in distress to overthrow the American Government and endanger our institutions. They are just as patriotic citizens as ever lived beneath our flag. They want to support American democracy and the American Government. However, they are sleeping in the open. They are starving today, under the policies which we have pursued. We are not helping them today by refusing to appropriate the additional $50,000,000.

I want to go along and do everything I can as a Senator to aid relief and to aid the unemployed. However, I wonder whether we are proposing to do enough. I realize that any statement I might make would be the statement of a person not expert in statistics. Therefore, I base whatever I may say merely on newspaper extracts, and the reports of Governor Lehman, and the testimony of Harry Hopkins. I am now referring to some testimony of about a year ago.

SIX HUNDRED THOUSAND CERTIFIED FOR W. P. A. NOT EMPLOYED

There we have the matter which was referred to by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. SCHWARTZ]. The Senator said that many who have been certified have never been given work on W. P. A.—600,000 of them.

Senator BYRNES. Do you know how many have been certified by the various agencies at this time who have not been passed upon?

Mr. HOPKINS. About 600,000 that they have certified as in need and they state are employable.

Multiplying that by 4, we have 2,400,000 people, or we may use the figure of 3½, if we wish; nearly two and a half million destitute people whose breadearners and job seekers, over 600,000 of them, have been certified and never put on the rolls. We are not even talking about them; but the able Senator from Wyoming was referring to the matter a few moments ago. I will say to the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], who has just entered the Chamber, that I was quoting from the figures of Harry Hopkins of a year ago that more than 600,000 persons certified to our rolls as in need, and unemployed and willing to work, were on the records, but had never even had a chance to work; and we are not talking about throwing them off.

We are talking about throwing off those who were certified and put on the rolls. But, in addition to those, we have this number of over 600,000; and if we multiply that number by the ratio of 3½ or 4 we have nearly 2,000,000 people—men, women, and children—depending upon them.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President——

Mr. LUNDEEN. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. The Senator has just used the expression "and willing to work." A great many uninformed persons, and some who probably are informed but are not careful about the information they receive, have attempted to make the people of America believe that the W. P. A. worker, as we understand him, or the unemployed man, is not willing to work. I recall the Senator's attention to the fact that here in the city of Washington last fall, I think, the departments advertised that they were going to employ about 150 charwomen at a nominal yearly rate of pay, and over 2,000 women, Negroes and whites, congregated in the public streets in a mad effort to secure an opportunity to have their names put down on the list in order that a few of them might receive jobs of that kind.

I desire to say to the Senator also that it has been my experience—although, thank God for the fact, in Wyoming our situation is not as bad as it is in the great cities—that wherever there is a call for men to go to work, there are plenty of men who go and endeavor to get the jobs; and that is true of women also.

Another thing: We have ten or eleven million men and women able to work and seeking work and before we criticize them for not working I think the least we can do is to point out the jobs and say, "Here are ten or eleven million jobs; now, why do you not take them?"

I merely wanted to have placed in the RECORD the fact that so far as my observation goes, so far as we have had an opportunity to see the matter put to the test, these people who are unemployed are perfectly willing to work, and want to work.

AMERICANS ARE WILLING TO WORK

Mr. LUNDEEN. Of course Americans are willing to work. We have some unworthy individuals, but we are not concerned with merely one here and there. The great mass of the American people are honest, upright people, who desire to work and contribute to the support of their Government; and they are willing to bare their breasts to the storms of war, if necessary, which they pray they may avoid, but if war comes they will be there; but it is our duty to protect them now in these times of peace, and I thank the Senator from Wyoming for calling attention to this matter.

Just last night I read in the newspapers that some official here had stated that the appropriations in the District of Columbia were ample; yet we learn that when somebody here puts out applications to employ a few persons, thousands of applicants appear in the city of Washington. Conditions right here in the National Capital are more severe and more desperate than in many other places, although I am no expert on the matter. I know that the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] knows far more about that matter than I do, and perhaps I am speaking out of turn; but that is my impression, and, right or wrong, I am going to give voice to it. If I am wrong, I desire to be corrected.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I wonder if the Senator saw, some time ago, the account in a New York newspaper, which was put into the RECORD by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], stating that the city had a mere dozen jobs to fill, and notice of the availability of those jobs became current, and on the particular morning in question several thousand women applied for those 12 jobs. Does the Senator recall seeing that account, or does he doubt that that condition exists all over the country?

Mr. LUNDEEN. I do not doubt it. I remember seeing many items of that kind; and I know that those things occur even in our home cities of Minneapolis, St. Paul, Duluth, and other cities of Minnesota.

Mr. PEPPER. With the Senator's permission, I will insert in the RECORD at this point an extract from the article in question.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I shall be glad to have that done.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York World-Telegram of February 9, 1939]

FOUR THOUSAND WOMEN KEEP VIGIL FOR 12 JOBS—SLEEPLESS NIGHT OVER, THEY REGISTER; GIRL FAINTS IN CRUSH

Upward of 4,000 women answered dramatically today the question: "Would the unemployed and the relief recipients take a job if they could get one?"

From the thousands who filed through the Two Hundred and Forty-fourth Coast Artillery Armory, 12 will be rewarded with the prize all are seeking—a job at $18.47 a week, washing test tubes, cleaning cages of rats and guinea pigs, and scrubbing floors and sticky benches in the laboratories of the New York health department.

At the head of the weary line, which finally began to move at 9 a. m., were several hundred women of all ages whose red-rimmed eyes and rumpled clothing testified that they had spent a sleepless night.

GIRL FAINTS

One girl fainted during the morning rush, but there was no disorder.

The municipal civil service commission, which knows better than anyone, perhaps, how eager the jobless are for work, had made foresighted arrangements for today's registration.

According to law, it is first come first served for such menial jobs as laboratory assistants. After the registrations the first 12 women who can pass physical examinations and who can read, write, and speak English will get the jobs. But the list made up today will be kept for 4 years, and from it may be selected a few women to replace those who leave civil-service jobs as scrubwomen.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. LUNDEEN. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. PEPPER. A day or two ago a gentleman who came to see me was commenting on the fact which the Senator from Minnesota and the Senator from Wyoming have just been discussing; namely, that there are in private industry persons who perhaps are not always alert, and keenly on their jobs. He mentioned an incident which had occurred a few days before that time. He stated that he had had a telephone installed in his home by the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., one of the most efficient and one of the largest corporations of this country. He said that when he went into the bedroom in which the telephone was being installed, he found one of the two workmen who had been sent there to install the telephone lying down on the bed on his back, and the other fellow leaning over the foot of the bed saying, "Now it is time for you to get up and work some." [Laughter.] So perhaps the W. P. A. is not the only agency which has some employees who sometimes loaf a little.

SINCERE, HONEST, HARD-WORKING AMERICAN PEOPLE

Mr. LUNDEEN. Of course, we have some slackers on the job everywhere and a few unworthy people, and I admit that there are some unworthy people on the W. P. A. rolls. I admit that there have been some instances of fraud. I know that there have been instances of fads and fancies that can be brought in here for the amusement of those who care to listen to them, but they are not representative of the great mass of sincere, honest, hard-working American people. They are not to be put in the class of that type of people, and we find folks of that sort in both private and public employment.

Quoting further:

Senator BYRNES. You do not mean to say, though, that you have not passed upon some of those people constituting that 600,000?

Mr. HOPKINS. They move through our office every day.

Senator BYRNES. You do not contend that you are able today to give a job out of the funds available to every person certified as eligible and deemed by you to be eligible?

Mr. HOPKINS. No. We have approximated that number.

Senator BYRNES. What I wanted to get at is your best estimate of the number who are on the rolls certified as eligible, as approved by you and eligible and have not been able to secure work on your work-relief projects.

SIX HUNDRED THOUSAND OR FIVE HUNDRED THOUSAND PLUS NOT PROVIDED FOR

Mr. HOPKINS. I would discount that 600,000 by about 12 or 15 percent—say, 500,000; that would be about right.

Senator BYRNES. Your deductions then would result in a reduction of 10 or 12 percent?

Mr. HOPKINS. About 15 percent.

Senator BYRNES. I think that is an important factor.

Senator ADAMS. Mr. Hopkins, if the appropriation goes through as it stands, would that enable you to take up this entire load?

Mr. HOPKINS. Well, I would like to say one or two things before going into that.

Senator TOWNSEND. Just let me ask one more question right there.

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes, sir.

Senator TOWNSEND. I think you testified before Senator BYRNES' committee that as to every man who was employable you were able to give him a job, offer him a job, did you not?

Mr. HOPKINS. No; I said in a great many cities, where rumors were that we were not offering a job to every employable person, that we actually were.

JOBS NOT GIVEN ALL UNEMPLOYED

Senator TOWNSEND. Maybe I misunderstood you. I was there, and I understood you to say that you were offering a job to every employable every day.

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; I did not.

MILLIONS UNEMPLOYED

Senator BYRNES. What is the condition today as compared with the date you were testifying?

Mr. HOPKINS. Well, from the time I testified before your committee, Senator, and even as of the time a week or 10 days ago, or 2 weeks ago, when I was testifying before the House committee, it is my judgment that the relief problem in terms of unemployed people, projecting this simply for the next few months, is even more serious than I had contemplated.

There is the statement of Mr. Hopkins, who is an expert on the problems of the Works Progress Administration, stating that the situation was more serious than he had contemplated. I am afraid Senators will discover after a while that the situation in this country is more serious than they contemplate today.

In general, the problem is a serious one. There are about 800,000 people receiving unemployment insurance benefits today. After the benefit periods come to an end many of those people will come to us.

By the way, the employment benefits usually run for only about 10 or 12 weeks. Suppose they run for 12 weeks—and I have not seen any longer period than that—are these people to starve for the other 40 weeks? Twelve weeks on the unemployment rolls, and then 40 weeks off the rolls! Where are they going? They are going to the Works Progress Administration. They are going to the local city and county and State relief bureaus. That is where they are going; and Senators are going to discover that fact in their correspondence and by telephone and by telegrams in the not distant future. I hope these able and distinguished Senators for whom we have had every consideration, and have voted them huge dams and other great projects, will stand up on the floor now, and, with the mighty power of their eloquence, put through this amendment. Though my word may be of no avail, perhaps if they will recall the projects we have given their States they will, in gratitude and in remembrance of our unemployed, rise to the occasion.

Furthermore, there has just occurred a drop in private employment of from three to four million over a few months' period. The speed with which that drop occurred was probably unprecedented.

RESOURCES OF UNEMPLOYED GRADUALLY EXHAUSTED

Now, some of those people who were thrown out of work may have resources that will carry them for months; but if they do not get back into private employment at the end of 3, 4, 5, or 6 months many have to go to the local relief offices for aid.

THIS IS NO TIME FOR DECREASING W. P. A. ROLLS

That is exactly what the Senator from Wyoming said a while ago; their resources are being exhausted. They have been exhausted in many cases, and there is suffering in the cities of New York, and Chicago, and Philadelphia, and the great Twin Cities of my State, where we have a center of population of 1,000,000. Many of my fellow Senators do not realize that within a radius of 25 miles of Minneapolis and St. Paul there is a center of population of 1,000,000 people. That is one of the great population centers. In these centers people are not growing carrots on the sidewalks and cabbages on the pavements, and when they are thrown off the rolls they are face to face with the barbed wire of starvation; they run up against it, and there is no money in the bank.

They have borrowed and exhausted the funds of their relatives and friends, and they will have to seek relief, and they will be going to State and county relief agencies. I make that statement for the purpose of showing that this is no time for making a cut. As the able Senator from Nebraska stated, we ought to vote $100,000,000 instead of the $50,000,000 proposed by the amendment. One hundred million dollars would not carry us through.

Mr. President, a few years ago, I sat in the House of Representatives as a Member of the Sixty-fifth Congress when in one appropriation we voted more money than was appropriated during the two administrations of Washington, and the administrations of Adams, Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, Jackson, and down through the administrations of Lincoln, Hayes, Garfield, Arthur, Harrison, McKinley, Theodore Roosevelt, and Taft; in one great appropriation we voted more money to go out and save the world than was expended by all those administrations.

Better save our people at home with a few scores of millions of dollars, and stop our world-saving adventures.

Those of us who remember that day will recall that we stood on the floor of the House and the Senate and predicted the very situation we are facing today, of poverty, and destitution, and distress, and hunger, that would follow. That prophecy was not based on any wisdom of our own; it was made as a result of our reading history. The cycles of history prove that after every war there are great depressions, and great poverty, and misery, and hunger, and in those periods and cycles of depression after great wars the very stability of the Government itself may be threatened. I say that it is time for us to consider very seriously the oaths of office we have taken to support the democracy and the Government of the United States, and not to imperil it by lack of consideration of matters which are now before the Senate.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have published in the RECORD a report from the Secretary of Agriculture on Senate bill 570, commonly known as the "cost of production bill."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

(The report will be found in the RECORD under the heading "Minimum Prices for Agricultural Products.")

WE MUST THINK OF THE AMERICAN FARMER

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, I shall be delighted to have in the RECORD the report of the Secretary on the cost-of-production bill. I believe I am one of the joint sponsors of that bill, and it is about time that we began thinking of the American farmer and making some effort to see that he gets at least cost of production. We were so busy rehabilitating the farmers of Belgium and France and other countries in Europe a while ago that we forgot to rehabilitate the American farmer. The professors found this word "rehabilitate." They wanted something we could not quite figure out, so they got hold of the word "rehabilitate." We were so busy rehabilitating the farmers of Europe that we were unable to rehabilitate the American farmers. I am suspicious of these queer phrases that are sprung on the American public. Rehabilitation of the farmers of Europe does not strike my Americanism very strongly.

I resume reading the quotation:

> Taking the lowest of the unemployment estimates, there are about 10,000,000 out of work, and the other estimates run up to over 12,500,000.

I am reading from statistics of a year ago, and I submit to the Senators on the floor of the Senate that the figure of today is the same as that of a year ago, so far as anyone is able to ascertain. I never heard the figure of the unemployed put below 10,000,000, and I do not believe I have heard it put over 13,000,000. Eleven to twelve million is the figure usually referred to. If I may refer to the Biggers report on the unemployment census, in his computation he arrived at a figure somewhere in the neighborhood of 10,700,000, very close to 11,000,000. Remember, that was a voluntary census; it was not the real census of the unemployed we should have had.

THE AMERICAN PEOPLE ARE LONG SUFFERING

The American people are long suffering. The American people have faced this situation very bravely, they have tramped the streets of our great cities in the vain hope of securing work, they have returned home at night to find their little children crying for bread, and their wives weeping over them. So long as I hold a seat in this honorable body I will not forget those people. So long as I have a vote on this floor I will vote for the appropriation of funds out of the wealth and abundance of the great American Nation, with its enormous productive capacity. I do not care to give the money as relief. I want to vote funds for work, for jobs, for employment, and I implore the business of America to come forward and give business employment. If business does not give employment, then certainly the Government must step in and offer employment through Government agencies.

BUSINESS HAS FAILED TO MEET THE SITUATION

First, let business go ahead. I want business to be given a chance. But this is now the seventh year of our deficits. We are running along now toward the tenth year of heavy depression, and certainly there has been opportunity enough for business to go ahead. I am not casting any reflection upon American business, because it has builded a wonderful economy through the aid and assistance of American workers, but in this crisis it has failed to meet the situation, and the Government and the American Treasury must step in and furnish jobs and employment, lest disaster overtake us.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWELLENBACH in the chair). Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. LUNDEEN. I yield.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to inquire of the Senator how business can go ahead when we continue to levy tax upon tax upon pay rolls, and discourage business?

Mr. LUNDEEN. I am not in favor of the heavy social-security tax which was levied upon business. I can agree with the Senator in that, and I agree with the senior Senator from Michigan that a part of that tax should be taken off, and there should be some relief in that way. But I remind the Senator that the captains of industry were greatly alarmed and concerned over their investments in foreign countries some 22 years ago, and wanted American soldiers to defend their interests with their lives and their blood, and we warned them that if they did that they would have to face appalling taxes, which would cut down their business in future years; and that is exactly what happened.

I am glad to have the statement of the able Senator from Oregon, because so far as the social-security taxes are concerned, there is no necessity for a surplus fund of $47,000,000,000, which penalizes and deadens business in the country; and I believe that is what the Senator referred to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not know anything about businesses which require armies in Europe. I only know about those businesses which serve the local communities where they are located. I know something about the difficulties of maintaining a pay roll under the New Deal philosophy. It is a very difficult and discouraging task. Every employer desires to put more people to work, but he cannot sell his output, he is being repressed, he is being put out of business by these taxes being continually placed upon him. The old axiom is still good, the power to tax is the power to destroy; and business is being destroyed today by taxes.

WAR TAXATION

Mr. LUNDEEN. The Senator has made a very able contribution concerning taxation and the burdens upon business. What he has referred to is exactly what happens after every great war. We cannot have the dance without paying the fiddler and business must now be patriotic and pay its taxes. Businessmen cannot have the wars without the taxes afterwards. There is the burden which comes upon us.

I cannot judge concerning the State of Oregon, but I know conditions in the State of Minnesota. I have in my files today letters from business leaders of our State castigating me and denouncing me because I voted to refrain from meddling in European politics and intrigues. I wrote back to them:

> We are in the war now, and we will have taxes upon taxes, and the burdens will weigh you down. I was trying to save you businessmen from this crushing tax burden. I tried to save you when six Senators in the Senate and 50 Members in the House voted against putting this heavy war burden upon the American businessmen and upon the American people. We voted against it, and I was one of the Representatives who voted in the negative.

I did not favor putting that heavy burden upon them. I wanted American business to be free of war taxation.

Our forefathers left Europe to escape war taxes. They left Europe to escape from the intrigues and the quarrels of kings and emperors over there. They left to come to America where they could be free from the intrigues and quarrels and boundary disputes and real estate title disputes of Europe. When they came here they did not expect someone to come along and drag them back into Europe. We are paying for that today, and we will be paying as long as any man sitting in this Chamber lives, and as long as his children live we will be paying. I am against any further adventures which will so highly increase the burden that we will have more misery and more poverty and more hunger and more destitution, perhaps to the destruction of our form of government.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUNDEEN. I yield.

Mr. MURRAY. I think there is a good deal of exaggeration with reference to this matter of taxation, about which we have heard so much. At least there is a considerable misunderstanding about it. I should like to inquire what additional taxes have been placed on business under the present administration. I do not know of any taxation which has had any serious effect upon business. I do know that the records of business during 1936 and 1937, when we were having a return of prosperity in this country, show that business made more profits during that period, after deducting taxes.

I do not see that taxes have had any deterrent effects upon business in this country. As a matter of fact, many of the corporations, notwithstanding the increased wages that were paid, and the taxes that they have paid, made more profits than they had made in any other period since 1929. So I should like to inquire: What are these taxes which are having such serious results as to affect our prosperity?

Mr. LUNDEEN. I thank the Senator from Montana. I wish to call attention to a statement by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in which he calls attention to the fact that business paid out $20,000,000,000 more from its resources than it took in. Perhaps that has something to do with the statement of the Senator from Oregon.

I have been reading that study pretty carefully—and as near as I can estimate it * * * beginning with 1929 and on down to 1935 private industry has put out, roughly, $20,000,000,000 more than it has taken in.

Said the Senator from Maryland—

NATION-WIDE REPORTS

Mr. President, it was my intention to read to the Senate certain telegrams from large communities of the United States. I will read just a few of them. I have been given permission to place the remainder in the RECORD, together with other information, articles, data, and statistics. These telegrams, I find, have an important bearing on the situation. Those who send them are the magistrates and officers of the law in their various communities, the mayors, Governors, and relief administrators who are dealing with this situation close at hand.

I read a telegram from the mayor of New York, Mr. LaGuardia:

NEW YORK, N. Y., February 9, 1939.

There were 183,243 cases on relief in New York City in October. City's cost, $5,810,174. State, $3,374,859. Total of $9,185,033. In November 183,687, an increase of 444 cases. * * * In December 186,005. * * * In January 189,742 cases.

The telegram goes on to state that today there has been a net increase of about 200 families a day. That telegram is from Mayor LaGuardia. The mayor say that the estimated cost in February is $9,596,514. He continues:

Note that these are cases and not individuals. We average about three and a half persons. My impression—

This is the impression of the mayor of New York City—

My impression is there must be a sustained improvement in business and in industry to absorb 2,500,000 workers before there will be any substantial and noticeable reduction of relief rolls.

If our unemployment is taken at the bottom figure of 10,000,000 we would have to cut it down to seven and a half million before there would be any noticeable improvement, according to Mayor LaGuardia.

Please also note that these figures are in addition to the Federal W. P. A. in New York City. Neither city nor State can assume any additional load.

I should like to have those Senators who are in the Senate now to note that neither the city of New York nor the State can assume any additional load. Perhaps we are far from New York in some of our States, but here is one from Chicago.

In Chicago on direct relief in October, 91,800; on W. P. A. 124,487. November, direct, 94,500; W. P. A., 118,432. December, direct, 99,200; W. P. A., 112,689. January, direct, 103,600; W. P. A., 106,068.

CHICAGO, ILL.

The telegram from Chicago is a long one. I will pass over some of it and come down to this:

It is urgent, to avoid difficulties, that W. P. A. employment in Chicago be increased substantially.

We propose to decrease it, but the mayor of Chicago, who has just been reelected, maintains that W. P. A. employment must be increased in the city of Chicago, the second largest city in America.

It is urgent, to avoid difficulties, that W. P. A. employment in Chicago be increased substantially. * * * Lack of employment in Chicago is greater now than it has been at this season in the last 3 years.

Chicago has an increasingly difficult situation. Unemployment has been increasing for the past 3 years. That is the statement of Edward J. Kelly, mayor of the city of Chicago.

I have the following telegram from our third largest city, Philadelphia, Pa.:

PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Extent of relief load in Philadelphia as of December 24, there were 76,427 relief cases. According to the calculations, 202,530 were on direct relief. There are at present 23,000 cases on W. P. A., of which 5 percent are nonrelief, which means that approximately 87,400 cases are receiving relief through this form.

More than 202,000 persons receiving direct relief and approximately 205,000 to be taken care of directly and indirectly through W. P. A. There is great need for additional W. P. A. funds in this city.

It is proposed to cut down the appropriation. The mayor of Philadelphia says there is need for additional appropriations.

It is a grave mistake to reduce W. P. A. appropriations to seven hundred twenty-five millions. Such a step means the dropping of many workers and consequent distress in their families and produces a serious crisis in this city.

Financial ability of city to meet needs—there is now an appropriation of $1,000,000 available to continue old and to supply for new W. P. A. projects.

S. DAVIS WILSON,
Mayor of Philadelphia.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.

I have also a telegram from the mayor of Providence, R. I.

DETROIT, MICH.

Here is one from the mayor of the great industrial center of Detroit.

Number on direct relief, Detroit, October, 20,000; November, 19,102; December, 20,006; January, 21,691.

The amounts contributed by the State and city, as well as the totals, are given. The estimated total cost of total welfare for the first 3 months of 1939 is $3,750,000.

City must borrow to meet all welfare costs for the next 5 months. Current appropriations completely exhausted.

That is from the mayor of Detroit. He says the current appropriations have been completely exhausted.

BALTIMORE, MD.

I am reading only a few of the telegrams from the large centers of the United States. I should like to read one from Baltimore. I shall not read the entire telegram. Four thousand six hundred and sixty-three families are on relief in Baltimore.

Employment situation in city has not improved thus far this winter.

The telegram is signed by Mayor Howard W. Jackson. I read only a part of that telegram.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

I have a long telegram from my home city of Minneapolis, Minn., which says in part:

Minneapolis only available resource is bond issue. City now forced to refund maturities because of abnormal relief bond issues in past 6 years. Requirements for refunding aid for direct relief and sponsor's share of W. P. A. will exhaust city. Debt leeway before December 31, 1939, or earlier if W. P. A. retrenchment increases direct relief intake. Overall case load with all categories of aid now the highest in history of Minneapolis. Mayor Leach is out of town.

O. A. PEARSON,
Superintendent, Division of Public Relief.

I emphasize the fact that in my own home city of 500,000 people, the over-all load of all categories of aid is now the highest in the history of Minneapolis.

ST. PAUL, MINN.

Take our capital city of St. Paul. I shall not read the long telegram. I call attention to the fact that there is a marked increase in applications for direct relief. The telegram is signed by W. H. Fallon, mayor of the city of St. Paul.

I have already called attention to the fact that in the twin cities of Minneapolis and St. Paul, within the metropolitan area of 25 miles, we find 1,000,000 people. That is a large population center.

MILWAUKEE, WIS.

Milwaukee, Wis., is one of the best-governed cities in America; and yet the telegram says:

Milwaukee faces a serious crisis in financing relief. Unemployment is a national problem. Why should Congress economize at the expense of overburdened local governments?

We may have to reckon with some of the people in the local communities after awhile when we return home.

Why should Congress economize at the expense of overburdened local governments?

CLEVELAND, OHIO

Here is a telegram from Cleveland, Ohio. I shall be unable to do justice to the smaller communities. I can only refer to a few of the larger ones. For the information of Senators who are present, I read in part from the telegram:

Relief loads and expenditures have increased during this period due to the stopping of assignments by W. P. A. in October, and also due to W. P. A. order issued in December directing removal from W. P. A. program of persons believed eligible for categorical public assistance.

Temporary relief bill passed by State of Ohio last week will enable greater Cleveland subdivisions to service direct relief not later than April 1. Permanent program under consideration by Governor and General Assembly of State. Enactment of such program necessary during March in order to avoid break-down.

I hope Senators will bear with me just a few moments longer. I wish to call attention to some of the larger cities. The situation is just as important for the people living in the smaller centers; but after all, we may have trouble later in the great centers where teeming millions live unless the situation is taken care of.

KANSAS CITY, MO.

In Kansas City the general relief load is rapidly increasing. Funds are dependent on State appropriations. I shall not read the telegram from Kansas City.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.

I have a long telegram from New Orleans, La., which says in part:

No funds available local relief. Employees waiting W. P. A. employment. Recent quota reductions make situation urgent. Entire program financed by State sales tax.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.

I shall not read the long telegram from San Francisco, Calif. I merely refer to this part of it:

Indications are that relief loads are increasing first 3 months this year. City and County of San Francisco now carrying all load possible financially.

They have exhausted their funds. They cannot carry any more unless we want to dip into the huge fortunes of the Eugene Graces, about which we have been so tender.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUNDEEN. I yield.

Mr. HOLMAN. My knowledge is limited to my personal experiences. Last summer I wanted to fence a certain 60-acre piece on my farm. I could obtain no help to build the fence because everybody in the neighborhood was on W. P. A.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I have heard of such instances. No doubt the Senator had that experience. I am not in favor of giving relief or W. P. A. work to anyone who is offered a job by private business. If he fails to take private employment he should be liable to punishment. Some of the European nations have punished such an offense. I can understand the situation. I have known of such instances in the State of Minnesota.

Mr. HOLMAN. I know of a manufacturer of workmen's shirts who lost some thirty employees from his pay roll. On account of decreased sales he had no use for the employees. A part of the cause for the decreased sales was the competition of a W. P. A. work room. Those employees are now employed on the W. P. A. tax-supported pay roll, in competition with the privately operated pay roll.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I hope the Senator is not referring to someone who is running a sweatshop.

Mr. HOLMAN. No, sir. The employees were paid union wages. We do not have sweatshops, tenements, or slums in Oregon.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I think the population of the Senator's State would greatly increase in the next year if that fact were made widely known.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am convinced that if the people would endure what my own people endured as Oregon pioneers there would not today be the present demand for public relief. My own people lost everything they had in a snowstorm in the gorge of the Columbia River in 1852, when they crossed the plains with ox teams. However, they went on. They did not go on a sit-down strike; nor did they waggle their thumbs for a lift. They made a clearing and built log cabins. I have been told that they were glad to get salt to eat on their potatoes. All they had to eat was potatoes. Salt was scarce. Where could they obtain anything? They had no tea, coffee, or sugar. They parched wheat long before anybody ever heard of Battle Creek, Mich.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I will say to the Senator that the statement he is making reminds me of the experiences of my own pioneer parents.

Mr. HOLMAN. Through perseverance and self-reliance their log cabins grew into frame houses, and their clearings grew into farms. They may have been destitute, but they were never poor.

OUR NEW FRONTIER

Mr. LUNDEEN. I thank the Senator; but I ask the able Senator, where are his people going to build their log cabins today? Where are the millions of unemployed going to pioneer now? Where are the farms they can open up in the wilderness? Where are they going to pioneer? Where are they going to go? There is not room for them in the beautiful, grand State of Oregon. I have seen the State. I admire it. I helped to build the Bonneville Dam, and the Grand Coulee Dam in Washington. I am a great admirer of the Senator's community; but wherever we go now there is a lack of employment. There is no place to pioneer. There is no geographical frontier. The only frontier we now have is the legislative frontier, the frontier of social security, the frontier of a new deal that is a complete new deal and not a partial new deal. The new deal that I believe in is a more thoroughgoing, far-reaching new deal and square deal than has yet been proposed; but I want to go along as far as I can on these things.

THE OLD AMERICAN FRONTIER HAS DISAPPEARED

The old American frontier has disappeared. No longer can the descendants of the thousands of men who came out of the Civil War, in the Confederate Army or in the Army of the North, go out and take homesteads. I was born on a homestead in South Dakota. That homestead cannot be taken up today. There is a farmer there who is farming that homestead. All the other homesteads are gone. There is no place for these people. We cannot abandon them, however. We cannot stand on the floor of the United States Senate and talk about drowning people. We cannot stand on the floor of the United States Senate and say that we abandon American citizens, when we have thrown billions and billions of dollars into the coffers of foreign countries, when we have supplied the Armenians and the Belgians and others.

I remember that at one time we voted about a billion dollars for the Belgians. I should like to see a billion dollars voted today for the people of America, the people under our own flag, our own people in the United States. There has been too much weeping on the shoulders of foreigners. I want to see something done right here in the United States. Our frontier is gone. The eloquent statement of the Senator from Oregon is well taken. It portrays a day that has passed, however. It is no longer here. It is gone. We have to face a different condition. We are in a different day and a different age.

Mr. President, I have just referred to San Francisco. Relief loads are increasing there.

LOUISVILLE, KY.

Seasonal slumps, with about an ordinary situation, are reported in Louisville, Ky.

BOSTON, MASS.

These are all large cities to which I am referring, just a few of them:

City now facing heaviest drain for all forms of relief since 1932.

That is Boston.

Employment in private industry showing no gain yet.

Where are these people going to go to work? They cannot get into private industry, in Boston at least. It is all right for these folks who have fat bank accounts and numerous bonds and huge salaries to be smug about this matter, but the men and women who have to provide for their families find themselves in a different situation.

This telegram from Boston says:

Relief situation very critical.

This is not a newspaper report. This is not my statement. This is a telegram from Hon. Maurice J. Tobin, mayor of Boston, dated February 11, 1939.

Additional burdens for relief most detrimental to city's continued ability to meet obligations.

I have already referred to a newspaper article from Seattle. I will not read the telegram from that city.

BUFFALO, N. Y.

Employment conditions very unfavorable. Case load now at highest point since 1935.

SPOKANE, WASH.

A telegram of the same tenor comes from Spokane, Wash.

HOUSTON, TEX.

A telegram from Houston, Tex., says:

City and county financially unable to meet needs of employable group. Relief for unemployable provided for inadequately.

NEWARK, N. J.

I have here a telegram from Newark, N. J., of the same tenor.

OMAHA, NEBR.

Here is one from Omaha, Nebr.:

Great need for additional employment this winter.

This is in Omaha, Nebr., I will say to the able senior Senator from that State, who has indicated his desire to vote for an appropriation of $100,000,000 instead of this $50,000,000 amendment.

COLUMBUS, OHIO

In Columbus, Ohio, this condition exists:

Private employment situation not improving and W. P. A. lay-offs have increased relief loads.

DIVISION PUBLIC CHARITIES, CITY OF COLUMBUS.

These telegrams are in reply to telegrams which I sent to the mayors of our various cities. I am not giving my opinions in the matter to which I am now referring. I am giving the telegrams of the mayors of our great cities, in the States from which my colleagues come to the Senate. These are your States, your cities, your mayors whose telegrams I am reading.

They picture a very serious situation. In the midst of that situation we find a desire on the part of some Senators, at least, to reduce the appropriation which the President has asked for, and which Colonel Harrington, the W. P. A. Administrator, with his State officials collaborating, found necessary and is asking for.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. LUNDEEN. One moment. I want to call attention to the fact that Senators have already voted against the appropriation of $150,000,000 for relief. They now admit they are wrong so far as $100,000,000 of that amount is concerned. It is barely possible that they are wrong as far as the remaining $50,000,000 is concerned.

I now yield to the able Senator from Oregon.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. President, apropos of the Senator's remarks relative to local communities not being able to carry their relief load, I wish to state that it is possible to solve the relief problem. Oregon has done so. Her legislature has just adjourned with a balanced budget and the relief question taken care of. But we cannot swing the doors wide open and invite every ne'er-do-well to come in and subsist on the efforts of other people.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me to say a word at that point, he may reply if he so desires. I should be very pleased to have him state the plan of Oregon to solve the situation. I shall be glad to have that in my remarks, and I hope the Senator will see that it appears in the RECORD tomorrow morning, because if the people of the State of Oregon have solved the problem to the satisfaction of the people of the State of Oregon, and can furnish a plan which will solve the problem for America, they will deserve a crown of glory.

Mr. HOLMAN. I shall be glad to submit the budget of the State of Oregon for the next biennium, but I cannot have it here by Monday. The legislature did adjourn, they did take care of the relief situation, and they did balance the budget.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota yield?

Mr. LUNDEEN. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. We have had the budget balanced in Indiana since 1933, and we still have a relief problem. That does not answer the question.

Mr. HOLMAN. We have a relief problem in Oregon, but we are meeting it.

Mr. LUNDEEN. As I understand, we are to have the Oregon plan in the RECORD, perhaps Monday, or at least some time next week, and I shall read it with great pleasure and great interest. I have no doubt the Senator's statement is correct regarding the balancing of the Budget, but I should like to read the plan to see whether it fits into the national picture. Perhaps it will.

BALANCING THE BUDGET

A national plan was submitted to the voters in 1936 from the State of Kansas, the balanced budget of Landon; but it did not seem to meet with the approval of the American people. I understand that the school teachers and many other people in the great State of Kansas had their salaries cut, and the situation was very desperate for many people there, but the sacred budget was balanced. Of course, we all look forward to the day when we can balance the Budget. But how can we balance the Budget when men draw the huge salaries to which I have called attention?

I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD along with my remarks the record of the salaries, which was published in the papers recently, so that the statement will be available to the American public at large.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Times Herald of April 8, 1939]

MAYER'S $1,296,503 SALARY HIGHEST IN 1937; MARCH TOPS SCREEN STARS—GARBO IS TOP ACTRESS WITH $472,499

Seven Hollywood notables were among the Nation's 10 highest salaried personalities during 1937, the House Ways and Means Committee's "$15,000 plus" salary list disclosed last night.

The list, compiled by the Treasury Department from 1937 income-tax returns, showed that Louis B. Mayer, president of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, was the highest paid American during the year, received $1,296,503, one of the highest stipends in the annals of American history.

MOVIE STARS TOP LIST

Of the top 20 salaries, 15 went to actors, actresses, or motion-picture executives.

The top-salaried corporations were M-G-M, E. I. du Pont de Nemours Co., and Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. The list showed 240 persons drew $15,000 or more from M-G-M, 196 from du Pont, and 167 from Metropolitan Life.

The top 10 salaries:

L. B. Mayer, executive, Loew's, Inc., and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, $1,296,503.

J. Robert Rubin, executive, Loew's, Inc., and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, $754,254.

N. M. Schenck, president, Loew's, Inc., $541,602.
William R. Hearst, newspaper owner, $500,000.
Fredric March, actor, $484,687.
Greta Garbo, actress, $472,499.
Maj. Edward Bowes, entertainment executive, $427,817.
Thomas J. Watson, president, International Business Machines Corporation, $419,398.
Eugene G. Grace, president, Bethlehem Steel Corporation, $394,586.
David Bernstein, executive, Loew's, Inc., $382,816.

LOMBARD'S $314,000 TOPS HUSBAND

In the second 10 highest salaries were: George W. Hill, president, American Tobacco Co., $380,976; Marlene Dietrich, actress, $370,000; A. M. Loew, executive, Loew's, Inc., $356,074; Claudette Colbert, actress, $355,555; Joan Crawford, actress, $351,538; Spyros P. Skouras, theater executive, $346,054; F. B. Davis, Jr., president, United States Rubber Products, Inc., $322,999; Carole Lombard, actress, $314,000; William Powell, actor, $289,443; Clark Gable, actor, $289,000.

SLOAN LED IN 1936

The 1937 list showed substantial changes in the high-ranking list and revealed that salaries in general increased substantially over 1936.

Mayer did not show in the 1936 top brackets. The 1936 list was led by Chairman Alfred P. Sloan, of General Motors Corporation, with $561,311. In 1937 he was far down the list with $183,708. In second place in 1936 was Hearst, with $500,000.

William S. Knudsen, General Motors president, was third in 1936 with $459,878. In 1937 he dropped out of the top 10 with $247,210.

Others who vanished from the top 10 included: Actor Gary Cooper, who dropped to $246,053 from $370,214; Actor Ronald Colman, who dropped to $195,528 from $362,500; Actress Mae West, who drew $323,000 in 1936 and was unlisted the next year; Charles F. Kettering, General Motors vice president, who went down to $155,510 from $304,400; Vincent Fitzgerald, salesman for G. F. Ohrstrom & Co., Inc., who went from $320,296 to $99,771; and Rudy Vallee, who did not show on the 1937 list, although he drew $298,744 in 1936.

THE MIRROR OF WEALTH AND POVERTY

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, I went into the problem quite at length 2 or 3 years ago in a speech under the headline "A Mirror of Wealth and Poverty." I had intended to go into that at some length at this time, but I shall not do so. The speech was delivered September 10, 1935, and was published in volume 79 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Seventy-fourth Congress, first session, under the heading "A Mirror of Wealth and Poverty—'Where will you get the money?' Sources of wealth."

Relief for idle dollars surpasses relief for idle men. Who receives salaries, bonuses, interest, and dividends? Who pays? Wealth enough to provide an American standard of living for all.

I enumerated the huge and vast wealth of these great United States of ours. I pictured the poverty and destitution, which could be entirely eliminated if we wished to stand on the Senate floor and vote such legislation as would be necessary. We could eliminate it all. Of course, we cannot legislate goodness into people, we cannot make an unworthy person worthy, but I do not think anyone will dispute the statement that the great American public are worthy of employment.

W. P. A. BETTER THAN NO PLAN AT ALL

While the W. P. A. was an emergency plan, was a plan which had to be gotten together in a hurry, and was not a perfect plan, it is better than no plan at all. With all its faults it was better than no plan at all, and without that plan we would have had bloody riots on the streets of American cities; and there were some. Stores were broken into by mobs of people who refused to see their families hungry, and some of the bills for the damage were turned over to city councils of great cities for payment. But as soon as those people received jobs, no more stores were broken into. Those Americans were not criminals; they had no desire to commit a crime or to destroy property. All they were asking for under the American flag was a job. Unemployment did not appeal to them. They desired to have work, they desired bread for their families, they desired an opportunity to contribute to the upbuilding of American economy.

The words I have spoken here today, to the best of my ability, are very gentle words compared with the words that will be heard on the Senate floor in the not-distant future, from citizens who are coming here, who today are out in the States campaigning for places in the Senate. They will come here, they will speak in no uncertain words for these men and women who, by the millions, are not cared for under our present laws.

I have every confidence in the ultimate solution of these problems. I am not a pessimist. I have never been a pessimist.

THE AMERICAN PEOPLE WILL SOLVE THIS PROBLEM

I probably would not be here if I had not been a hopeless optimist. I am an optimist. I believe the American people will solve the problem, and if we are unable to solve it, there will be a Senate here and there will be Representatives at the other end of the Capitol and a man in the White House who will solve it. Over in some cornfield may be a future Abraham Lincoln who has not yet visited Washington. But I do not want to see the situation get so desperate that some man on horseback will come along, when the poverty and destitution become too severe, some strong man who may send his squad of soldiers to the Capitol to dismiss the debating society. I do not want that to happen in America. So that it is the patriotic duty of the people of wealth of this country, who want to preserve the America of our fathers and of its founders, who want to preserve it as we received it—as a heritage—it is the patriotic duty of those people who have the funds and resources of America at their command to come here with their plans if they have any. And if Oregon has a plan, we will be delighted to listen to it. I shall be very much interested in the plan.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUNDEEN. I yield.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I have been listening with a great deal of interest to all the Senator has said today, particularly for the reason, without attempting flattery, that I do not believe there is a greater patriot in the United States of America today than the Senator from Minnesota. I have been greatly impressed by what he has said.

In reference to the matter which he has so ably and effectively discussed, I wish to say that whichever way I might vote on the matter I trust will be the proper way, because I merely want to follow my conscience and do what is best for the American people.

I wish to say unhesitatingly, and without an attempt at flattery, as I stated a moment ago, that I do not believe the American people have a greater friend or a finer champion than the Senator who addresses this deliberative body at this time. I refer to the speaker who now has the floor, the able Senator from the State of Minnesota.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I thank the Senator. Of course, no man is worthy of these splendid and fine words from the able Senator from North Carolina. We who are in public life are praised beyond our deserts and damned beyond our deserts, and the truth lies somewhere in between. But I thank the Senator very much, and I assure him that, whatever may be my faults, I am sincere in my statements.

Mr. REYNOLDS. The Senator knows we are all sincere, and that we are endeavoring to arrive at a solution of the unfortunate problem with which we are faced, the problem which the Senator mentioned a moment ago, when he took occasion to state in the course of his remarks that about 70 or 80 percent of the unemployed in all the world are to be found within the confines of the United States of America, which is a situation truly unfortunate.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I stated that the figure was about 70 percent.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I recall having recently seen a statement from Geneva in regard to that.

Mr. LUNDEEN. The International Labor Office at Geneva, Switzerland, states that the figure is approximately 70 percent, and I placed in the RECORD some time ago figures showing the unemployment in all the nations of the world, including our own, figures of the International Labor Office at Geneva, Switzerland, indicating a very serious situation in the United States.

AMERICA HAS NEVER FAILED

If I may conclude, I feel positive that Americans will solve this problem, that we will find the solution, because in every crisis we have ever met under our flag we have found the solution. America has never failed, and we are not going to fail in this hour. We are going to find a solution, and we are going to pursue the course laid down by the fathers and founders in foreign affairs, I hope, and in domestic affairs we will turn to that plan which will be found most feasible and most practicable after study by all our men in public office, and those who are to be in public office.

I believe that if Senators will give some heed and attention to the statistics and facts I am inserting in the RECORD they will find valuable information. They need not give heed to my statement, but if they will turn to the data from the various cities, if they will study the information from the 48 States and from the various cities, the matters I have had permission to put into the RECORD, I believe that they, together with the able Senator from North Carolina, will be persuaded to join with us. I hope the Senator from North Carolina will read the marvelous statement of the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], which ought to convince any man that he should vote for this appropriation.

Mr. REYNOLDS. In my opinion, America will never fail to look after its unfortunate and take care of the interests of America so long as there are representatives in the Senate like the Senator from Minnesota, and the noblest of all, the Senator from Nebraska. My recollection is that the Senator who now has the floor, and the able and beloved Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], were two men who voted against the entry of the United States into the World War in 1917. Am I correct about that?

Mr. LUNDEEN. The Senator is correct.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I wish to say to the Senator again, without attempting flattery, that I know of no two men in this deliberative body for whom I have a more profound respect or a greater affection than I have for the Senator who addresses this body at this time, and for the noblest, not Roman, but the noblest American of them all, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS].

Mr. LUNDEEN. We are all proud of the Senator from Nebraska, we all love him; and if we listen to his words in this hour, we will vote for the $50,000,000 appropriation.

Mr. President, I plead with Senators in my concluding remarks to read the speech of the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] and other speeches which have been delivered here; and if they will give some heed to the facts and statistics and data I have introduced, without reference to my own remarks, I shall be very happy. Then we will have only partially solved this problem, and we shall move on to another day.

There never is a day when the sun sets but that there is another day when the sun rises. There never was a night so dark, so black, but that there was a beautiful, glorious sunrise in the morning. We will have that sunrise. We will find the solution to our problem. When we put our minds to this problem and put our minds to the facts that are presented on the floor of the Senate, we shall be able to solve the problem. Then we shall be able to turn to consideration of real social security and to the resumption of activities in our legislative bodies, normal activities, and not emergency activities. For, please remember, that these are emergency activities, and we should have done with them. We should solve the emergencies and go on with our normal business.

I thank the Senate.

The matters presented by Mr. LUNDEEN for the RECORD are as follows:

House Joint Resolution 246

Joint resolution making a further additional appropriation for work relief and relief for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939

Resolved, etc., That the amount of $725,000,000 appropriated to the Works Progress Administration in section 1 of Public Resolution No. 1, Seventy-sixth Congress, entitled "Joint resolution making an additional appropriation for work relief and relief for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939," approved February 4, 1939, is hereby increased to $825,000,000, and the difference of $100,000,000 between such two amounts is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 246) entitled "Joint resolution making a further additional appropriation for work relief and relief for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939," report the measure with a favorable recommendation for its early consideration and passage by the Senate.

This resolution grows out of the President's message of March 4, 1939 (H. Doc. 205), wherein he urges the appropriation of the sum of $150,000,000 in addition to the sum of $725,000,000 appropriated by House Joint Resolution 83, of February 4, 1939, in order to provide the sum of $875,000,000 in the aggregate in addition to the sum appropriated in the preceding Congress.

The original recommendation contemplated providing work relief for the 5-month period, February 1 to June 30, 1939, by months, as follows:

February	3,000,000
March	3,000,000
April	2,875,000
May	2,775,000
June	2,700,000

The committee recommends an additional appropriation of $100,000,000, instead of $150,000,000, and believes that such lesser additional amount will be adequate to provide work relief for the numbers embraced by the original recommendation except as they have been reduced since such original recommendation was made in consequence of law.

Public Resolution No. 1, approved February 4, 1939, contains, among others, the following two provisions:

(a) That the Administrator shall immediately cause to be made an investigation of the rolls of relief employees on work projects and eliminate from such rolls those not in actual need.

(b) No alien shall be given employment or continued in employment on any project prosecuted under the appropriations contained in the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938 or this joint resolution.

Under the first of those two provisions, the investigation ordered to be made was launched upon on February 10, 1939, and was scheduled for completion on March 25, 1939. As it has progressed persons on the rolls found not to be in actual need have been removed.

Under subdivision (a) there have been already removed from the rolls 36,840 names and it is estimated that the aggregate number to be removed under this provision will not be less than 60,000.

Under subdivision (b) there have been removed from the rolls aliens to the number of 45,259.

The total already removed under these two provisions is, therefore, 82,099.

The original recommendation of the President for an appropriation of $875,000,000 did not contemplate these removals.

The number already removed from the rolls represents a saving at an average per capita cost of each W. P. A. worker of $61 per month, of $5,007,939 per month, or a total from April 1 to June 30, 1939, of $15,023,817.

When the full number of 60,000 are dropped from the rolls as not in actual need, the monthly saving will be $6,420,799.

The following is a tabulation of the number proposed to be on the relief rolls and the cost in accordance with figures given the House Committee on Appropriations and computed at the monthly cost of $61 per person.

	Average employment	Cost
April	2,875,000	$175,375,000
May	2,775,000	169,275,000
June	2,700,000	164,700,000
Apr. 1 to June 30, 1939, total cost		509,350,000
Mar. 20 to Apr. 1	3,000,000	61,000,000
Total cost		570,350,000

The last above figure represents the total amount necessary to carry all expenses of the W. P. A. administration from March 20 to April 1. Colonel Harrington testified before the Senate committee that on March 20 the unexpended balance of the W. P. A. was approximately $588,000,000. He further testified that on March 20 the unobligated balance of the W. P. A. was $476,344,724. This leaves obligated an amount of $111,655,276. It is estimated by Colonel Harrington that at least one-half of this obligated amount will be applied to the payment of wages, materials, and overhead to be earned or consumed subsequent to March 20. Adding one-half of this obligated amount to the unobligated balance leaves available for the payment of W. P. A. costs, from March 20 to June 30, 1939, $532,172,412. This would leave the amount of the additional appropriation necessary to carry the total W. P. A. cost up to June 30, 1939, as $38,177,588.

The figures of the Treasury Department show the unexpended balance of W. P. A. funds on March 20, 1939, to be $572,795,186.65. But if the figures for obligated and unobligated funds as given by Colonel Harrington are not changed the amount required to be appropriated to carry forth the program originally outlined under the $875,000,000 appropriation would not be altered by this change in the estimate of unexpended balance.

Colonel Harrington has stated that his estimates for the necessity of the $875,000,000 included an allowance of approximately $45,000,000 for the purpose of paying for services rendered, material consumed, and overhead after the end of the fiscal year on June 30, 1939; he insists that such a provision is necessary to insure orderly continuity of the W. P. A. program. While the committee does not concede this a necessity, in view of the fact that relief appropriations for the next fiscal year will be made before June 30, 1939, nevertheless acquiesced in this desire. The committee, therefore, is not only providing the amount necessary to pay for all work and materials to be rendered and consumed prior to June 30, 1939, according to the program submitted with the original request for $875,000,000 but is adding thereto the sum of approximately $55,000,000, which it is intended and expected will not be spent until the beginning of the next fiscal year and then only for materials consumed and labor rendered during such fiscal year.

The report of the Appropriations Committee of the House contains information and computations which are interesting and which support the position taken in the report.

THE PEPPER AMENDMENT

Amend the joint resolution, in line 8, by striking out "$825,000,000" and inserting "$875,000,000"; and in line 9, by striking out "$100,000,000" and inserting "$150,000,000."

[From the Washington Daily News of April 6, 1939]

"I'M NOT RETREATING," SAYS PEPPER ON W. P. A.

Senator CLAUDE PEPPER (Democrat, Florida) today threatened to delay Senate action on the House-approved $100,000,000 emergency relief bill.

Accusing Congress of adopting a "policy of retreat" from administrative objectives by cutting $50,000,000 from President Roosevelt's relief request, Senator PEPPER said he would attempt to restore the original amount. Administration leaders and economy advocates have agreed not to change the total appropriations on the Senate Floor.

Chairman ALVA B. ADAMS (Democrat, Colorado), of the appropriations subcommittee in charge of relief, hoped to obtain unanimous consent to place the bill before the Senate today.

Senator PEPPER, an ardent New Dealer, said he would not object to immediate consideration provided he was assured an opportunity to offer an amendment raising the amount to $150,000,000 and to argue for it "at reasonable length."

I'M NOT RETREATING

"I am certain the President wants a fight made for the full amount," he said. "And I want it shown before the country that I am not retreating."

His effort to boost the amount will be made despite the agreement to avoid controversy over work relief by approving the House measure as quickly as possible.

Majority Leader BARKLEY (Democrat, Kentucky) and most of his followers agreed to abandon attempts to increase the appropriation, while leaders of the economy group promised to make no effort to cut it below $100,000,000.

SENATOR GLASS APPROVES

Approval of the bill by the full Appropriations Committee headed by Senator CARTER GLASS (Democrat, Virginia) came so quickly yesterday that the Workers' Alliance, an organization of Works Progress Administration employees, was hours late in a formal appeal to committee members to shun any "deals" and vote for the full $150,000,000.

"In view of the obvious inadequacy of even $150,000,000; in view of the discharges (of relief workers) now taking place in every part of the country, how could a responsible committee of Congress propose 'deals' by which to settle the fate of the unemployed?" the alliance said in its statement.

SEATTLE TO EVACUATE JOBLESS FROM CAMP

SEATTLE, WASH., April 7.—A "starvation" camp of jobless demonstrators on the lawn of the county-city building in downtown Seattle was ordered evacuated today by Mayor Arthur Langlie.

Demonstrators had been ordered to move out by nightfall last night, but some 25 or 30, for whom no quarters apparently were available, went to sleep for their third night on the lawn under an old circus tent. Langlie said today that if the men did not move voluntarily he would meet the problem "as it arises."

Some 400 slept in the camp the first two nights. The mayor said then he objected to the camp as "unsightly" and offered the demonstrators free light and water if they pitched their tent somewhere else.

A list of places to which the jobless might move was sent to the county commissioners. New quarters were chosen tentatively and were expected to be ready for occupancy later today.

In addition to the men who occupied the downtown "camp," more than 500 others continued a "sleep-in" strike at a welfare shelter.

The demonstration at the county-city building was organized by leaders of the Workers' Alliance in protest to curtailment of Federal relief funds and recent State and county action in dropping W. P. A. workers. Their food has consisted principally of bread, coffee, beans, and whatever else could be obtained.

County welfare officials said the number of persons dropped in Kings County because of curtailed State funds now totaled 13,214.

CUT RELIEF FUND MEANS "HUNGER," SAYS BORAH

Senator BORAH (Republican, Idaho) today declared he was "absolutely satisfied" the proposed reduction of the $150,000,000 relief appropriation requested by President Roosevelt "means suffering, means hungry, desperate people.

A poll of the Senate showed a majority of 60 Senators favored granting only $100,000,000, the amount voted by the House. Administration Senate leaders agreed to the smaller fund, but a small band of New Dealers continued to fight for the full $150,000,000.

Senator BORAH joined them and issued a statement announcing:

PROTECT HEALTH AND LIVES

"I am going to vote for the $150,000,000. I voted for it before because I believed it was needed to protect the health and even the lives of millions of our helpless people. And that being the situation, I do not feel that it is a thing to be compromised."

The $150,000,000 bloc, led by Senator PEPPER (Democrat, Florida), was seeking to delay a vote until next week when the President returns from Warm Springs, Ga. They lined up enough speakers to prevent action today and were attempting to stave off a vote tomorrow.

NOT VOTING AGAINST F. D.

"I am told that an agreement has been reached which satisfies the administration," Senator BORAH said. "I am not voting for or against the administration. I am voting for millions of American men, women, and children."

Economy bloc Senators said that despite the delaying tactics, Senator PEPPER could not corral more than 35 votes for $150,000,000. A poll by administration leaders showed 40 Democrats and 20 Republicans against that amount.

BARKLEY OPPOSES

Majority Leader BARKLEY (Democrat, Kentucky), carrying out an agreement with economy bloc Senators who threatened to slash the measure below $100,000,000, was among Senator PEPPER's opponents. Other New Dealers, like Senator MCKELLAR (Democrat, Tennessee), also opposed the amendment.

Senator BARKLEY last night said the agreement "still stands" as a practical solution to the problem. The House, he said, probably would refuse to accept the Pepper amendment if it should pass.

Coincidentally, House Republicans sought to turn responsibility for relief administration over to State and local governments.

Representative DITTER (Republican, Pennsylvania), a member of the House Appropriations Committee investigating the W. P. A., introduced two bills designed to abolish the present W. P. A. and create a relief board to allot funds to the States. Representative Ditter's measures would provide $1,200,000,000 for relief in 1940.

TAX SLASH IS FORECAST AS DEFICIT DROPS—ECONOMY POLICIES, RISE IN INCOME OF GOVERNMENT, PARE FIVE HUNDRED MILLIONS

(By Sandor S. Klein)

An unexpected increase in the Government's income and economy policies of the Budget Bureau forecast today a $500,000,000 reduction in the budgeted deficit for this fiscal year.

That reduction would slash the deficit for the year ending June 30 to approximately $3,600,000,000. President Roosevelt estimated in January that it would approximate $4,072,259,000.

MAY EASE TAX PRESSURE

This favorable forecast was made by fiscal experts as there appeared to be a possibility that Congress may yet get around to easing the tax pressure on industry by eliminating so-called business-deterrent taxes.

Taxes on Federal and State employees on the way up, the bill providing for reciprocal taxation of their incomes having passed the Senate in final form yesterday. It now awaits only House approval.

The remainder of the 1939 tax program is in various degrees of confusion. The President has said that elimination of any "deterrent" taxes must be accompanied by a tax increase elsewhere to compensate for lost revenue. Other than that his position has been noncommittal.

Under those circumstances, the tax situation is as follows:

Assured legislation.

1. Reciprocal taxation of Federal and State salaries to raise about $16,000,000 a year.

MANUFACTURER'S SALES TAX

2. Extension for another year of excise or manufacturer's sales levies, which raise around $430,000,000 annually.

3. Extension of the corporation income-tax levy, which raises about $1,100,000,000.

4. Amendment of social security pay-roll tax provisions, probably to prevent scheduled rate increases next year and for some time thereafter.

Only the latter would ease tax pressure on industry, and it is rather negative, in that taxes would not be reduced but merely kept from rising according to one of several formulas suggested by the Treasury.

Major factor in fiscal experts' prediction of a $500,000,000 reduction in the deficit was an unexpected windfall in income taxes resulting from improved business conditions in the last 3 months of 1938. That and increased miscellaneous revenue collections may push estimated receipts $230,000,000 over the Budget estimate.

Government expenditures on April 4 totaled $6,919,061,624, leaving $2,592,000,000 of the budgeted $9,592,329,000 for spending during April, May, and June.

Fiscal experts doubted that expenses would exceed more than $2,350,000,000 between now and June 30. That figure was arrived at by a previously accurate formula based on corresponding months of previous years.

They emphasized that the Budget Bureau's "hard boiled" policy on releasing any of the regularly "impounded" 10 percent of regular appropriations to departments and agencies would keep expenses at a minimum.

A comparison of January Budget estimates and current forecasts by experts follows:

	January Budget	Current forecast
Expenditures	$9,592,329,000	$9,350,000,000
Receipts	5,520,070,000	5,750,000,000
Deficit	4,072,259,000	3,600,000,000

BANK RESERVES SET ALL-TIME HIGH MARK

Excess reserves in banks affiliated with the Federal Reserve System total $3,710,000,000—an all-time high—for the week ended April 5, the agency's weekly financial statement disclosed last night. Bank reserves increased $190,000,000 over the previous week, officials said, principally because of an inflow of foreign gold totaling $132,000,000.

Government statisticians estimated that the huge reserves make possible a credit expansion of $30,000,000,000 on the theory that safe expansion can be undertaken on a basis of a 10-to-1 reserve ratio.

JOB SECURITY IS MAIN ISSUE IN CHICAGO PRESS STRIKE

CHICAGO.—A complaint of long standing against the management of Hearst newspapers—insecure tenure of employees—is registered here in the strike of the Chicago Newspaper Guild, a Congress of Industrial Organizations union of newspaper workers, chiefly editorial, against the Herald and Examiner and the Evening American, the two Hearst dailies here.

The strike, now in its fourth month, is complicated by two factors. First, the Herald and Examiner is generally said to be losing money and its large-scale dismissal of employees over a period of 18 months has been attributed to a need for cutting costs to keep the paper running. However, there is claimed to be room for disagreement on the methods used in dismissing the employees, and it is on this issue that the guild bases its claim of justice in its strike.

The guild contends that its 1-year contract, signed with the two Hearst newspapers a year ago this January, was repeatedly violated by the management. The guild makes no complaints about wages or hours, but raises an issue about the management's dismissal of 57 employees 2 weeks before last Christmas. The guild claims that the management refused to discuss with the guild a plan for keeping these employees on a few weeks longer, and that it was therefore obliged to strike to get observance of its contract.

MANAGEMENT'S SIDE

The management, on the other hand, points out that the case is now before the National Labor Relations Board, and holds that there is a question as to whether the guild represents the majority of white-collar employees, and insists that it therefore will wait until a decision is rendered.

The second complicating factor is the divided stand of organized labor. Both newspapers are being edited, printed, and distributed by union labor during the strike. Mechanical departments have long been organized in American Federation of Labor craft unions, delivery departments are so organized, and last summer, before the strike, two A. F. of L. union locals were formed in the editorial and commercial departments.

Leaders in some of these unions say they fear that guild strike strategy, instead of protecting their jobs, will make them less secure. The guild has gone after the newspapers' advertisers and urged them to take their advertisements out of the papers, hoping to bring the management to terms by hurting its business. It claims there have been big losses in advertising revenue as a result. But may this not reduce jobs, in the meantime, some workers ask? Might it not even drive the paper out of business?

The guild says, "No; look at the Seattle Post-Intelligencer, where the guild won its strike. It is making money now as it never did before."

STAND OF A. F. OF L.

Some A. F. of L. members remain neutral, like members of the Chicago Typographical Union No. 16; some are friendly to the guild. An A. F. of L. committee to aid the guild strike has been formed.

The guild claims 500 editorial and business-department workers out on strike. The two A. F. of L. unions claim a combined membership of 623. In the latter group are people who have taken over the jobs of the strikers.

With newspaper publication continuing under A. F. of L sanction, in a city where A. F. of L. unions are far more powerful than those of the C. I. O., it would appear that the guild strike would be small cause of worry to the management. This is not the case, however. The explanation is in the guild's attack on the newspapers' advertising revenues.

Management of the Hearst papers concedes there has been loss in lineage and in total revenue, holds the guild strike responsible in some degree, but argues that changes in its own policy are a bigger factor. When the Herald and Examiner was made a tabloid last fall, smaller advertisements were expected, said Merrill C. Meigs, publisher of the American. Since cost of publishing the smaller paper was less, this was not necessarily a disadvantage, he explained. Moreover, said Mr. Meigs, special low advertising rates offered last fall, for a combination of space in both newspapers, no longer holds. As for the guild, Mr. Meigs dismisses it as an organization "dominated by Communists." This charge, of course, is emphatically denied by guild members, who say their only objective is to get "job security."

H. O. L. C. FORECLOSES ON 1,725 VIRGINIA LOANS

RICHMOND, VA., April 7.—The Home Owners' Loan Corporation has acquired 1,725 pieces of property in Virginia as of March 1, G. Stanley Harding, State H. O. L. C. manager, said today. Of the 1,725 total, 647 properties have been sold.

On the average, the H. O. L. C. lost between $550 and $600 on each of the sales, but in these figures are included foreclosure costs, usually about $104.48 a case in Virginia, and taxes, sometimes delinquent from 1 to 3 years, which are paid by the Corporation when it takes the properties over, it was pointed out.

PLAIN ECONOMICS

(By John T. Flynn)

NEW YORK, April 8.—Amid so many alarms of war and so many fears of business it is pleasant to learn that we have no national debt—that this $40,000,000,000 which the Government owes is not a national debt, but just a more or less meaningless fiction.

Congressman T. Allan Goldsborough, of Maryland, leaving the House to become a Federal judge, assured his congressional colleagues of this in a farewell speech.

He explained it all very simply and sweetly. If America owed this $40,000,000,000 to foreign countries, then it would be a national debt. But we owe it to ourselves. The Nation owes the debt. But it owes it to the people of America. Then Mr. Goldsborough explained that nothing could be so silly as to talk about handing this debt on to posterity as a burden. Our grandchildren will owe it, to be sure, but they will owe it to themselves. They will both owe and own the debt.

But, unfortunately, Mr. Goldsborough has gotten the grandchildrin who will owe the debt and those who will own it mixed.

For instance, I observe that 18 large commercial banks in New York City own about four and a half billion dollars of this Government debt. Who owns that? The banks. These are investments of the banks, and these notes and bonds belong not to the people but to the banks.

The banks belong to their stockholders. The stockholders of these banks are relatively a mere handful of people. Certainly the people who own these four and a half billions and the people who owe them are quite different. They are owned by perhaps a hundred thousand stockholders. They are owed by 130,000,000 Americans.

Some of the American bonds are, of course, owned by mutual life insurance companies. And the ownership of these bonds is in the hands of a large number of people. But to say that those who own the bonds as a whole and those who owe them are the same people is to close one's eyes with singular stubbornness to the hard facts.

I know a club which has a bonded indebtednes. The club has about 400 members. The bonded indebtedness, which is not large, is held by about 20 of the members. It is true to say that the bonds are due by club members and are also due to club members. But they are due by 400 club members and are due to 20. It is the same with the Government's bonds.

These national bonds do constitute a national debt. They are due by the Government, which is a corporate entity, representing the people. The bonds are a debt of that organism. They are due to perhaps two or three million people, perhaps five million altogether. But not in equal proportions.

I know or knew one man who held nearly $20,000,000 himself. But the interest charges have to be met out of the taxes of 130,000,000 people. And, incidentally, those exempt from taxation are the very ones who own the bonds. All the rest of us are taxed to pay the interest on the bonds held by a small number whose bond interest is exempt from taxes.

F. D. WARNS CONGRESS ON RELIEF SLASH—BLAME WILL REST ON SOLONS, HE SAYS; SENATE FOES OF CUT FIGHT TO AVERT VOTE TODAY

(By Robert A. McGill)

Responsibility for any reduction in relief appropriations "must rest on the Congress," President Roosevelt warned again today in a message from his Warm Springs, Ga., retreat, while the Senate renewed debate on the $100,000,000 W. P. A. fund.

The message, delivered by the White House to David Lasser, president of the Workers' Alliance, said:

"Please tell Mr. David Lasser that the President has received his telegram in Georgia and feels as strongly as ever that the full amount should be appropriated and that responsibility for any cut whatsoever must rest on the Congress."

MEANT $150,000,000

By full amount, the President meant $150,000,000 which he has repeatedly and urgently asked Congress to appropriate for the W. P. A. to carry relief rolls until July 1. The amount was trimmed $50,000,000 in a bill passed by the House, approved by the Senate Appropriations Committee, and now before the Senate.

As Senate debate was renewed, New Deal Democrats parried for time to gather forces for a showdown on a proposal to increase the bill to $150,000,000. They were reported to be gaining support, and this impelled the Senate economy bloc to press for an immediate vote on the $100,000,000 bill.

Spokesmen for the economy-minded Senators conceded the administration might succeed in stalling a showdown until Monday, meanwhile picking up a few votes, but they still claimed enough strength to pass the House-approved $100,000,000 bill.

ECONOMY BLOC UNEASY

Members of the economy bloc admitted privately, however, that they were uneasy over the possibility that President Roosevelt's return to the Capital from Warm Springs over the week-end, might strengthen the opposition. This possibility caused the economy group to force a session of the Senate today.

Senator PEPPER (Democrat), of Florida, sponsor of the amendment to increase the bill's funds to $150,000,000, disclaimed any intention to "stall or filibuster," but the economy bloc thought otherwise.

PEPPER CONFIDENT

"The filibuster has accomplished its purpose, and I assume the whole issue will be carried over until Monday," said Senator ADAMS (Democrat), Colorado, a member of the economy forces, and Senate sponsor of the $100,000,000 bill.

"They may be able to pick up two or three votes over the week-end, but not enough to pass the $150,000,000 bill," he added. "I think that no matter when the vote comes, it will be about 2 to 1 for the $100,000,000."

PEPPER, meanwhile, predicted that he has lined up a sufficient number of speeches for his amendment to prevent a vote until Monday afternoon.

"We'll vote Monday at 3 p. m., and not a minute before," he said.

Economy forces, meanwhile, after forcing agreement with a majority of Democrats and Republicans to support their figure, were considering calling off members who have signified their intention of speaking on the issue—to save time. Senators GEORGE (Democrat), of Georgia, and KING (Democrat), of Utah, fighting the $150,000,000 proposal, had planned long speeches.

HOLD FLOOR 2 DAYS

Administration Democrats have held the floor for 2 days and were scheduled to lead off today with Senator BILBO (Democrat), of Mississippi, noted for his ability to speak at length.

PEPPER, as the Senate recessed until noon today, claimed at least 40 votes for his amendment, and said that "pressure" from constituents will drive some Senators, committed to "the agreement," to vote with him when the roll is called. On the other hand, the economy bloc, backed almost solidly by the Republicans, said they were sure of at least 60 votes.

STOCKS DROP AGAIN TO 10 MONTHS' LOW—ONE TO FIVE POINTS LOST AS 1,500,000 SHARES ARE SOLD IN 2 HOURS

NEW YORK, April 8.—Leading stocks lost from one to five points in today's 2-hour session in which about 1,500,000 shares changed hands on the stock exchange. The volume, with the exception of last Saturday's, was highest for a Saturday since October 1937.

Prices generally touched their lowest levels since June of last year. Closing prices were at or near the bottoms on the day. Government obligations also gave ground. Corporate bonds moved in sympathy with stocks. Wheat improved. Other commodity markets were closed.

ALL SECTIONS GIVE GROUND

All sections of the market were forced to give ground. While the Italian conquest of Albania was a good excuse, in the opinion of many, for lightening commitments over the week end, there was no domestic news to give strength to prices. On the contrary, the few domestic developments were anything but encouraging.

The shut-down of soft-coal fields was a bearish factor on the economy in a wide area. The unions and operators are now in a deadlock over a new wage scale and between 300,000 and 400,000 coal miners are without jobs temporarily. The shut-down, of course, has affected railroad employment and train traffic. Major carriers which serve the soft-coal area include Norfolk & Western, Chesapeake & Ohio, Baltimore & Ohio, Pennsylvania, and Pittsburgh & Lake Erie.

Opening prices were not as low as many traders had anticipated after yesterday's holiday and the developments in Europe. London was closed today and will be closed Monday so that there was some liquidation from there merely because of unwillingness to carry commitments over Sunday. Much of this type of liquidation had no doubt taken place Thursday.

United States Steel opened off 1¾ points on 2,500 shares. This was erroneously printed on the tape at 56¼, but it was quickly corrected to read 2,500 shares at 46¼. Bethlehem was off 1⅞, as was Chrysler. General Motors broke through 40 for a loss of three-fourths of a point. Douglas opened down 1½. General Electric was down a full point on 1,600 shares. National Biscuit, Consolidated Edison, Commercial Solvents, and Radio were one-eighth lower. Nickel was down one-fourth.

Rails had to absorb a fair amount of selling and gain up large fractions to more than a point on the opening transactions. New York Central opened off one-half on 1,500 shares. Union Pacific was off 1⅛, and Santa Fe was down 1⅜. Great Northern preferred did not sell until 10:55, when 3,500 shares changed hands at 17¼, a drop of 1¾ points.

TICKER RUNS LATE EARLY IN SESSION

The popular industrial issues, as well as rails and utilities, went into new low ground for the movement on the opening. The accumulation of sell orders was not as large as might have been expected, and offerings were fairly well absorbed considering market factors. The tape ran late for a few minutes shortly after the opening and again at 10:23, and was clear again at 10:33. It was not late again in the first hour, when volume reached 700,000 shares.

MARKET UNDER PRESSURE

Wall Street this week found encouragement only in the fact the stock and bond markets could undergo so much further selling pressure, put on them largely by the critical state of affairs in Europe, without cracking wide open.

After initial steadiness, prices lurched heavily on Wednesday and Thursday. Part of the decline no doubt was brought on by the desire of margin traders to be out of the market over the Friday holiday as a precaution against adverse foreign developments.

Mainly, the weakness was produced by the Italian movements in Albania and the cumulative effect of disappointing business statistics on this side.

HOPE TO BE BAILED OUT

Stock prices receded to the lowest levels they have occupied since June a year ago—shortly before the hopeful boomlet took place that was to carry the market safely past the election and to stimulate business into a semblance of recovery that many observers supposed would by this time have developed into a broad advance.

Those who missed the market in stocks in early summer and who bought later on the hope that by the spring of 1939 the markets would run into the full force of inflationary influences contained in the revived spending program of the Government, are now wondering what can take place to bail them out.

INVESTORS DOUBTFUL OF MARKET FUTURE

The stock market now is under two main influences. One is the liquidation originating in Europe in fear of war and the seizure by governments of individual assets. The other is of a negative nature, for the most part being a reluctance of investors on this side to buy stocks even at low prices, because their confidence has been shaken. They are now afraid that even if war be avoided in the near future, and if the market has discounted a conflict, the remainder of the year may not be propitious for higher prices or for better business.

In all probability opinion here is such that the stock market, had it not been for foreign operations, would have been no worse than dull on the week's developments. There is still a large body of opinion that believes a good recovery will take place once the war menace is removed.

SPRING GAINS DISAPPOINTING

Whether that proves to be the case depends a good deal upon whether industry can overcome the adverse forces threatening it. So far the spring recovery has been disappointing. The steel industry is holding fairly steady at slightly above half rate, but it has passed the time when peak usually is set. Railroad freight-car loadings have receded a little. Retail trade has been stimulated by Easter shoppers, but heavy industries still lack an inflow of capital and forward buying. In some lines trade is better and in others poorer than it was a year ago.

GOLD HOARDERS ALARMED

Gold hoarders in London were alarmed this week by the Government measure which locked in the Bank of England the Czechoslovakian assets on the ground that if they were paid out they might be seized by the German Government. It was supposed, too, perhaps erroneously, that the assets of other nationals might be seized by the British Government if they were threatened as was Czechoslovakia. This resulted in the shipment of more gold to us and the selling of American securities both here and in London. Much of the proceeds were put into dollars, which went into hoarding.

[From the Washington Daily News of April 7, 1939]

ONE HUNDRED AND NINETY-SIX IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA AREA DREW $15,000 PLUS IN 1937—$79,502 RECEIVED BY DEPARTMENT STORE EXECUTIVE TOPS FOR THIS VICINITY; MRS. ROOSEVELT'S PAY AS COLUMNIST PUT AT $16,587; ACACIA'S HEAD RAISED $250 TO $75,250

(By Charter Heslep)

One hundred and ninety-six persons in the Washington area were listed today by the House Ways and Means Committee as individuals who received $15,000 or more from corporations in 1937.

It is the last time such a roster will be available. Under amended law, only the names of persons receiving $75,000 or more will be made public hereafter.

Most prominent name on the list is that of Mrs. Roosevelt, who received $16,587 from United Features for her syndicated column published daily in the News. But the highest paid person, according to the committee, was Charles B. Dulcan, Sr., Hecht Co. vice president, whose salary and bonus totaled $79,502.

AMOUNT OF $50,000 FOR JESSE JONES

Gen. Hugh Johnson, another name familiar to News readers, drew $15,600 from the United Features.

R. F. C. Chairman Jesse Jones got $50,000 from two Houston concerns. As president of the Houston Chronicle Publishing Co. he drew $30,000, and he received $20,000 as "adviser" to the Commerce Co.

Representative BRUCE BARTON, New York Republican, got $58,751 as chairman of the board of Batten, Barton, Durnstine & Osborn, Inc.

SENATOR PAID $30,000

Maryland's junior Senator, GEORGE L. RADCLIFFE, is put down at $29,805 as vice president of the Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland.

The total credited to each name includes salary, commissions, bonuses, and "other compensation." Thus, in many cases the figure does not represent the actual income of the person, as a sales manager may pay all the office expenses, including taxes and salaries of subordinates, salesmen, etc., with money credited to him as commissions.

Next to Mr. Dulcan, who is generally recognized as one of the ablest executives in the department store field, is President William Montgomery of the Acacia Mutual Life Insurance Co., with a $75,250 salary. This is a $250 raise over the 1936 listing.

AMOUNT OF $40,000 BONUS LISTED

E. Marshall Rust of the Rust Engineering Co. of Pittsburgh is credited with $51,400, including a $40,000 bonus.

Also, in the $50,000 class are President Robert V. Fleming of Riggs National Bank and Malcolm G. Gibbs, head of the Peoples Drug Stores.

President Edward G. Yonker of the Sanitary Grocery Co., at $48,222, is pressed closely by E. Taylor Chewning, head of the Union Brick and United Clay Products Corporations, who draws $46,980.

SEVERAL NEWSPAPERMEN

Others among the 15 highest are Charles P. Maloney of the Maloney Concrete Co., $45,189; Theodore W. Noyes, editor, and Frank B. Noyes, president of the Evening Star Newspaper Co., $43,045 each; and George D. Horning, $41,250.

Real-estate brokers, laundry owners, department store executives and noted Washington correspondents are prominent in the list. Among the latter are Frank R. Kent of the Baltimore Sun papers, $33,243; the New York Times, Arthur Krock, $24,600; Mark Sullivan of the New York Herald Tribune Syndicate, $24,426; the late Paul Y. Anderson, $16,300; Arthur Sears Henning of the Chicago Tribune, $21,400; P. H. Whaley (business-letter service), $22,050, and Willard M. Kiplinger, head of the Kiplinger Washington Agency, $30,000.

LAUNDRY PRESIDENT, $30,000

The remainder of the Washington list follows:

Arcade-Sunshine Co., Inc. (laundry and cleaning), Harry Viner, president, $30,000.

B. & R. Inc., William H. Lipscomb, president, $24,000.

A. H. Baker & Co., Inc. (insurance), C. R. Barker, president, $17.800, and S. B. Dillard, treasurer, $16,400.

George M. Barker Co., Inc. (lumber), Jacob Shulman, president, $18,000.

Becker's Leather Goods Co., W. A. Turke, Sr., president, $25,000.

Capital Transit Co., John H. Hanna, board chairman, $16,333.

Capitol Cadillac Co., Floyd D. Akers, president, $26,683.

Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co., Charles A. Robinson, general manager, $21,000, and Hanse Hamilton, assistant vice president, $18,333.

HOTEL EXECUTIVE, $25,000

Adams-Burch Co., Inc. (restaurant supplies), Donald H. Adams, $19,080.

Ambassador, Inc. (hotel), Morris Cafritz, president, $25,000.

American Publishing Co., C. J. Conway, salesman, $18,855 (commissions).

American Security & Trust Co., Corcoran Thom, president, $30,000, and Howard Moran, vice president, $17,500.

R. P. Andrews Paper Co., R. P. Andrews, president, $19,652, and William N. Schaefer, vice president, $21,993.

L. A. Clarke & Son (lumber), Aubrey L. Clarke, $20,000.

Colonial Ice Cream Co., B. L. Hartz, $19,000.

Columbia Speciality Co. (oil burners), Joseph Richards, Sr., president, $17,350.

Joseph DeYoung, Inc. (shoes), Joseph DeYoung, president-treasurer, $20,933.

AMOUNT OF $30,000 TO DR. DORAN

Distilled Spirits Institute, Inc., Dr. James M. Doran, $30,000; the late W. Forbes Morgan, $16,472, and Norman W. Baxter, $17,812.

Dodge Hotel, Karl P. Abbott, manager, $15,026.

D. J. Dunigan, Inc. (real estate), Mrs. Helen M. Dunigan, president, $18,000.

Dupont Laundry, Albert MacKenzie, president, and Hugh MacKenzie, secretary, $15,600 each.

Engineering & Research Corp., Henry A. Berliner, president, $30,000.

Evening Star Newspaper Co., Fleming Newbold, general manager, $35,818; Newbold Noyes, associate editor, $28,249; S. H. Kauffman, assistant manager, $21,257; Ben M. McKelway, managing editor, $16,150, and L. W. Herron, advertising manager, $15,610.

William J. Flather, Inc. (broker), William J. Flather, Jr., president, $16,000.

The Howard P. Foley Co., Inc. (electrical contractor), Howard P. Foley, president, $35,000, and Bancroft T. Foley, vice president, $35,000.

UNIVERSITY HEAD, $24,000

Folger, Nolan & Co. (investments), J. Clifford Folger, president, $19,569, and James Parker Nolan, $15,527 (both sums all commissions).

Ben Franklin University, John T. Kennedy, president, $24,000.

Fruit Growers Express Co., H. B. Spencer, president, $25,000, and E. J. Roth, general manager, $18,000.

Joseph Gawler's Sons, Inc. (morticians), Alfred B. Gawler, president-treasurer, $19,100, and Walter A. Gawler, vice president, $20,600.

General Hydraulic Co. (manufacturers' agents), Norman B. Frost, president and attorney, $15,000.

Clarence W. Gosnell, Inc. (builder), Clarence Gosnell, president, $27,000.

John I. Haas, Inc. (malt and hops), John Haas, president, $30,000; Fred J. Haas, vice president, $21,300; Walter Rauber, secretary, $21,300, and L. E. Kreider, $20,100.

Harris & Co. (jewelers), Col. Julius I. Peyser, treasurer and general counsel, $17,500.

WOMAN DRAWS $22,000

Hot Shoppes, Inc., Willard J. Marriott, president, $20,977.

Frank R. Jelleff, Inc., Frank Jelleff, president, $30,000; and Margaret Gollan, vice president, $22,000.

The Floyd Jennings Co., Floyd Jennings, president, $20,000.

The Robert C. Jones & Co., Inc. (investments), Robert C. Jones, president, $16,300.

Judd & Detweiler, Inc. (printers), John H. Davis, vice president, $33,000; and Waring E. Evans, secretary-treasurer, $18,150.

S. Kann Sons Co., B. B. Burgender, president, $40,595; and Sol Kann, vice president, $32,595.

Kass Realty Co., Garfield I. Kass, $20,000.

Harry Kaufmann, Inc. (department store), Harry Kaufmann, president, $16,000.

Kiplinger & Babson, Inc. (publishers), O. S. Granducci, associate editor, $16,146.

Kiplinger Washington Agency (business news letter), Paul T. Babson, president, $22,425; and S. A. Colton, vice president, $26,593.

BEER DISTRIBUTOR, $16,000

RELIEF ROLLS JUMP TO NEW 3-YEAR HIGH; TOTAL IS 774,588—INCREASE RATE SLACKENS; LATEST BOOST SMALLEST SINCE DECEMBER 10

A new 3-year high in total number of persons on direct relief was registered for the week ended February 4, the department of public assistance announced yesterday.

A net rise of 4,269 cases (13,424 persons) boosted the total to 774,588 persons. That is the highest since December 1935, when there were 866,000 on direct relief.

But there was a ray of hope in the otherwise dark picture. The rate of increase is slowing down. In fact, the net rise of cases was the smallest for any week since last December 10.

APPLICATIONS ALSO DROP

The slackening, Howard L. Russell, secretary of the department, said, reflected fewer cases traceable to private employment lay-offs and W. P. A. curtailment.

An additional factor in the slowing-up process, he said, was the department's transfer of approximately 850 cases to old-age assistance and dependent children aid rolls, to take advantage of Federal participation in costs.

Russell also noted that "the volume of applications for assistance (a barometer of potential case openings) dropped below the 10,000 mark for the first time in a nonholiday week since the beginning of December."

REASONS VARY

The net rise of 4,269 cases during the report period is reached by subtracting 5,052 cases closed during the week from 9,321 cases opened.

Private employment accounted for closing 2,052 of the cases; 445 were discontinued because of W. P. A. employment; 698 were discontinued because of receipt of unemployment compensation; and 1,857 were closed for a variety of reasons running from C. C. C. employment to contributions from relatives.

Of the 9,321 cases opened, 3,826 were accepted for assistance because of loss of private employment or decreased wages; 298 because of loss of W. P. A. jobs or inadequate security wage earnings; and 827 because of cessation of unemployment compensation.

BIGGEST INCREASE HERE

The other 1,687 cases were accepted for reasons ranging from exhaustion of resources and loss of contributions from relatives to loss of public employment other than W. P. A.

Yesterday's report showed that in the 9 weeks since December 3—a period paralleling the curtailment of W. P. A. activities—the net rise of direct-relief rolls totaled 25,429 cases, or 87,294 persons.

Philadelphia County, which is taking advantage of only 38 percent of its total W. P. A. quota because of city council's lethargic attitude, again was the State's leader in the increase of relief cases, with 602. Allegheny was second with 560; Westmoreland third, 289; and Luzerne fourth, 195.

Of all counties, Elk and Pike alone had no increases.

DENIES MISCALCULATION

J. Banks Hudson, State W. P. A. administrator, yesterday denied using "bad arithmetic" in his estimate that Congress' recent 17-percent slash in the W. P. A. budget will hit 40 percent of Pennsylvania's W. P. A. pay roll.

"Had the entire reduction been permissible on February 1," he explained, "40,000 (about 17 percent of the State's 243,000) could have been dropped immediately."

An amendment to the act, he pointed out, prohibited a lay-off greater than 5 percent before April 1. Furthermore, Hudson said, a mass lay-off even then would interrupt construction jobs in progress. Thus, the ultimate wholesale firing will involve 100,000 workers by July 1.

Hudson said the "least objectionable" method would be to stagger dismissals according to this scale: 54,000 during April, another 42,000 through May, and 4,000 more during June. That total would amount to 40 percent.

CLAIMS OF TRADE GAIN DISPUTED—REPUBLICAN CONGRESSMEN FIGHT PLAN TO END CONGRESS IN JUNE

(By Paul Mallon)

WASHINGTON, April 5.—A private report on the business situation is being circulated among House Republicans by Representative FRED CRAWFORD, of Michigan. It is based largely on a four-day survey he made personally within his own district (Saginaw).

Mr. CRAWFORD is telling the Republicans the situation was more discouraging than at any time since 1933 * * * people are not buying.

More than $50,000,000,000 (yes, billions) are tied up in savings deposits * * * inflexible, fixed charges (taxes, labor, commodities) are too high to encourage business * * * one trucking transportation company has had to hire an expert at $7,000 a year to do nothing except handle the firm's relations with the Federal Government.

He spent 2 weeks alone to compile a report required by the I. C. C. * * * only way out is to adjust prices downward (taxes, labor, commodities) in an effort to lure the $50,000,000,000 out of savings accounts.

Government economists are agreed on their disagreement with the pessimistic tone of this picture. They blame the recent stock market discouragement entirely on Hitler, think everything else points upward.

[Excerpt from How to Stop Dictators, by Stuart Chase, as published in the New Republic, January 25, 1939]

The Nazis publish a newspaper called Der Angriff. One task of its editors is to prove to Germans that political democracy is an inferior form of government to the totalitarian state. Not long ago Der Angriff published a series of pictures showing American billboards with their cheery slogans: "There is no way like the American way"; "The world's highest wages," and so on. Just below, it ran a group of photographs taken in the United States, showing unemployed men at factory doors, slums, bums, breadlines, shacks of tenant farmers. It captioned the two exhibits: "Thank God we have a better way."

In one sense, the Nazis have. There were 6,000,000 unemployed in Germany when Hitler came into power. Today there are practically none. The outlook for German youth was black in 1933; now the future is dangerous but full of action. Factory chimneys were cold; now they are belching smoke. (Poetic image: German engineers save the smoke.)

We had better not try to win a contest against dictators simply by shouting about the blessings of "liberty" and "freedom." People do not eat liberty and freedom; these words make no jobs. For every cultivated American liberal who cares profoundly about the Bill of Rights, there are 99 citizens in the lower-income groups who care more profoundly about employment and security. Americans have political democracy rooted deep in their folklore, but it is rash to suppose that they are prepared to defend it at the price of permanent economic misery. If we value our liberties of speech, press, and ballot, we shall have to make the economic machine work better than it has worked since October 1929. With 20,000,000 Americans on relief, those cheery posters warrant a razzing from Hitler or anybody else.

Why were Italians converted to fascism? Because they were suffering from intolerable economic conditions, unemployment, insecurity, and were disappointed over Italy's share in the spoils of the Versailles Treaty. They turned to a strong man.

Why were Germans converted to nazi-ism? Millions of them, remember, had been voting a Socialist ticket. They were suffering from unemployment, terrible economic conditions, poor food, savage reparation payments, unending debts to foreigners, the iron ring of Versailles, the middle-class fear of communism. They turned to a strong man.

Why do the people of many nations in Europe support dictators, and hang out a "to rent" sign on their houses of parliament? Because of desperate economic conditions, unemployment, insecurity. Will such conditions produce a strong man in France, in England, some day? If they continue long enough, they probably will. There are already signs of it in Paris. They once produced a Napoleon in France, following a queen who said "Let them eat cake."

W. P. A. HERE TO DROP 10,800 THIS WEEK ON CAPITAL'S ORDER—8,000 IN CONSTRUCTION JOBS, 2,800 WHITE-COLLAR WORKERS WILL BE DISMISSED—HALF TO GO ON CITY RELIEF—FURTHER FEDERAL CUT EXPECTED UNLESS CONGRESS GRANTS FULL APPROPRIATION REQUEST

Dismissal slips will be given this week to 10,800 W. P. A. workers in this city under instructions received from Washington yesterday by Lt. Col. Brehon B. Somervell, local Works Progress administrator. The dismissals will begin tomorrow and continue at the rate of 2,000 a day until Saturday.

A further lay-off of 20,000 workers is expected May 1 unless the Senate restores the $50,000,000 cut made by the House of Representatives Friday in President Roosevelt's request for a supplementary relief appropriation of $150,000,000. If the cut stands, the local W. P. A. rolls will be reduced from a present total of 167,500 to 127,000 by June 30, according to semiofficial estimates last night.

Fifty percent of the W. P. A. workers dropped in past mass lay-offs have been found eligible for home relief. On this basis it is expected that 5,400 of the Federal relief employees to be discharged this week will be added to the home relief rolls of the city welfare department, increasing the local outlay by $270,000 a month. The city provides 60 percent of this money and the State 40 percent.

"UNESSENTIAL" GO FIRST

In bringing the W. P. A. here down to its new quota of 156,740 Colonel Somervell directed that unessential workers without relief status be dismissed first. They will be followed by employees, regardless of relief status, with work ratings of "unsatisfactory," after which workers with ratings of "fair" are to be dropped. Those having the longest period of employment on W. P. A. will go first in each category.

The cut will affect 8,000 employees among the 122,740 assigned to construction projects and 2,800 among the 44,800 assigned to white-collar and professional projects.

In anticipation of the cut, every effort was made to complete projects last month. This drive made it possible to finish 142 undertakings during the month, the administrator announced.

Twelve white-collar projects were ordered discontinued yesterday. They were county clerk of Kings County, Staten Island Public Museum, Staten Island Zoological Society; county clerk of Bronx County, ichthyological research at the Aquarium, restoration of municipal court records, consumer marketing information; revision, renovation, and installation of record system in the Kings County surrogate's court; research studies in treatment and disposal of sewage and polluted water, analysis of real property laws, State division of standards and purchases, and reorganization of W. P. A. employment cards for State labor department.

NO WORD ON ART PROJECTS

The cut of 10,800 workers does not apply to the five W. P. A. Federal arts projects, which are not under Colonel Somervell's jurisdiction. Whether the staffs of these projects were to be reduced could not be learned in the absence of Paul Edwards, administrative officer of the arts program here.

Before the lay-off order was made public at W. P. A. headquarters, 70 Columbus Avenue, a group of 250 members of the Unemployed and Project Workers Union had formed a picket line to protest any curtailment of W. P. A. employment here. One of the marchers, Frank Cleary, 47 years old, of 1067 Teller Avenue, collapsed after an hour in the line. A heart attack caused his death a few minutes after an ambulance had carried him from the W. P. A. offices to Roosevelt Hospital, three blocks south.

Henry V. Rourke, president of the Unemployed and Project Workers Union, said Cleary had been employed as a painter on W. P. A., and that he left a wife and three grown children, all without jobs. A collection among the marchers brought $12.60 to buy a wreath. The group observed a minute of silence in Cleary's memory.

Mr. Rourke said his organization would "fight to the finish" against the dismissals scheduled for this week.

A national "job march" to Washington in protest against the movement in Congress to cut the President's relief request is under consideration by the Workers Alliance, largest organization of W. P. A. workers and home-relief recipients. Willis R. Morgan, president of the Workers Alliance of Greater New York, said the results of city-wide balloting on the question by W. P. A. workers here would be made known next week.

The administrative committee of the alliance will meet Tuesday to map its plans of resistance in the immediate situation, Mr. Morgan announced.

The process of reducing the W. P. A. rolls here began last November when the quota stood at 175,000. For a period of 10 weeks no replacements were made from home relief and the regular departure of W. P. A. workers for private jobs resulted in a drop of about 8,000 in the total roster. The rolls were reopened for replacements at the beginning of February and remained open until last week.

There are 160,000 families on home relief in this city. The board of estimate approved on Friday a budget of $28,928,955 to meet the costs of home relief for the quarter that began yesterday.

CUTS UP-STATE ORDERED

ALBANY, April 1.—Lester W. Herzog, up-State W. P. A. administrator, said today that 5,808 workers would be stricken from W. P. A. rolls by April 8 to comply with a reapportionment of funds actually appropriated.

The cut, Mr. Herzog said, will begin tomorrow in line with orders from Col. F. C. Harrington, National W. P. A. Administrator, for a reduction pending action of the United States Senate on a resolution to give W. P. A. $100,000,000 additional funds to June 30. The House approved the measure.

Proposed reductions in the 11 State districts, Mr. Herzog said, and the new employment totals include:

District 1 (Franklin, Clinton, Essex, Hamilton, Warren, Fulton, Saratoga, and Washington Counties)—575 to 5,368.

District 2 (Albany, Montgomery, Schoharie, Schenectady, Rensselaer, Columbia, Greene, and Ulster)—500 to 4,809.

District 3 (Orange, Dutchess, Putnam, Westchester, and Rockland)—825 to 8,308.

District 4 (Nassau and Suffolk)—500 to 4,809.

District 6 (Oneida, Herkimer, Madison, Cayuga, Oswego, Lewis, Jefferson, and St. Lawrence)—525 to 5,332.

District 7 (Onondaga)—300 to 3,014.

District 8 (Broome, Tioga, Thompkins, Cortland, Chenango, Otsego, Delaware, and Sullivan)—300 to 3,054.

District 9 (Monroe)—450 to 4,151.

District 10 (Allegany, Steuben, Livingston, Wayne, Yates, Chemung, Schuyler, Seneca, and Ontario)—375 to 3,263.

District 11 (Niagara, Orleans, Genesee, Wyoming, Cattaraugus, and Chautauqua)—300 to 2,767.

District 12 (Erie)—800 to 7,947.

State-wide projects: Adult education, 81 to 834; nursery schools, 16 to 166; public-health nursing, 11 to 117.

[From the Chicago Tribune of February 10, 1939]

W. P. A. HERE EXTENDS ITS DENTAL SERVICE—WORKERS ON ITS OWN ROLLS WHO GET LESS THAN $18 A WEEK TO BE CARED FOR—FAMILIES ALSO ELIGIBLE—EXPANSION WILL ADD 300,000 PROSPECTIVE PATIENTS TO THE 500,000 NOW SERVED

Free dental care will be provided for 90,532 W. P. A. workers earning less than $18 a week and their families—a total of more than 300,000 persons—under a program outlined yesterday by Lieut. Col. Brehon B. Somervell, local Works Progress Administrator.

The service will be given at 6 clinics for adults and 86 for children. Most of the juvenile clinics are one-chair affairs in public schools. If all the persons affected by the program take seriously the injunction to have their teeth examined twice a year, the W. P. A. dentists will have their hands full, for they already serve 500,000 men, women, and children on home relief.

The staff assigned to the dental clinics by the W. P. A. includes 165 dentists, who work 15 hours a week, and 107 dental hygienists, who work 30 hours a week. If all the 800,000 patients should come in every 6 months, the professional workers would be able to devote 12 seconds to each visitor. The dentists and hygienists receive $98.70 a month from the Federal relief agency.

In the past the W. P. A. clinics have been closed to W. P. A. workers unless they were receiving supplementary home relief from the city's department of welfare. Under the new arrangement workers whose W. P. A. pay amounts to less than $18 weekly will be able to get fillings, extractions and prophylaxis but no false teeth. Persons on home relief can get dental plates through the welfare department, but Colonel Somervell made clear that this practice would not be adopted by W. P. A.

Appointments for dental service are to be made by W. P. A. employees through the district offices of the home-relief division nearest their homes.

[From the Philadelphia Record of March 21, 1939]

SEVEN HUNDRED SCHOOL TEACHERS IN SCHUYLKILL COUNTY GO PAYLESS; 1,000 WILL BE ON LIST BY APRIL IF STATE FAILS TO ACT

(By David G. Wittels)

POTTSVILLE, March 20.—More than 700 teachers are working without pay in Schuylkill County alone, and by the 1st of the month the number will be at least 1,000.

Those figures do not include school clerks, attendance officers, bus drivers, janitors, and other employees. Some 75 of the latter are unpaid now, and their total will be more than 100 by April 1.

Teachers and school employees are now unpaid in 24 of the 68 school districts in this county. So are bills for light, heat, tuition, and supplies. And so, in many cases, are interest payments on bonds.

Teachers in those 24 districts number 715.

In at least four more districts, including the sizable cities of Shenandoah and Mahanoy City, pay checks for this month were the last the teachers will get this year. These 4 districts have 246 teachers.

In nine other districts, mostly rural and small, they may be able to worry through by borrowing and scrimping, and they may not. In some of the smaller districts, the school directors have no clear idea how they stand. There are 237 teachers in those nine districts.

POTTSVILLE ASKS AID

Even the school district of the city of Pottsville, with 159 teachers, has been forced to appeal to the State for emergency aid—in other words, for "relief" money.

But there is no money in the State treasury for the purpose. Already school facilities in the distressed districts are beginning to break down. Several schools may have to close shortly.

There is no money for supplies and even the teachers are beginning to express resentment and disgust. They have in the main stuck to their posts with amazing fortitude, and carried on despite worry, shame, hardship, and in some cases, literal hunger. But they are only human.

Twenty-eight teachers were on the relief rolls in Schuylkill County as of March 1, and more than 50 others have applied. Scores, and perhaps hundreds of others, need relief, according to informed school officials, but are too proud.

They shun relief, even though under the plan worked out by Anthony Flannery, public assistance officer for Schuylkill County, the relief money is given them as loans, with the teachers signing notes against their pay, when and if they get it.

In one district the athletic coach bootlegs coal—digging anthracite out of a tiny, primitive mine of his own making—after school hours, so that he can feed himself and his family. Teachers in his district have not been paid for 3 months and were paid only irregularly most of the year.

At least six teachers have quit in disgust. One took a job clerking in a hardware store. "At least it pays every week, and I can eat," he told his friends. Another went with the W. P. A. Adult Education Project. A third turned to selling stationery and books.

CAN'T REPLACE THEM

School districts find it virtually impossible to replace these teachers; no one seems to want a job without pay.

Tales of hardship and suffering are numerous, though the teachers try to keep up a brave front, are extremely reticent about their troubles, and undergo almost any difficulty before making public their problems.

Typical is the case of a young man teacher. He has a wife and baby. He had borrowed on his salary to take extra courses at State College last summer to fit him to be a better teacher. When his district stopped paying, he could pay neither rent nor feed his family.

He borrowed up to the limit on his life insurance. Finally, at the end of his rope, he had to break up his home. He sent his wife and baby to live with the wife's parents, and went to live with his parents.

There are teachers in this county who have suffered so long from payless paydays that they lacked shoes to wear to class. The relief authorities had to arrange quietly a deal for shoes for them so they could go on teaching.

CREDIT TIGHTENED

Teachers usually can get credit easily and make loans more easily than most other wage earners. But some of the distressed school districts are in such bad shape that banks and loan companies refuse to make the loans to school teachers which ordinarily they are extremely anxious to make.

Up to March 1, more than $275,000 was owed teachers in this county. By the end of the school fiscal year, the first Monday in July, that figure will be at least half a million dollars.

Distressed school districts in this county also owed, as of March 1, $90,278.63 for fuel, light, textbooks, and supplies; $40,229.20 in salaries for January, bus drivers, and attendance officers; $93,189.90 for tuition to other school districts.

They have so far this year defaulted on $77,070.17 in school district bonds, some of them held by the State teachers' retirement fund.

Morale of the unpaid teachers in this county is somewhat higher than in other counties, largely due to the efforts of the Schoolmen's Club, of Schuylkill County, and such leaders as Assistant County Superintendents James D. Toole and Arthur H. Henninger, and Paul Christman, superintendent of schools at Schuylkill Haven, who heads the teachers' legislative committee. It is a striking point that none of these three men, who are doing the most to have the situation remedied, are themselves affected by the situation.

ASK $2,500,000 OF STATE

They, like teachers' leaders throughout the affected areas, want a special appropriation of $2,500,000 passed at once by the legislature to aid the distressed districts and a large appropriation for the same purpose for the next biennium. Details of these proposals will be discussed in later articles.

Following is the first published accurate, up-to-date list of districts in Schuylkill County, where teachers are unpaid:

	Number months unpaid	Number of teachers
Barry Township	1¾	9
Blythe Township	4¾	41
Branch Township	5¾	23

[1] In Mahanoy Township there is an arrangement with the banks whereby the teachers are advanced money on their salaries.

NO MORE THIS YEAR

In the following districts the teachers were paid up to March 1, but there will be no more pay for them this year unless the legislature and Governor James relent and supply the $2,500,000 needed to carry the distressed school districts of the State through to the first Monday in July:

Teachers: Shenandoah Borough, 124; Mahanoy City Borough, 75; Palo Alto Borough, 9; Hegins Township, 38.

Shenandoah expects to be $100,000 behind in its salary payments to teachers by the end of the school fiscal year unless the State comes through.

OTHERS IN DANGER

The following are struggling, but may pull through:

Teachers: Ashland Borough, 39; Mechanicsville Borough, 3; Middleport Borough, 6; McAdoo Borough, 35; Minersville Borough, 54; New Philadelphia Borough, 6; Tamaqua Borough, 71; Union Township, 8; Walker Township, 5.

There may even be other distressed districts whose directors are ashamed or afraid to admit they are in difficulty and about to suspend payments to teachers.

SCHUYLKILL ASKS AID

The following districts in Schuylkill County have applied for emergency State aid:

Branch Township, Butler Township, Coaldale Borough, East Norwegian Township, East Union Township, Frailey Township, Gilberton Borough, McAdoo Borough, Minersville Borough, New Philadelphia Borough, Porter Township, Pottsville City, Reilly Township, St. Clair Borough, Schuylkill Township, Tremont Borough, Tremont Township, and West Mahanoy Township.

Others need help just as badly, but have failed to apply because they know it is no use, because the cupboard is bare or because of conditions which make them dread the rigid State auditing and inspection which follows an application for relief.

Various factors are responsible for the plight of the distressed school districts. In some small part is mismanagement in some districts. In other places it is the general drop in real-estate valuations—a State-wide condition. But in Schuylkill County the major factor by far is the illness of the anthracite industry and the resultant nonpayment of taxes by the coal companies.

SOME SEE NO HOPE

The districts in this county cannot go on supplying school facilities without far greater State aid than they have been getting. For them this is not a temporary situation. Even should anthracite improve, they still will be in trouble. It is perfectly obvious that these districts cannot go on depending upon taxes upon real property for their school income.

(Plans now being advanced for drastic changes in the systems of taxation for school purposes will be discussed in detail in later articles.)

In Schuylkill County 39 of the 68 school districts have tax assessments of $93,000,000, of which 68 percent, or $63,000,000, is assessable on coal lands.

But the districts are not getting most of their coal taxes. The Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Co., biggest in the area, is in receivership. Lehigh Valley is protesting tax claims and not paying taxes. Glen Alden is paying, but many small companies have not paid for years, and there is no prospect that they ever will be able to pay up.

Strange situations result. One district, situated in immensely rich coal land, can't collect enough taxes from the coal companies to pay its coal bills, and so, to heat its buildings, it had to burn bootleg coal this winter.

Tremont Township, with 99.3 percent of its assessed valuation in coal property, also can't pay its coal bills.

Following is the list of the 39 coal school districts, with (a) their total school assessments, (b) total coal-land assessments, and (c) percentage of coal land to total assessment. In most cases the percentage of taxes that come from coal is a pretty good indicator to the distress of the district.

"There is bound to be a collapse of the school systems in many of Schuylkill County's school districts in the near future, unless the State does something drastic soon," declared the heads of the Schoolmen's Club of Schuylkill County. "It is up to the State, and the State must act. No other agency can solve the problem."

UNPAID TEACHERS IN LUZERNE DO ODD JOBS FOR LIVELIHOOD—533 EMPLOYEES IN GOVERNOR JAMES' HOME COUNTY GO WITHOUT SALARIES—397 MORE FACE PAYLESS PAY DAYS; $2,500,000 NEEDED TO CARRY ON

(By David G. Wittels)

WILKES-BARRE, March 21.—One high-school teacher in Plains Township, Luzerne County, has built up an undertaking business on the side—so he can feed and clothe his family.

He can't support them on his school salary, for the 121 teachers and 19 other employees in that school district have not received any pay for 3 months. There is no indication when they will get any.

In 11 school districts in Luzerne County a total of 450 teachers and 83 other employees are going without pay. The districts are broke, and the special State appropriation for relief of distressed school districts is exhausted.

At least 13 other school districts in the same county are in serious financial difficulties, mostly through inability to collect taxes. That means an additional 347 teachers and nearly 50 other employees face payless pay days before the end of the school fiscal year.

Two other school districts, with 107 teachers and 14 other employees, will barely squeeze through.

OFFICIALS HIDE CONDITION

Several other districts in the same county are broke, or on the verge of halting payments to teachers, but their officials denied the facts through pride, shame, or desire to protect the districts' credit. More than 200 teachers are employed in those districts.

Only two of the unpaid teachers in Luzerne County are on relief so far, but in many other cases other members of their families went on relief when the teachers' pay stopped.

The teacher who turned undertaker on the side—a Holy Cross College graduate and former athlete—is not the only one who has turned to extra curricular activities to keep from starving.

One sells sporting goods after school hours.

Two teachers clerk in shoe stores in Wilkes-Barre on Saturdays to get money for food.

One sells life insurance in his spare time, another peddles class rings to graduating classes, while a third has turned to raising chickens.

In Duryea Borough, a school teacher takes a long nap after school, then spends his nights as a watchman in a colliery yard to get cash for his family.

The districts definitely not paying their teachers and other school employees are:

Avoca Borough, Courtdale Borough, Duryea Borough, Freeland Borough, Fairview Township, Plains Township, Pringle Borough, Slocum Township, Swoyerville Borough, Wilkes-Barre Township, and Yatesville Borough.

AT LEAST $2,500,000 IS NEEDED

Avoca Borough school district has been unable to pay its 36 teachers and 4 other employees since February 1, and has no hopes of paying any until some time in July unless the State legislature comes through with a special appropriation. (At least $2,500,000 is needed to carry the distressed school districts of the State through until the first Monday in July.)

Courtdale Borough owes its seven teachers a month's pay. The school directors don't know if there will be any more pay this year. They intend to pay the teachers in dribbles, if necessary, when and if any tax money comes in. The Kingston Coal Co. owes this district $4,000 in taxes.

The school district of Duryea Borough is 3 months behind in pay to its 69 teachers and 11 other school employees. Part of the reason is that the Pennsylvania Coal Co., formerly called the Pittston Coal Co., owes $30,000 in taxes, according to the school directors. The borough itself is hard hit, too. Municipal employees have not been paid for nearly 5 months.

Freeland Borough school district owes its 56 teachers and 4 other employees 2 months' pay. And, according to the school directors, they'll be 3 months behind by June. That school district is scraping along on borrowed money, and has skipped pay days before. School officials there blame most of their troubles on drastic cuts in coal-land valuations, which reduced the district's tax income terrifically.

Fairview Township is 3 months behind to its 15 teachers.

In Plains Township, where 121 teachers and 19 other school employees have not been paid for 3 months, some are getting credit from the banks. The school district expects to be 4 months behind in salary payments by the end of the school term. The Lehigh Valley Coal Co. has not paid its 1938 tax bill of $110,000; Conlon Coal Co. is charged with $15,000 in unpaid taxes, and general real-estate-tax payments have not been coming in normally.

Pringle Borough school district hasn't paid its 16 teachers and 3 other employees for a month, and expects to be 2 months behind by the end of the term. Teachers there are almost used to it, so often had the district been behind. Once it was 7 months behind in pay. The Payne Coal Co., according to school directors, hasn't paid taxes for 4 years, and the Kingston Coal Co. owes $18,000. Pringle has been existing largely on State aid, now exhausted.

OUTLOOK "NOT SO BRIGHT"

Tiny Slocum Township is 1½ months behind to its six teachers, and the outlook for the rest of the year is "not so bright."

In Swoyerville Borough, where the school directors piled up some sort of record for the number of janitors, clerks, cleaners, etc., they managed to get on the pay roll, the 54 teachers and 29 other employees have been unpaid for 3 months. And the school directors admit it will be worse before the end of the fiscal year.

The Wyoming Valley Co.'s two mines there are now shut down, and for the first time that company is behind in taxes. It owes the school district $19,000. Delinquent taxes for school purposes in that district total $112,000.

Wilkes-Barre Township school district owes 2 months' pay to 59 teachers and 17 other school employees, and expects to be 3½ months behind by June. The school directors were waiting for the second half of the regular State-aid appropriation.

But there isn't going to be any. The $60,000,000 appropriated 2 years ago for regular State subsidies to all school districts in the State during the current biennium is gone—and $1,510,000 short besides.

Wilkes-Barre Township is slowly degenerating into a ghost town. It is, or was, rather, entirely a coal town. Ninety-five percent of the tax money came from coal lands. But three coal companies have abandoned their workings in its confines. About 70 percent of its 8,000 people are on W. P. A. or relief.

CASH TUITION BASIS

Yatesville Borough school district owes 3 months' pay to its seven employees. Children of high-school age must travel far to get to high schools, because Yatesville has none and nearby Jenkins Township won't take them any more except on cash tuition basis. Yatesville school district owes Jenkins Township school district so much money for back tuition that Jenkins won't trust it any more. Jenkins dares not trust anyone. It is in too precarious shape financially itself.

The 13 districts in more or less serious financial difficulties which have paid their teachers so far, but may have to default before the fiscal year is over, are:

Conyngham Township, Dupont Borough, Denison Township, Exeter Township, Foster Township, Hunlock Township Jenkins Township, Plymouth Township, Shickshinny Borough, West Hazelton Borough, West Wyoming Borough, Wright Township, and Wyoming Borough.

Conyngham Township has paid its 22 teachers so far, but probably will not be able to give them any more pay the rest of the term if the State legislature does not come to the rescue. That school district needs about $20,000. It owes more than $9,000 to neighboring districts for tuition for its high-school children.

Denison Township school district's five teachers have their pay so far, but may lose out before the term is up.

Dupont Borough school district has paid its 32 teachers and 14 others up to date—but has an empty treasury right now and may have to miss its next pay day.

OWES OTHER DISTRICTS

Exeter Township's five teachers are paid up, but Exeter is being dunned for tuition it owes nearby districts.

Foster Township school district (near Hazleton) probably will owe its 46 teachers and 5 other employees 2 months' pay by the time the term ends, though they are paid up now. Cause of the trouble is mostly falling valuations on coal lands.

Hunlock Township is paying its eight teachers, and hopes to continue doing so—if it doesn't pay the $4,700 it owes other districts.

The 56 teachers and 14 other employees in Jenkins Township most likely will get their next pay, as they have in the past—"but after that we don't know," the school directors admit. One company owes the school district $100,000 in back taxes on coal land, "and if we don't get that we'll be in serious trouble for the next 2 years at least," the school directors say.

Plymouth Township (home ground of Governor James) school district also is in trouble. Its 37 teachers and 11 other employees are paid up, but will be a month short in their pay by the end of the term, according to the school officials. (Governor James took no cognizance of the seriousness of the situation in his budget message, recommending only $2,000,000 for special aid to distressed school districts, the same as last biennium, though last biennium's appropriation has proved at least $2,500,000 short, and best estimate is that about $11,000,000 will be needed for the next biennium.)

NEARBY TOWNSHIP BLAMED

Shickshinny Borough will be 2 months behind in payments to its 27 teachers and 7 other school employees by the end of the school term, the directors of that school district admit, though pay days have been met so far. They lay some of the blame on Conyngham Township school district, which owes for tuition.

West Hazleton Borough school district, which pays its 46 teachers and 7 other employees on a 12-month basis, will have to borrow to meet pay days through the summer months.

West Wyoming Borough school district will have to borrow money—if it can—to continue paying its 23 teachers and 9 other employees. If not successful in its borrowing efforts, it may run 3 months behind in pay, school officials admit. Lehigh Valley Coal Co. owes $10,000 in taxes.

Wright Township school district is in trouble because a new building cost $16,000 instead of $8,000. Its five teachers have been paid so far, but the rest of the year is uncertain.

Wyoming Borough school district must borrow, and "in all likelihood" will run short on the pay roll for its 35 teachers and 13 other employees before the end of the term.

PAY WITH BORROWED MONEY

The two districts that will barely squeeze through, but hope to be able to meet pay rolls, are Edwardsville Borough and Pittston Township.

Edwardsville Borough school district has been paying its 76 teachers and 19 other school employees out of borrowed money, having succeeded in raising loans of $80,000 last year. To meet a pay roll of between $9,000 and $10,000 a month that school district has $15,000 on hand.

The Kingston Coal Co. owes it $30,000 in delinquent taxes, but the district has no immediate hopes for that money. Edwardsville bases much of its hope for being able to meet its pay rolls for the rest of the term on the fact that it has $18,000 coming to it under the State subsidy.

But the State school subsidy fund is exhausted.

Pittston Township school district manages to scrape enough to meet its pay rolls, but its students are attending classes in a school building that has been condemned because of cave-ins. They have no gymnasium, and the curriculum, according to the school directors, is inadequate—because of lack of funds.

That's the financial condition of 26 of the sixty-odd school districts in Luzerne County. All not mentioned in this article, if their directors have been frank, can meet their pay rolls the rest of the year.

NEW YORK, N. Y., February 9, 1939.

Hon. ERNEST LUNDEEN:

Re tel. there were 183,243 cases on relief in New York City in October. City's cost, $5,810,174; State, $3,374,859; total of $9,185,033. In November 183,687, an increase of 444 cases. City's cost, $5,852,577; State, $3,378,068, a total of $9,230,645. In December 186,005, an increase over previous month of 2,318; city's cost, $6,057,271; State, $3,528,655; total of $9,585,926. In January there were 189,742 cases, an increase over December of 3,737. City's cost, $5,993,078; State's cost, $3,485,033; a total of $9,478,111. In February to date there has been a net increase of about 200 families a day. Estimated cost in February is $9,596,514, of which the city's share is $6,050,821; State's, $3,545,693. March estimated total is $9,732,925, of which the city's share is $6,132,891; State's, $3,600,034. Note that these are cases and not individuals. We average about three and one-half persons. My impression is that there must be a sustained improvement in business and industry to absorb 2,500,000 workers before there will be any substantial and noticeable reduction of relief rolls. Please also note that these figures are in addition to the Federal W. P. A. in New York City. Neither city nor State can assume any additional load.

CHICAGO, ILL., February 11, 1939.

United States Senator, Washington, D. C.:

In Chicago on direct relief in October, 91,800; on W. P. A., 120,487. November, direct, 94,500; W. P. A., 118,432. December, direct, 99,200; W. P. A., 112,689. January, direct, 103,600; W. P. A., 106,068. Estimated February direct, 105,000; W. P. A., 108,000. Estimated March direct, 108,000; W. P. A., no estimate. Spent in Chicago by city and State in October, $5,235,342; November, $8,820,899; December, $9,063,022; January, $9,396,379. Estimated February, $11,151,000; estimated March, 11,340,000. Chicago Relief Authority estimates 1939 requirements for direct relief at $46,000,000. To meet that there is available of city funds $2,900,000. Assuming that present State appropriation will be continued by general assembly, there will be available of State funds for Chicago relief approximately $30,000,000 in 1939, leaving an estimated deficit of $13,100,000. Should the general assembly not continue present State appropriation for relief, letting it automatically drop downward, in accordance with present law, the State funds available to city are estimated at only $23,000,000, which will result in a relief deficit for Chicago of $20,100,000. Chicago Relief Administration reports approximately 639,000 persons in December, or 1 out of each 6 of the 1930 population, receiving public assistance through Works Progress Administration employment, general relief, or old-age pensions. It also reports 42,000 employable persons now on direct relief who are not working. It is urgent, to avoid difficulties, that W. P. A. employment in Chicago be increased substantially. Now employs 103,000. Should be increased, as a minimum, to the October level of 121,000, and preferably higher. Lack of employment in Chicago is greater now than it has been at this season in the last 3 years, according to the Association of Commerce employee index.

EDWARD J. KELLY,
Mayor, City of Chicago.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., February 9, 1939.

Hon. ERNEST LUNDEEN,
Senate Office Building:

Extent of relief load in Philadelphia as of December 24, there were 76,427 relief cases. According to the calculations, 202,530 were on direct relief. There are at present 23,000 cases on W. P. A., of which 5 percent are nonrelief, which means that approximately 87,400 cases are receiving relief through this form.

More than 202,000 persons receiving direct relief, and approximately 205,000 to be taken care of directly and indirectly through W. P. A. There is great need for additional W. P. A. funds in this city.

It is a grave mistake to reduce W. P. A. appropriations to $725,000,000. Such a step means the dropping of many workers and consequent distress in their families, and produces a serious crisis in this city.

Financial ability of city to meet needs: There is now an appropriation of $1,000,000 available to continue old and to supply for new W. P. A. projects.

Mayor of Philadelphia.

Commitments, State and local funds: October, $408,000; November, up $52,852; December, up $45,062; January, up $33,630 over previous month. Anticipate increase in relief load next 2 months due to W. P. A. lay-offs. Sharp increase after April 1 if W. P. A. carries out proposed cut. Minneapolis only available resource is bond issue. City now forced to refund maturities because of abnormal relief bond issues in past 6 years. Requirements for refunding aid for direct relief and sponsor's share of W. P. A. will exhaust city.

Debt leeway before December 31, 1939, or earlier if W. P. A. retrenchment increases direct relief intake. Over-all case load with all categories of aid now the highest in history of Minneapolis. Mayor Leach is out of town.

County tax levy this year 100 percent greater than for 1928, all due to relief. Unless at least present W. P. A. quotas are maintained, Milwaukee faces a serious crisis in financing relief. In reply your telegram February 8, W. P. A. employment in Greater Cleveland for months October to January was 79,000, 75,000, 72,000, and 68,500, respectively. Direct relief cases for same period serviced by subdivisions constituting Greater Cleveland were 18,746, 18,951, 19,711, and estimated 21,550, respectively. Relief case represents an average of 3 people. Local direct relief expenditures for this period were $541,000, $635,000, $599,000, and estimated $619,000. Relief loads and expenditures have increased during this period due to stopping of assignments by W. P. A. in October and also due to W. P. A. order issued in December directing removal from W. P. A. program of persons believed eligible for categorical public assistance. Temporary relief bill passed by State of Ohio last week will enable Greater Cleveland subdivisions to service direct relief not later than April 1. Permanent program under consideration by Governor and general assembly of State. Enactment of such program necessary during March in order to avoid break-down.

United States Senate:

Re your telegram 8th, persons on relief October, 42,874. No increases November or December. Amounts expended for relief by State and city for October, $370,000; November, $369,000; December, $376,000. Employment figures include W. P. A. expenditures. Do not include Federal contributions. Expenditures and persons on relief January not available. Indications are that relief loads are increasing first 3 months this year. City and county of San Francisco now carrying all load possible financially.

LOUISVILLE, KY., February 10, 1939.

ERNEST LUNDEEN:

Direct unemployment relief cases: October, 939; November, 958; December, 986; January, 1,038. Net city expenditures: October, $18,186; November, $19,714; December, $22,089; January, $22,906. No State aid for city cases. City does not provide direct relief for employable cases. Relief needs for first 3 months 1939 will exceed ability to meet adequately. Cannot handle any additional load. Placement in private industry slightly improved over same period last year. Current applications for unemployment compensation not as heavy as anticipated. Seasonal slump in some lines, but indications are that lay-offs not as extensive as this time last year.

An answer February 8,

Re telegram re relief needs of city of Seattle administered under joint county-State relief administration. Mr. Charles F. Ernst, State social-security head, reports to us as follows: October 6,000, November 6,400, December 8,000, January 10,300, and estimate February and March same as January. Expenditures for respective months October 88,000, November 96,000, December 126,000, January 143,000, with like amounts for February and March. Estimated limited funds available make necessary grant on basis of average, or 6.30 per person, which must be further reduced if there is more reduction in W. P. A. quota. No improvement in employment conditions expected until April, and legislature now in session still unable to find funds beyond those required for maintaining O. A. A. blind and children's program on present level. Counties attempting to meet needs of unemployables in institutional and medical care and both State and county require and expect Federal assumption of responsibility for unemployed persons in need of work.

ERNEST LUNDEEN,
Washington, D. C.:

Newark cases on relief October, November, December, and January average 18,350, fluctuating from 18,209 to 18,509, and representing an average of 53,300 persons, fluctuating from 52,816 to 53,919; amounts expended average $580,000, fluctuating from $561,000 to $609,475. Estimated cost of relief for first 3 months current year is $1,809,475, exclusive of administration costs. Estimated cost for current year is $6,613,000, including administration costs. Last year the State failed to provide full share of its relief obligations to municipalities to the extent of approximately $8,000,000. Ways and means are now being devised to discharge that obligation; prevailing conditions may force municipalities to shoulder entire load of State's 1938 obligations, and until legislative action is taken what contributions the State will make to municipalities for current year remains undetermined. Because of these entanglements Newark faces extreme difficulty in financing relief out of budgetary appropriations.

CITY OF ATLANTA,
OFFICE OF THE MAYOR,
Atlanta, Ga., February 9, 1939.

Mr. ERNEST LUNDEEN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your wire of February 8 was duly received. The following are the figures on relief cases for October, November, and December, the figures for January not being immediately available:

	Cases	Persons
October	6,224	12,453
November	5,743	12,624
December	5,925	13,104

The amount expended for the same months is as follows:

	City	State and Federal	County
October	$21,350	$48,376.80	$30,000
November	21,350	48,376.80	30,000
December	21,350	48,418.65	30,000

We do not see that there will be any material change in the number of relief cases for the first 3 months of 1939.

Under a new agreement, Fulton County will handle the entire relief load for city and county payments from now on. Of course, the money is coming out of approximately the same pocketbooks, as the citizens of Atlanta pay 85 percent of the county of Fulton taxes, and it is merely a matter of bookkeeping so far as the people are concerned, as to which political subdivision issues the check.

So far as we can see, the unemployment situation should be neither better nor worse for the coming 3 months.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH GREGG, Jr.,
Executive Secretary.

GEORGE STAMSON,
Mayor, Montevideo.

MONTEVIDEO, MINN., February 9, 1939.

Hon. ERNEST LUNDEEN,
Senator, Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

DEAR SIR: The city of Montevideo pays no direct relief costs. Under the system in practice here county and State plus Federal Government pay out directly for relief.

Our telegram gave you the number of cases handled by Chippewa County for October as being 209 cases, costing better than $3,300. This case load increased in November to 254 cases, costing $4,136. The December case load increased to 256 cases, costing $4,595. The January case load increased to 263 cases, costing $5,502. The total cost of relief to the county and State amounted to approximately $17,535. Of this amount the State of Minnesota paid Chippewa County $3,031.

Chippewa County, at the beginning of its fiscal year, July 1, 1938, appropriated an additional $15,000 for relief for 1939. At the present time Chippewa County has less than $6,000 in its relief fund and the prospect of receiving more from taxes which will be paid will not be in sufficient amounts to cover the increased relief costs already placed upon the county. Therefore the county commissioners at the present time are struggling with the problem of securing additional money to take care of these increased costs. Therefore, it is only natural and logical to assume that any heavy added burden of relief on Chippewa County woud create a difficult financial problem.

The W. P. A. in Chippewa County during the month of October employed 421 at a cost of $22,401. November figures were 440 persons at a cost of $23,454. December figures were 441 persons at a cost of $23,517. January figures were 423 persons at a cost of $22,553 or a total cost to W. P. A. for the 4 months of $91,925. In addition to this amount the city of Montevideo had paid out $4,525 as sponsor's money to keep W. P. A. projects going in the city, thus employing those men on W. P. A.

If W. P. A. had not been available in Chippewa County you can readily see what the burden would have been upon our county, which in turn would have affected our city a great deal because the bigger percentage of relief cases in Chippewa County are located in the city of Montevideo. It would be extremely hard to separate all of these cases of direct relief and W. P. A. from county totals and would take considerably more time than you would care to have us take. Therefore, the figures submitted to you are the best indicator that we can give you at the present time.

It is the opinion of those who have direct control and authority over W. P. A. and relief that the remainder of February and March will see an increase rather than a decline in cases and costs. In any event they do not expect that the number or costs will be lowered to any appreciable amount.

I do not know what can be done to replace W. P. A. at this present time but do know that any additional load would be of grave concern and would cause great difficulty in raising the necessary funds for same. If this information is not sufficient in detail, please advise and I would be very happy to secure and furnish to you reliable detailed information.

Yours very truly,

GEORGE STAMSON,
Mayor of Montevideo.

Amounts estimated needs for February, 100 cases, $2,000; March, 95 cases, $1,800; April, 80 cases, $1,600. Have 92 W. P. A. cases on work relief. Have expended $1,000 additional in an endeavor to keep relief rolls from increasing. Financial situation of town very bad. Bonded indebtedness approximately $250,000, per capita indebtedness $90, which points to the continued need of relief moneys, and unable to cope with the handling of any additional relief load.

FRAZEE, MINN., February 10, 1939.

Hon. ERNEST LUNDEEN,
United States Senator:

Your wire February 9. Following information: October, 150 persons employed W. P. A., expenditures, $7,600; November, 157, $7,800; December, 142, $7,100; January, 135, $6,700. Months most needed steady decrease employment. Conditions apparently no better to induce private employment. No industries here. October, November, December, January, direct relief expended by village average $150. Regard relief situation here, numerous inquiries from various workers who were discharged under recent quota, and number of other individuals have made application for W. P. A. work.

FARIBAULT, MINN., February 9, 1939.

ERNEST LUNDEEN:

Rice County October cases 188, expenditures $3,392. November cases 233, expenditures $4,462. December cases 284, expenditures $5,237. January cases 344, expenditures $7,330. Estimated expenditures: February cases 370, estimated expenditures $8,500; March cases 350, estimated expenditures $7,500; April cases 300, estimated expenditures $6,500. State expenditures $4,319. Financial condition, county relief fund overdrawn approximately $42,000. Local funds: October expenditures, $384; November, $756; December, $586; January, $518. We are only able to get 50 percent of our case load on W. P. A. for lack of W. P. A. funds.

MAYOR, CITY OF FARIBAULT.

NORTHFIELD, MINN., February 9, 1939.

Hon. SENATOR ERNEST LUNDEEN,
Washington, D. C.:

The relief of Northfield is on a county basis and handled from Faribault. These records are not separate, but as a county in whole information has been sent you from Faribault today, which includes Northfield. Northfield expenses other than county, October, $129.62; November, $147.35; December, $184.54; January, $190.99. Financial condition not favorable. Poor fund overdrawn. Hospital project only improvement in view at present time.

ROSEAU, MINN., February 9, 1939.

Senator ERNEST LUNDEEN:

Number on W. P. A. relief October, 97; increased to 150 January. Amount expended for relief October to January, inclusive $33,600; by county and city, same period, $3,193. Sixty-nine men certified but not working; 296 registered with State employment not working. Financial condition of city and county poor. Unemployment situation acute. Any additional load would prove very unwelcome. Estimated amount to be expended by county next 3 months, $2,500.

J. O. JUVRUD, Mayor.

MAHNOMEN, MINN., February 9, 1939.

Hon. ERNEST LUNDEEN,
Washington, D. C.:

Persons on relief Mahnomen County, October, 426, expenditures $1,192.59; November 557, expenditures $1,808.03; December 744, expenditures $2,516.12; January 559, expenditures $2,754.93. Inadequate relief used total funds available for January. All city and county relief paid by State funds. Impossible for county to handle any part of relief load. W. P. A. lay-offs made situation impossible. Relief load increasing daily. Over 80 families on W. P. A. waiting assignment list. Urgent need for additional quota.

VAL A. FRANTA, Mayor.

STILLWATER, MINN., February 9, 1939.

ERNEST LUNDEEN,
United States Senator:

Direct relief handled on county basis and expenditures made by county rather than by villages and cities. Two hundred and twenty-seven cases were on direct relief in October; 227 in November; 287 in December; 301 in January. Total direct relief orders issued, October 4,150, November 5,780, December 6,340, January 7,630. State contributed approximately 15 percent; county not able handle additional load. Recommend Federal allocation for direct relief, perhaps, instead of Federal aid now given; such as surplus commodities.

WILLIAM ALVIN,
Mayor of Bayport.

DILWORTH, MINN., February 11, 1939.

ERNEST LUNDEEN,
Senator, Washington, D. C.:

October, 3 cases direct relief, 16 border-line cases receiving surplus commodities, expenditure, October $65; November, 4 cases direct relief, 14 border-line cases receiving surplus commodities, expenditures, $60; December, 4 cases direct relief, 16 border-line cases receiving surplus commodities, expenditures, $51.68; January 1939, 5 cases direct relief, 17 border-line cases receiving surplus commodities, expenditures, $100 February 1939. Our total amount under the 2-mill tax levy is $247 per year. It is necessary to transfer money from the general fund to handle the ever-increasing relief load. Increased allotment on W. P. A. quota would greatly help to reduce this local expenditure.

CROOKSTON, MINN., February 10, 1939.

Senator ERNEST LUNDEEN,
United States Senate:

Replying for Polk County as a whole re telegrams to mayors of East Grand Forks and Crookston, the following is case load and cost each month: October, 260, cost, $6,726; November, 353, cost, $9,086; December, 438, cost, $11,081; January, 461, cost, $12,368; 50 percent of case load is employable. Increased W. P. A. quota would reduce case load. Cost of direct relief, 90 percent county, 10 percent State.

PROCTOR, MINN., February 11, 1939.

Hon. Senator LUNDEEN,
The Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In reply to your request for statistics on relief in Proctor, Minn., number on relief, October, 280; November, 280; December, 300; January, 320. Amount expended for relief by State from October to January, $1,590; city, from October to January, $6,630. Estimate additional cost for first 3 months in 1939, city, $8,000. On W. P. A. during October, 135 men; November, 131; December, 141; January, 140. The relief situation is increasing rapidly and the village of Proctor is bonded to the legal limit and cannot help on this additional load.

Yours truly,

M. J. KLOELOSKI,
President, Village of Proctor.

OWATONNA, MINN., February 9, 1939.

ERNEST LUNDEEN,
Washington, D. C.:

Referring your telegram of February 8, number cases on relief in Steele County for October, 59. County paid $1,376, State paid $84. For November, 76 cases, county paid $1,561, State paid $120. For December, 134 cases, county paid $4,468, State paid $120. January, 97 cases, county paid $2,304, State share $120. Increase in cases in December due to change in medical plan. Unemployed increasing. Total number registered unemployed as of February 3, 1939, was 452.

STEELE COUNTY WELFARE BOARD.

HUTCHINSON, MINN., February 9, 1939.

Hon. Senator ERNEST LUNDEEN,
Capitol Building, Washington, D. C.:

Fourteen direct relief clients October, 17 November, 16 December, 20 January. Ninety on Works Progress Administration, 25 applications for same. No help from State during these months. Expenditures by city for October $287.71, $504.30 November, $258 December, $360.88 January. Our needs will be greater during next 3 months than they have been. Our financial condition will not warrant a heavier load. In my opinion this is a serious situation and needs the Government's support.

LE SUEUR, MINN., February 10, 1939.

Senator ERNEST LUNDEEN,
Washington, D. C.:

October 1938, helped 7 families, $154. November 1938, helped 6 families, $91. December 1938, helped 9 families, $209. January 1939, helped 9 families, $201. First 3 months of this year will take $150 to $200 per month, possibly more. We don't feel we can stand much more. W. P. A. has about 15 Le Sueur men. If Government would make W. P. A. wages what farmers could afford to pay it might take some off W. P. A.

ST. PETER, MINN., February 11, 1939.

Senator ERNEST LUNDEEN:

Number on direct relief: October, 27; November, 34; December, 44; January, 64. W. P. A. rolls: October, 114; November, 124; December, 128; January, 128. There are 21 cases that it is necessary to assign, but quota used amount expended for direct relief, October, $137; November, $275; December, $323; January, $444. Relief need will be heavier. Very essential to maintain Government help with most economy possible.

REUBEN R. SEIBERT, Mayor.

ST. CHARLES, MINN., February 10, 1939.

ERNEST LUNDEEN,
Washington, D. C.:

The city is now obligated to the amount of $38,698 as a result of W. P. A. and P. W. A. projects in order to curb increasing direct relief costs to the city; direct costs for medical have averaged $100 per month and $300 per month for food supplies in addition to an average of $800 per month of commodity surplus of the State, and covers an average of 110 persons per month. The financial condition of the city of St. Charles is such that they will be unable to care for a very large increase in direct relief.

E. W. PFEIL, Mayor.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., February 9, 1939.

Hon. ERNEST LUNDEEN,
The United States Senate:

Direct relief cases October 18, November 22, December 26, January 26, in amounts $365, $705, $1,046, and $787, respectively. In addition 40 are employed on W. P. A. projects. Relief needs for first 3 months 1939 will be approximately $2,600. This increase in relief cost is due principally because of W. P. A. lay-offs and because additional men certified cannot be placed on W. P. A. projects.

Replying to telegram direct relief very small. Seventy-six dollars October; $68 November; $94 December; and jump to $175 in January. Handle all direct relief ourselves. Receive no State or county aid. Expect relief needs for February and March to be same as January providing number of men on W. P. A. not reduced. Have quite a few men on W. P. A. project just beginning and few men on P. W. A. project just being completed. These projects have been our salvation. Can handle relief needs at present, but due to high cost of running this village cannot handle much more.

ALBERT LEA, MINN., February 9, 1939.

Senator ERNEST LUNDEEN,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

Number of families on relief October, Albert Lea and Freeborn County, 224; November, 297; December, 406; January, 452; W. P. A. pay roll last year, $188,000. Additional amount contributed by city of Albert Lea and county of Freeborn $114,000. Estimated relief load first 3 months 1939 will exceed same period last year. State contributions last year only $8,000; city and county contributed $60,000 last year. We are practically unanimous in belief Government funds for relief should be allocated to State and county for administration.

WINNEBAGO, MINN., February 10, 1939.

Hon. ERNEST LUNDEEN,
United States Senator:

Referring to your telegram February 8. Number on relief in Winnebago October, 21 families; November, 32 families; December, 83 families; January, 89 families; average four or five each family. State expended, October, $502; November, $697; December, $1,533; January, $2,252. Village has spent only to distribute surplus commodities: October, none; November, December, and January about $75 each month. One hundred and fifty-nine families receiving surplus commodities. Relief load increasing first 3 months 1939. Financially, condition of village will not permit handling additional load. Unemployment increasing.

ST. PAUL, MINN., February 10, 1939.

Hon. ERNEST LUNDEEN,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

Re your telegram February 10: Relief statistics for Redwood Falls, data for city is not readily available, but data for Redwood County is as follows: (W. P. A. employment as of middle of each month) October, 205; November, 209; December, 211; January, 203; total W. P. A. expenditures, Redwood County, 3 months' period, October through December, $33,791; total sponsors' expenditures, $6,865. In addition to above following number of persons were being carried direct relief either because not employable or employable cases unable to be absorbed by W. P. A. due to limitation of funds, October, 87; November, 112; December, 124; January, 189. Expenditures by State and County for direct relief purposes, October, $2,030.50; November, $2,287.52; December, $2,602.87; January, unavailable. Funds available this administration do not at this time permit assignment of any additional persons excepting those returning from private employment. We have total of 12,755 persons awaiting assignment to work program, but who cannot for above reason be put to work. There is a large number of persons in need and eligible for certification under regulations, but who are not being certified because W. P. A. is unable to put additional men to work. Unemployment conditions have not improved in Minnesota during last several months.

AURORA, MINN., February 10, 1939.

Senator ERNEST LUNDEEN,
Washington, D. C.:

Combined report for village of Aurora and township which is classified by relief agency under one district. January, 318 relief clients; figures for October, November, and December not available, but the load was somewhat smaller. Number on W. P. A. October 275, November 275, December 252, January 254; these are in addition to above 318 direct-relief clients; amount expended for relief by State and city, October, $7,069.18; November, $3,099.17; December, $2,724.66; January, 2,740.89; our village is located in mining area and have had no mining activity since 1927; no other private employment available within our village; W. P. A. and relief an absolute necessity for the first 3 months of 1939 and from present indications for the next few years; cannot stand any greater load as to sponsors' contribution. Have been granted by the State in 1938, $17,000 to our village and used as sponsors' contribution.

C. F. CHELLEW,
Village President.

HOPKINS, MINN., February 9, 1939.

United States Senator LUNDEEN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: Enclosed find the requested information concerning the relief costs for the village of Hopkins.

October, 13 cases; $182.84; 16 percent State aid.
November, 19 cases; $361.95; 14 percent State aid.
December, 31 cases; $709.46; 12 percent State aid.
January 85 cases; $1,434.58; 10 percent State aid.

You can see the increase is going to be unbearable if this situation continues. We have asked that we be consulted on the various cases that were to be discharged from W. P. A. but have been absolutely ignored. We know more about these cases than they do in St. Paul or Washington, and know which should be kept on and which could stand to be discharged with the least effect.

To date business is not absorbing employment the way it should, and this load of relief is getting to a point where we do not know how we are going to pay for it. With all the W. P. A. lay-offs that are being put back on the village of Hopkins, I certainly feel that something should be done to take the pressure off, and keep these men and women working at least for another 3 months, at which time business will possibly absorb some of this load.

Thanking you for the interest shown, and that this wholesale firing off of W. P. A. be stopped, and with kindest regards, I am

Sincerely yours,

E. V. MANCHESTER,
Mayor of Hopkins.

Senator LUNDEEN,
Washington, D. C.:

Men asking relief from village of Bovey, October, 39; January, 74; working on W. P. A. project, 38. Unemployment is increasing. Village financially unable to take care of relief except as sponsored contribution for W. P. A. project. Cut in relief will be disastrous. Cause suffering and actual starvation.

NELS WANGENSTEIN, Mayor.

GRACEVILLE, MINN., February 13, 1939.

ERNEST LUNDEEN,

MILACA, MINN., February 15, 1939.

ERNEST LUNDEEN,
United States Senator:

Amount spent for relief from State and county funds in Mille Lacs County as follows: October, $2,561.11; November, $3,453.07; December, $5,073.95; January, $4,590.86. Estimate for February, $5,000; March, $6,000. Both unemployment and relief rolls are increasing and there are no prospects of private employment absorbing either.

WILLIAM H. CROWE,
Executive Secretary for Mayors of Princeton and Milaca.

ST. PAUL, MINN., February 10, 1939.

Hon. ERNEST LUNDEEN,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

Re wire this date, W. P. A. employment February 1, 63,067, a reduction of 8.18 percent from employment figure of 68,716 on November 23, 1938. No forced reductions made for the present except those persons unwilling or unable to do a reasonable day's work and those persons eligible for other categorical aids, such as old-age assistance, aid to dependent children, farm security, and similar agencies. W. P. A. quota allowed for February, 63,000. Total awaiting assignment certified as eligible to W. P. A. employment as of February 1, 12,755. We believe this figure would be increased considerably if we were making new assignments. We suggest that any further comment on relief situation be asked of State relief agency.

LINUS C. GLOTZBACH, State Administrator.

MOORHEAD, MINN., February 11, 1939.

Hon. ERNEST LUNDEEN,
Capitol:

October 1938, $422.42, 47 persons; November, $502.99, 60 persons; December, $629.73, 75 persons; January, 1939, $744.18, 101 persons.

Clay County receives from State of Minnesota, $1,200 per year for direct relief. Clay County is on township system and reimburses each subdivision 75 percent on what they spend over one million. Owing to curtailment of W. P. A. our relief has increased very materially. We will have to receive some financial assistance to reeducate the public to be self-supporting rather than charges of branches of our Government.

E. W. HUMPHREY, M. D., Mayor.

GLENWOOD, MINN., February 11, 1939.

Hon. ERNEST LUNDEEN,
United States Senate Chambers, Washington, D. C.:

Re tel., the city of Glenwood is located in Pope County, which is now under the county system of poor relief. The welfare board administered direct relief as follows: October, 129 cases; expenditure, county, $2,639.07; State, $362.90; November, 113; county, $1,612.51; State, $362.90; December, 155; county, $2,875.29; State, $362.90; January, 160; county, $2,764.68; State, $362.90. The estimate for first 3 months 1939 is $10,500. It is my opinion that the relief administered here is inadequate. Many persons in the county are unemployed. Greetings, Ernie.

A. O. CORNIE WOLLAN, Mayor.

BELLE PLAINE, MINN., February 13, 1939.

Senator ERNEST LUNDEEN:

Number on W. P. A., month of October, 14. Four additional added the following 3 months. Fourteen others applied but were refused. City expended about $3,500 for 4 months, including January. State around $3,000 and county about $4,000. City here unable financially to handle additional load without Federal aid. This aid absolutely necessary until at least June 1.

Senator ERNEST LUNDEEN:

October, 15 men, $270; November, 20 men, $360; December, 26 men, $468; January, 26 men, $980.50. Forty to 45 men needing work the next 3 months, which cannot handle because limited funds. Have applied for P. W. A. project to take care of same, but have had no word since filed in Washington. Only four families on direct relief receiving about $16 each per month. No information available as to those receiving social security, but understand these are about through drawing. Financial condition poor and will get worse next 3 months. Now paying interest on warrants. Would appreciate information regarding our P. W. A. project application.

J. E. MCCARTHY,
Village President.

RENVILLE, MINN., February 11, 1939.

Senator ERNEST LUNDEEN:

Answering your wire, number on direct relief, Renville County, October 188, November 236, December 245, January 278. Cost October $4,132, November $6,246, December $6,510, January $7,198. Estimated cost February and March, $14,000. No State funds available until July. These amounts are in addition to W. P. A. county bonded debt, $1,700,000. Per capita debts of $100. This makes increased cost prohibitive. Relief conditions worst ever experienced due to lack of farm employment. Owing to rural characteristics of this county, employment situation cannot change until farm income increases.

MAYOR A. T. THORNSON.

ST. PETER, MINN., February 14, 1939.

ERNEST LUNDEEN,

Pursuant your request we submit following relief data: 27 direct-relief cases October, disbursement, $84 State funds, $53.20 county funds; 34 cases November, $120 State funds, $155.51 county; 44 relief cases December, $120 State, $203.25 county; 64 relief cases January, $120 State, $324.40 county. Relief needs will be greater next 3 months of this year than anytime during previous year.

HOWARD W. PAULSON,
Nicollet County Welfare Board.

WARROAD, MINN., February 14, 1939.

ERNEST LUNDEEN:

Village relief, month October, $300; November, $169; December, $181; January, $292; averages 15 cases per month for same months; 22 men working on municipal hospital at $44 per month which would otherwise be relief cases. Expect relief increase of 33 percent over past 3 months.

BURT INMAN.

TWO HARBORS, MINN., February 15, 1939.

Senator ERNEST LUNDEEN:

Your wire mayor Two Harbors referred to our county. October, direct relief 69 cases, $1,406; November, 74, $1,483; December, 93, $1,781; January, 118, $2,147; State contributing 38.2 percent, county balance. Estimate February, 120 and $2,300; March, 125 and $2,400. Nineteen thirty-eight county welfare tax rate 22.40 mills—direct relief 8.99 mills—both exorbitant. Nineteen thirty-eight relief expenditures exceed income $26,218. Welfare-fund overdraft December 31, $48,587; direct relief, $5,427. No immediate relief decrease seen. There is little private employment; no road, timber, or construction work; fishing at standstill. W. P. A. reduction will cause hardship.

ARTHUR O. LORNTSON,
Chairman, Lake County Board of Commissioners and Lake County Welfare Board.

THE CITY OF WEST ST. PAUL,
February 14, 1939.

Mr. ERNEST LUNDEEN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In answer to your telegram herewith following information as requested:

Approximately 100 on relief month of October; November, December, and January, no increases. Amounts expended for relief by city for October $1,900, November $1,500, December $2,200, January $560. Relief needs on the increase the first 3 months of 1939. The city's financial condition is such that it will be unable to handle additional load. Unemployment is on the increase owing to the fact that many are being laid off from their work in private industries. Weather conditions here do not permit outside work at this time of the year, so relief is on the increase.

Yours sincerely,

THOMAS A. THRIFT, City Clerk.

AITKIN COUNTY WELFARE BOARD,
Aitkin, Minn., February 16, 1939.

Hon. SENATOR ERNEST LUNDEEN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: Your telegram of February 8, 1939, sent to the mayor of Aitkin has been referred to this office, as all relief in Aitkin County is handled on the county system of poor relief. This system handles old-age assistance, aid to dependent children, direct relief, aid to the blind, W. P. A. certifications, as well as subsidiary phases of the relief program.

It has been necessary for Aitkin County to secure State aid for all welfare programs. The State of Minnesota at this time is financing direct relief 100 percent and are supplementing both aid to dependent children and old-age-assistance loads under provisions set up for distressed county aid in this State.

Aitkin County has the largest tax delinquency in the State of Minnesota. The last 6 years the delinquency in Aitkin County is as follows:

	Percent
1934	61
1935	70
1936	66
1938	66

Warrants registered and outstanding amounting to an amount in excess of $70,000 are shown on the county auditor's trial balance as of January 1, 1939. Bonded indebtedness also is shown to amount to $865,000.

The total relief load, including relief, old-age assistance, aid to dependent children, C C. C., W. P. A., etc., carries 7,662 people out of 15,009 population in the county as of January 1939. This load was 10,543 in February 1935. The cause of this load is chargeable mainly to a stagnant population who originally moved to Aitkin County for the purpose of timbering, mill work, etc.

It has been estimated that Aitkin County will need for its share in the next biennium for all relief purposes, $252,000. Aitkin County, as well as many other distressed northern Minnesota counties, will be forced to look either to the Federal or State Government to carry the majority of its load.

The relief load in the village of Aitkin, as well as in the entire county, has remained practically constant for the past 18 months. Some months the general load increases, and other months decreases. The load for the month of January 1939 is as follows:

Direct relief, 298 cases, $5,009.93; surplus commodities (all programs) (retail value), $8,009.09; flood relief, 22 cases, $418.16; farm relief, 67 cases, $920.47; old-age assistance, 825 recipients (average case, $18.13), $14,961.43; aid to dependent children, 30 cases (82 children), $873; administration, 12 employees, $1,532.80; W. P. A., 592 cases.

Aitkin County is considered distressed county No. 1 in the State of Minnesota. There are no mines or industries of any kind in this county. Out of the 3,300 so-called farmers in the county, actually 250 of these can be classified as operating farmers—those who receive the major portion of their income from farm operations. Relief standards (budgets) in Aitkin County are extremely low. This is due to the fact that with only about $8,000 in local funds available for poor purposes the bulk of the load rests with the State.

Northern Minnesota is in hopes that the Federal Government will take over the cut-over timber areas in this section on a reforestation program, which would give employment to the stagnant population in our 14 cut-over northeastern counties. I am at the present time a member of the Great Lakes committee on employment, relief, and rehabilitation.

Any information requested by you will be gladly forwarded.

With kindest personal regards.

Very truly yours,

JAMES E. CALL.
Executive Secretary, County Welfare Board.

ST. LOUIS PARK, MINN., February 10, 1939.

Senator ERNEST LUNDEEN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In response to your telegram of February 8, 1939, we are glad to supply you with the following data relative to the relief situation in St. Louis Park.

In the month of October 1938 there were 285 persons on relief, and the total expenditure was $998.98. The case load remained the same in the month of November, at a cost of $1,755.02. The December load was 315 persons, and total expenses of $2,314.40, and January 1939 showed 334 persons aided, and total cost of $2,454.47.

It is difficult to anticipate just what the relief cost will be for the months of February, March, and April, due to the fact that we are uncertain as to the status of our local W. P. A. project. We have 70 workers employed on this project, and if, as we believe, considerable reductions will be made in the personnel, of course, a considerable additional load will be added to the already heavy burden which the village is carrying.

We are hoping for the usual seasonal reduction in relief costs during the summer months, but if drastic cuts are made in the number of workers employed on our project, we are sure that this will offset any savings made in seasonal reemployment of workers by private industry.

With this in mind we would estimate the expenditures for the months of February, March, and April 1939 at $2,400, $2,200, and $1,800, respectively, or a total of $6,400 for the 3 months. I know that you will agree that this is a very heavy load for a municipality of this size to carry, and it is just a question as to how long the village will be able to cope with this situation.

Trusting that this will give you the desired information, and thanking you for this inquiry, we are,

VILLAGE OF ST. LOUIS PARK,
By E. W. NELSON, Mayor.

FEBURARY 10, 1939.

Mr. ERNEST LUNDEEN,
Washington D. C.

DEAR MR. LUNDEEN: In reply to your telegram of February 9, the welfare of Hastings is handled through the county set-up, with no funds expended by city. In October there was $5,260 expended for 250 people on direct relief; in November there was $7,045 expended for 302 people on direct relief; in December there was $7,818 expended for 339 people on direct relief; in January 1939 there was $10,507.90 for people on direct relief.

The men on W. P. A. for those months were as follows: October, 550; November, 550; December, 500; and January, 500.

If the W. P. A. is not reduced I believe the direct relief will remain about the same for February and March.

The relief is paid by direct taxation, which is making a heavy burden on the county taxpayers.

There are about 100 men in the city of Hastings that are not on W. P. A. or direct relief that unless given jobs soon will have to be put on direct relief.

I feel that the President is correct in asking for the allotment of W. P. A. funds, as this is the best way of handling the unemployed and I see no work in the future for these men unless times change a lot.

There is a small amount paid by the State for relief which is not included in the county figures.

Very truly yours,

L. D. PECK, Mayor of Hastings.

Columbia Heights businessmen, represented by 72 members of this organization, will be greatly affected by any discontinuance of W. P. DEAR SENATOR: I have taken time to write an article which contains a few suggestions, and I hope you will take time to read it. I note your comment in the press, if the people knew what was told to you Senators by the President, the hair would stand up on our heads. I want to say to you, Mr. Senator, what is going to take place, if the Congress of the United States of America does not do something, and that in this session, will not be as sad to we poor devils as it will be to some of you Senators. You are going to wake up one of these mornings and find that Senators and Congressmen are not needed in the picture, that is what's going to happen. If you gentlemen cannot find a way to give employment to the people of this land, some one will and that some one will not need your assistance.

The whole trouble, you lawmakers are afraid to make a good job out of anything, it's a little slice here and there—all summed up amounts to nothing. This world has been run by parasites and racketeers but that hour has passed. You see what has taken place in Germany and Italy, it's taking place here and at a rapid gait. If you love democracy, save it; otherwise it's going to be something else. No government can survive with an inefficient banking system; nuf said. You gentlemen can save the system if you will remodel it; if not, and I do not mean half way, it's finis.

ROSEAU, MINN., April 1, 1939.

Hon. ERNEST LUNDEEN,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

We feel curtailment of relief work would be tragedy. Favor relief appropriation full amount asked by President. Urge you support passage uncurtailed relief bill.

ROSEAU WORKERS ALLIANCE, LOCAL 91341.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., April 6, 1939.

Senator ERNEST LUNDEEN:

I have been informed today that W. P. A. will lay off 750 persons by April 8, in Minneapolis. Every one of those laid off W. P. A. will return to the relief rolls, and will become a burden on the city of Minneapolis. I respectfully urge upon you the need for stopping these lay-offs, and to take any possible action to restore adequate W. P. A. quotas to Minneapolis.

O. A. PEASON,
Superintendent, Division of Public Relief.

ST. PAUL, MINN., April 6, 1939.

Senator ERNEST LUNDEEN:

Minnesota Workers Alliance protests lay-off of nearly 6,000 W. P. A. workers in our State. We urge you work, speak, and vote for at least $150,000,000 deficiency appropriation, and that private industry provide jobs for workers before they are separated from Federal works program.

CHESTER WATSON,
President, Minnesota Workers' Alliance.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 6, 1939.

Senator ERNEST LUNDEEN,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

Proposal to reduce President's recommendation to W. P. A. to $100,000,000 must cause tragic increases in suffering to American unemployed. This question is far above partisan politics or factional deals. Entire amount requested by President will at best be inadequate. Labor's Nonpartisan League urges that you support movement to authorize $150,000,000 appropriation.

ELI L. OLIVER,
Executive Vice President,
Labor's Nonpartisan League.

DULUTH, MINN., January 11, 1939.

HONORABLE SIR: I think it is imperative that the relief appropriation be held at a level high enough to continue relief administration at its present status. The $875,000,000 advocated by President Roosevelt is not too high. The proposed quota cuts on W. P. A., should they materialize, will serve to undo a great deal of good that has already been done.

I have talked with many people in several walks of life during the past week or two and most of them are wholeheartedly in favor of continuing W. P. A. work, while not a few thought the program should even be extended. Of course, there are those who are fundamentally opposed to any kind of relief program, but I think they are in a selfish minority.

I have seen hungry men; I've seen them fight for jobs that paid hardly enough to keep them alive, but there comes a time when a hungry belly gives a man backbone. Anyone will agree that a little healthy morale is far more desirable than brooding discontent. And if anyone is curious about dissatisfaction he has but to visit a few of the homes I have been in where the head of the family, unemployed, can't get on W. P. A., but must take "direct" relief. It will knock the stuffings out of almost anyone.

That is why I think the appropriation should be held at our President's figure. Government relief workers, besides being helped physically and morally themselves, have done a great deal of good in public work. Let us continue to progress.

Respectfully yours,

CLAYTON A. VIDEEN.

NEW YORK, January 10, 1939.

DEAR SENATOR: The membership of this local are considerably alarmed by the recent action of the House of Representatives in drastically reducing the President's proposal for the Works Progress Administration deficiency appropriation. Not only do our members recognize that this action, if concurred in by the Senate, will condemn millions of deserving citizens to a bleak, misery-laden future, but will constitute a direct assault against the living standards of every wage earner in the Nation.

This organization feels that even the President's proposals were too low for the Nation's needs and that the action of the House was dictated by partisan political motives completely alien to the interests of the people. Moreover, we feel that this is, indeed, playing politics with human misery.

We therefore respectfully urge you to reject the action of the House and to increase this appropriation to a figure more in keeping with the urgency of the situation. We believe that an appropriation of at least $1,000,000,000 is the very minimum which should be set aside for this purpose.

By this action we believe the Senate will be doing a genuine service to the country's inhabitants and at the same time help to secure that prosperity which we all so keenly desire.

Very truly yours,

AMERICAN COMMUNICATIONS ASSOCIATION, LOCAL No. 10,
H. V. TRAUTMAN, Secretary.

ALBERT LEA, MINN., January 16, 1939.

Hon. ERNEST LUNDEEN,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. LUNDEEN: I feel it highly important that the original figure for relief as set forth by President Roosevelt be passed, and I ask that you do all in your power to this end. There are more unemployed in this city now than since 1933. Why shall our people suffer and at the same time our Government spend billions for war?

Thanking you and wishing you success.

Sincerely yours,

EMMANUEL JEPSON,
C. E. DUNCAN CO.

AMALGAMATED ASSOCIATION OF IRON, STEEL AND TIN WORKERS OF NORTH AMERICA, LODGE No. 1664, Ely, Minn., January 17, 1939.

Mr. ERNEST LUNDEEN,
United States Senator,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: At a recent regular monthly meeting, this organization went on record to fight and protest against any cuts in Works Progress Administration or other relief projects.

We sincerely urge that in your official capacity you will endeavor to get more W. P. A. and relief work appropriations for the State of Minnesota.

Respectfully yours,

J. EMIL MAKI, Secretary.

Whereas the announcement that the W. P. A. will close all its projects beginning with January 26 reveals the seriousness of the emergency which is now facing the unemployed of America; and

Whereas in the face of this emergency this Joint Conference of A. F. of L. and C. I. O. unions, meeting this 6th day of January 1939, at Virginia, Minn., asks that the Congress immediately appropriate not less than $1,000,000,000 for the continuation of W. P. A. up to June 30, 1939. We are convinced that this is the most immediate duty which faces the Congress. Unless action is taken within the first weeks of January, 3,200,000 American workers and at least 10,000,000 human beings who are dependent upon them will face disaster: Therefore be it

Resolved, That Congress, knowing the facts, should face this emergency in an American way, and should appropriate the funds necessary to carry on the activities of W. P. A.; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to Congressman WILLIAM PITTENGER and United States Senators HENRIK SHIPSTEAD and ERNEST LUNDEEN.

SOCIAL SERVICE EMPLOYEES' UNION,
New York, N. Y., January 14, 1939.

The Honorable E. LUNDEEN,
Senate Chambers, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We regard the relief appropriation, reduced by the House of Representatives, as a real menace to the welfare of our country and its citizens.

We see the conditions of the unemployed at first hand and we can vouch for the deprivations that have occurred to millions, even under last year's appropriations.

We urge you to think of the President's proposal of $875,000,000 for W. P. A. in terms of human beings and to adopt the administration's minimum appropriation.

Very sincerely yours,

WILLIAM PIEHL, Organizer.

MOUNTAIN IRON, MINN., January 13, 1939.

Hon. Senator ERNEST LUNDEEN,
Washington, D. C.:

DEAR SIR: Labor conditions on the iron range demand continuance of W. P. A.

We pray you will use your utmost efforts in endeavoring to pass an extra appropriation to take care of this need.

Yours truly,

THE VILLAGE COUNCIL OF MOUNTAIN IRON, MINN.,
ANTON CERKVENIH, Village Clerk.

UNITED RUBBER WORKERS OF AMERICA,
Red Wing, Minn., January 26, 1939.

Hon. Senator LUNDEEN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Feeling that any cut in the $875,000,000 appropriation asked by President Roosevelt to continue Works Progress Administration would mean starvation to many unemployed fellow citizens and a halt to business revival, the United Rubber Workers of America, Local 31, went on record at their last meeting to ask your support in the passage of the entire appropriation of $875,000,000.

Respectfully yours,

HOWARD RAPP,
Recording Secretary.

FEDERATION OF ARCHITECTS, ENGINEERS, CHEMISTS AND TECHNICIANS,
St. Paul, Minn., January 27, 1939.

Senator ERNEST LUNDEEN,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

SENATOR LUNDEEN: We wish to emphatically urge that you support either the President's proposal of an appropriation of $875,000,000 for W. P. A. or the proposal of the Congress of Industrial Organization for an appropriation of $1,000,000,000 for W. P. A. for the balance of the fiscal year.

It has been vividly called to our attention that not only is there a need for the continuation of the W. P. A. in Minnesota in its present status, but that conditions caused by a change of administration as well as an unusual reduction of activities of some of the State departments—notably the highway department—make it necessary that increased activities should be undertaken by the W. P. A. Hundreds of people have been laid off from the highway department who have no place to turn for employment. No logical answer can be given these people concerning what they are supposed to do. If the interest of the National Government is to have a continuation of our present economical system it certainly seems an unusual procedure for the Government, at this time, to further the cause of the extreme radicalism toward which these people thrown out of work are naturally forced.

May we urge that you give utmost concentration to this problem.

Sincerely yours,

STUART GREEN,
General Secretary.

Whereas Congress has cut W. P. A. appropriations $150,000,000, leaving a sum for W. P. A. inadequate to meet the needs of the unemployed; and

Whereas this cut will mean hunger and misery for millions of our citizens: Be it hereby

Resolved, That we, the auxiliary of the Lake Superior Newspaper Guild, demand of our Senate that it immediately restore the appropriation for W. P. A. to the full amount suggested by the President.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

During the delivery of Mr. LUNDEEN's speech,

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUNDEEN. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I wish to see if we can reach some agreement with respect to a vote on the amendment. I assume that we probably cannot reach a vote on it today. Easter is approaching; and the spirit of Easter, which is the spirit of peace, is no doubt having its influence here.

In that spirit I ask unanimous consent that at an hour not later than 2:30 on Monday next the Senate shall proceed to vote on the pending amendment and all amendments thereto, and that the time be equally divided between those who favor and those who oppose the amendment, the time to be controlled by the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] in favor of the amendment, and by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] in opposition to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWELLENBACH in the chair). The Senator from Kentucky submits a unanimous-consent request that not later than 2:30 o'clock on Monday the Senate shall vote on the pending amendment and all amendments thereto; that the time on Monday shall be equally divided between the proponents and opponents of the amendment, and shall be controlled by the Senator from Florida and the Senator from Colorado, respectively.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. LUNDEEN. If the Senator will pardon me one moment, I should like to say that if any agreement is reached I hope I may be given permission to put in the RECORD certain telegrams which I have received from all the great cities in the country, and particularly from my own State of Minnesota, and various articles, data, information, and statistics dealing with the question under consideration.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I am willing to ask unanimous consent now that the Senator from Minnesota be permitted to put those matters in the RECORD in connection with his remarks.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Otherwise, I shall have to inflict them on the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky with reference to the request of the Senator from Minnesota concerning printing certain matters in the RECORD in connection with his remarks?

The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, just a moment. Under the unanimous-consent agreement the Senator will not lose his status by reason of the inclusion in the RECORD of the matter to which he has referred. He can go forward and speak for the remainder of the day, and on Monday until 2:30 o'clock.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, the Senator would not be entitled to have the floor on Monday and occupy the whole time.

Mr. McNARY. No; but he can go on from now until Monday.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am sure he can.

Mr. McNARY. I think the Senator can work that out in his own time a little later. I should not want the present proposition to interfere with his speech.

Mr. President, the hour suggested for the vote to be taken was 2:30, I believe.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. McNARY. I am almost persuaded to accept that proposition. It is very much like the one I made yesterday, except I think we should limit the debate to 15 minutes for each speaker. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] made an able statement yesterday. Over the years, I have seen much of the time allotted under agreements of this kind used by one or two Members of the Senate. Even though the time is used intelligently, I think we should limit the time of each Senator to 15 minutes.

Mr. BARKLEY. In that connection, under my unanimous-consent request, the time would be under the control of the two Senators referred to. They can yield as much of it as they desire to any Senator speaking on their side. It seems to me that will obviate the necessity of limiting debate by unanimous consent.

Mr. McNARY. It would if the Senators in question would insist on the limitations being strictly observed; but I have seen instances when Senators, because of the great courtesy we observe among ourselves, have hesitated to ask other Senators to shorten their speeches. My proposal was for the purpose of making it easy for all concerned.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say to the Senator that all the debate up until now has been on the side favorable to the amendment; and it may be desirable for some member of the committee, or perhaps some other Member of the Senate, to speak longer than 15 minutes, and that matter ought to be left to the Senator who controls the time.

Mr. McNARY. I ask the Senator from Colorado if he would rather have it done in that fashion, by the two Senators controlling the time, or by limitation fixed by the Senate itself?

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, a number of Senators have suggested to me that they desired to speak against the amendment. Two things are involved. If the time is evenly divided, I doubt that quite enough time would be afforded if we were to limit the debate to 2:30 p. m. In other words, I do not see that it makes any great difference whether we fix the time for a vote at 2:30, 3 o'clock, or 3:30.

As the Senator from Kentucky has stated, practically all the argument has been on one side of the question. So far as I am concerned, I have been eager to have a vote. I am willing to let matters rest; but I think there are some things that ought to be explained. I know the Senator from Kentucky wishes to say something on the subject. I do not care how the time is divided, so long as there is a reasonable division and opportunity offered for each side.

Mr. McNARY. I will not insist on the limitation; I shall leave that to the able Senator from Colorado; but I cannot agree to go beyond 2:30.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Kentucky? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. LUNDEEN. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am compelled to leave the Chamber. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business today it stand in recess until 12 o'clock noon on Monday next.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

CONFIRMATION OF NOMINATIONS EN BLOC

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the Senator yield to me also to ask, as in executive session, that the nominations on the calendar of executive business be confirmed en bloc, with the exception of the first name on it, that of Miss Florence Clarke Lynch, which went over at the suggestion of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]?

Mr. LUNDEEN. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. BARKLEY. I make that request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky. The Chair hears none, and the nominations referred to are confirmed en bloc.

(The nominations referred to are those of Frederick I. Thompson to be a member of the Federal Communications Commission, and sundry nominations of postmasters, all of which appear at the end of today's Senate proceedings.)

IN THE ARMY

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota yield to me in order that I may report a number of Army nominations?

Mr. LUNDEEN. I am glad to yield to the able and distinguished Senator from Texas.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, as in executive session, from the Committee on Military Affairs, I report back favorably all routine appointments in the Army which were referred to the committee on the 3d of April.

These nominations, which total nearly 600, are all of a routine character, none being appointments to general officer grades. In order to save the expense of printing this large list of names on the Executive Calendar, I ask unanimous consent for their immediate consideration and confirmation en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas? The Chair hears none, and the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, in order to bring about a further saving in printing, I ask unanimous consent that the RECORD shall not contain the printed names of these officers, but shall refer to them as having been nominated by the President on a particular date.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See end of today's Senate proceedings.)

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, to expedite the work of the War Department, I ask unanimous consent that the President be notified at once of the confirmation of these nominations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered, and the President will be notified.

After the conclusion of Mr. LUNDEEN'S speech,

RECESS TO MONDAY

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, under the order previously entered, I move that the Senate take a recess until Monday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 32 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Monday, April 10, 1939, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate April 8 (legislative day of April 6), 1939

SENATE

MONDAY, APRIL 10, 1939

(Legislative day of Thursday, April 6, 1939)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God, who, for our redemption, didst give Thine only begotten Son to the death of the cross, and by His glorious resurrection hast opened unto us the gate of everlasting life: Grant to each one of us Thine especial blessing at this glorious Eastertide, and, if it may be, vouchsafe to us clearer vision, stronger, finer impulses, and steadier, graver purpose for the sacred work whereunto Thou hast called us. Gracious Father, in whom all creatures live, especially those whom we've loved long since and lost awhile, we commend to Thy fatherly love and care our beloved comrade, whom Thou but yesternight didst call out of the body into the higher life. Grant that in that sphere of light and advancement all that is noble may live and grow in him and whatsoever is imperfect may be done away. Take in Thy arms of tender mercy the dear one for whom especially we pray; grant that in Thy holy keeping she may find peace and comfort, and by the sacrament of our sympathy may be sustained. O Life Eternal, quicken us to believe and hope serenely, to dream nobly, and to know the restlessness of divine discontent until we find our perfect rest in Thee. We ask it in the name of the risen Saviour, Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Saturday, April 8, 1939, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. MINTON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Caraway	Hatch	McNary
Andrews	Clark, Idaho	Hayden	Maloney
Ashurst	Clark, Mo.	Herring	Mead
Austin	Connally	Hill	Minton

Taft	Truman	Walsh
Thomas, Okla.	Tydings	Wheeler

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS], and the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] are detained from the Senate on public business.

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS] is unavoidably detained.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER] is absent because of illness in his family.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

DEATH OF SENATOR LEWIS, OF ILLINOIS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, because of the tragic and unfortunate death of one of the most beloved and outstanding Members of the Senate, no business will be transacted by the Senate today. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] desires to offer appropriate resolutions.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, in announcing to the Senate that my colleague from Illinois, Senator JAMES HAMILTON LEWIS, passed into the Great Beyond on yesterday, I do so with a heart that is heavy and laden with sorrow. I confess my absolute inability to express adequately in words my deep feelings upon his passing.

While every sigh of the whispering wind brings death somewhere, yet it grieves us surely to learn that Almighty God, in His infinite wisdom, has taken one of our colleagues who, as a citizen, soldier, and statesman, has devoted his life to promoting the basic and fundamental principles of this Republic.

Though by the death of Senator LEWIS I have lost a dear friend and a wise counselor, my personal loss pales into insignificance when compared with the loss sustained by the State of Illinois and the Nation.

Ever a stalwart champion of Illinois and a zealous guardian of her rights and prerogatives, he was, above all, a picturesque statesman and a sincere patriot in the fullest meaning of those words. His penetrating scholarship and his courtly gentility cannot be replaced in the United States Senate.

I shall not detain the Senate longer, but at some later date I shall beg leave of the Senate to deliver an address in commemoration of the deeds and life of this great and good man.

Mr. President, I send to the desk appropriate resolutions and ask unanimous consent for their immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolutions will be read.

The legislative clerk read the resolutions (S. Res. 118), and the Senate proceeded to their consideration, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow and deep regret the announcement of the death of Hon. JAMES HAMILTON LEWIS, late a Senator from the State of Illinois.

Resolved, That a committee of 16 Senators be appointed by the President of the Senate to take order for superintending the funeral of the deceased Senator.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I cannot let this moment pass without saying a word concerning Senator LEWIS.

During all the history of this Nation no more brilliant or colorful man has ever occupied the stage of public life within its borders. When I was a schoolboy in Kentucky, I recall reading in the newspapers about JAMES HAMILTON LEWIS, then a Member of the House of Representatives from the State of Washington. His career has been unique. He served one term in the House of Representatives from that State named for the Father of his Country, at the end of which he retired to private life and resumed the practice of his profession. He disappeared somewhat from public view like a sunken river that later, in some unexpected place, rises again above the surface to flow between verdant shores, and to bless all with whom it comes in contact.

Years after his service in the House Mr. LEWIS removed to Chicago, where he became corporation counsel of that great city. In 1912 he was elected to the United States Senate from the State of Illinois, being the last Senator to be elected to the Senate by the legislature of that State instead of by the people. At the end of a 6-year term, which was marked by patriotism and ability and brilliance, in which he drew his shining sword in combat here, friendly though it was, against the ablest and the most militant Members of this body, he was defeated for reelection. In 1930 he was again returned to the Senate by the voice of the people of Illinois, and in 1936 was reelected to a second consecutive term, being a third time in the Senate.

I join in the encomiums uttered by his colleague the able and brilliant young Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS]. It will not be difficult to replace JAMES HAMILTON LEWIS in the Senate; it will be impossible.

Without regard to geographical location or political persuasion, I think we will all admit that JAMES HAMILTON LEWIS, with all the attributes of a courtly gentleman which he possessed, with the keen and well-trained and scholarly mind which was always his chief weapon in debate and in forensic consideration, not only occupied in the Senate but occupies in our hearts, and will occupy in our memories, a place which cannot be filled by any other Member of this body within our recollection.

Only 3 days ago I received from him in Chicago a telegram asking me to record him on any vote according to my own wishes. Mr. President, that was a compliment from my friend and colleague which I appreciated and which I shall always treasure very dearly.

Not only have we lost a statesman, not only have we lost a scholar, not only have we lost a patriot, not only have we lost a gentleman in the highest sense of the term, but we have all lost a personal friend in the death of Senator LEWIS.

Peace to his ashes, and expanding glory to his influence and to his memory among all who here served with him, and all the millions in America who admired and knew him, and among whom his name was, and will remain, a household word.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, our eloquent colleague of yesterday was gentle, kindly, and beloved by every Member of this body, irrespective of party affiliations.

With a slight interruption, for 21 years I served with JAMES HAMILTON LEWIS in the Senate. I formed for him a deep affection, and I shall mourn his loss the remainder of my life.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will subsequently appoint the members of the committee authorized by the resolution.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the funeral of Senator LEWIS will occur in this Chamber at 2:30 p. m. on Wednesday; and on tomorrow suitable resolutions providing for the funeral will be offered.

The VICE PRESIDENT subsequently, under the second resolution, appointed the following Senators to take order for superintending the funeral of the deceased Senator: Mr. LUCAS, Mr. BARKLEY, Mr. McNARY, Mr. BORAH, Mr. ASHURST, Mr. PITTMAN, Mr. KING, Mr. CAPPER, Mr. GEORGE, Mr. WAGNER, Mr. VANDENBERG, Mr. BAILEY, Mr. AUSTIN, Mr. CLARK of Missouri, Mr. GERRY, and Mr. MINTON.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, as a further mark of respect to the memory of our deceased colleague, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 17 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, April 11, 1939, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, APRIL 10, 1939

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O crowned Son of God, above the surpassing glory of sun and star, Thou hast set the lamps of heaven. We praise Thee that the permanent truth of the universe is that Jesus lives and is alive forevermore. Hope rises in our breasts and throbs response to this eternal verity. Heavenly Father, lift us to the realm of wise action; may there be no bitterness nor intemperate speech; by diligence and faithfulness may there be a wooing and a winning of that which is best. We entreat Thee for the races of men. May the Light of the World rise with healing in His wings. We are rooted in a common soil and intertwined by the same destinies. As the spring has broken the bonds of winter by which the earth has been held prisoner, O come and light up its destitute and saddened places. Be with our President, our Speaker, and the Congress in the administration of their sacred trust. Grant, O Lord, that the pale, tremulous twilight of these days may soon die away into the glory and promise of a new earth, and Thine shall be the praise. Through Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, April 6, 1939, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. St. Claire, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

H. J. Res. 225. Joint resolution amending the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution providing for the construction and maintenance of a National Gallery of Art," approved March 24, 1937.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 2021. An act to authorize the Department of Labor to continue to make special statistical studies upon payment of the cost thereof, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3790) entitled "An act relating to the taxation of the compensation of public officers and employees."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 10. An act for the relief of the Fred Harvey Transportation Department;

S. 11. An act for the relief of Hubert H. Clark and Dr. W. C. Copeland;

S. 511. An act for the relief of Dolores P. de Williamson;

S. 545. An act for the relief of George H. Pierce and Evelyn Pierce; and

S. 745. An act for the relief of the Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Co.

TAXATION OF COMPENSATION OF PUBLIC OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 3790) relating to the taxation of the compensation of public officers and employees, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the conference report.

The Clerk read the conference report and statement, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3790) relating to the taxation of the compensation of public officers and employees, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 8.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 9, 10 and 13, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 7: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment, and on page 6 before line 1 of the House bill insert the following:

"SEC. 210. For the purposes of this Act, the term 'officer or employee' includes a member of a legislative body and a judge or officer of a court."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 207. No collection of any tax (including interest, additions to tax, and penalties) imposed by any State, Territory, possession, or local taxing authority on the compensation, received before January 1, 1939, for personal service as an officer or employee of the United States or any agency or instrumentality thereof which is exempt from Federal income taxation and, if a corporate agency or instrumentality, is one (a) a majority of the stock of which is owned by or on behalf of the United States, (b) the power to appoint or select a majority of the board of directors of which is exercisable by or on behalf of the United States, shall be made after the date of the enactment of this Act."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 12: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 208. This title shall not apply with respect to any officer or employee of a State, or any political subdivision thereof, or any agency or instrumentality of any one or more of the foregoing, after the Secretary of the Treasury has determined and proclaimed that it is the policy of such State to collect from any individual any tax, interest, additions to tax, or penalties, on account of compensation received by such individual prior to January 1, 1939, for personal service as an officer or employee of the United States or any agency or instrumentality thereof. In making such determination the Secretary of the Treasury shall disregard the taxation of officers and employees of any corporate agency or instrumentality which is not exempt from Federal income taxation, or which if so exempt is one (a) a majority of the stock of which is not owned by or on behalf of the United States and (b) the power to appoint or select a majority of the board of directors of which is not exercisable by or on behalf of the United States."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 14: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: "211"; and the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3790) relating to the taxation of the compensation of public officers and employees, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

On amendment No. 1: The Senate amendment is clerical, and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 2, 3, 4, and 10: The Senate amendments make the changes in existing law proposed by the bill amendments to the new Internal Revenue Code rather than to the Revenue Act of 1938. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 5: The Senate amendment provides that the compensation of judges of courts of the United States who took office on or before June 6, 1932, shall be included in gross income for Federal income-tax purposes for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1938. The present law subjects to Federal income taxation the compensation of so-called constitutional judges taking office after June 6, 1932, and the compensation of so-called legislative judges whether appointed on, before, or after June 6, 1932. The amendment adds to the class of taxable judges only so-called constitutional judges appointed on or before June 6, 1932, because they are the only group of judges now exempt. There is no comparable provision in the House bill. The House recedes.

On amendment No 6: The Senate amendment changes a section number; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 7 and 8: The Senate amendments expressly include within the provision of the House bill under which consent was granted to the taxation by State and local taxing authorities of compensation of Federal officers received after December 31, 1938, Senators and Representatives, and judges and officers of courts. The House bill had the effect of consenting to the taxation of such persons. The conference agreement inserts a clarifying definition which provides that for the purposes of the bill the term "officer or employee" includes a member of a legislative body and a judge or officer of a court. This would, of course, include Senators and Representatives as well as Federal judges and court officers and make them subject to State taxation to the same extent as other Federal officers. It would also include members of the State legislatures, State judges, and court officers and make them subject to Federal taxation to the same extent as other State officers. The House recedes with such an amendment on amendment No. 7, and the Senate recedes on amendment No. 8.

On amendment No. 9: Under the House bill credit or refund of tax for years prior to January 1, 1939, was to be made in the case of State and local officers who filed claim after January 18, 1939, if the Commissioner found that to disallow the claim would be to apply the doctrine of the Gerhardt case, which extended the classes of such persons subject to Federal income tax. The Senate amendment adds the cases of Helvering against Therrell and Graves against O'Keefe. The effect of the amendment is to permit the same relief to be given to the classes of persons as to whom the power to tax was extended by these cases as was given by the House bill to those classes who by reason of the doctrines of the Gerhardt case were brought within Federal taxing power. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 11: The Senate amendment provides that State and local taxing authorities shall not collect any tax after the date of the enactment of the act on the compensation received before January 1, 1939, by officers and employees of the United States or its agencies. An exception to the provision permits collection of tax on such compensation if the person is an officer or employee of a corporate agency or instrumentality of the United States the majority of the voting stock of which is not owned by or on behalf of the United States. There is no comparable provision in the House bill. The House recedes with an amendment which embodies the substance of the Senate amendment with clarifying changes. The first change is to make certain that the Territories and possessions—Hawaii, Puerto Rico, the Philippines, etc.—will not subject Federal officials to tax for years prior to 1939. The second change is one which is designed to define more precisely the corporate agencies of the United States whose employees may not be subjected to tax for back years. Under the conference agreement, in order for the employees to be relieved, the corporation must be one which is exempt from Federal income tax and also it must be either a corporation the majority of the stock of which is owned by the United States or a corporation a majority of the board of directors of which may be selected by the United States. It is believed that the effect of the conference agreement is to leave undisturbed the taxation of employees of instrumentalities of the United States which are essentially private corporations enjoying certain Federal privileges who have heretofore been generally regarded as subject to State taxation.

On amendment No. 12: The Senate amendment provides that after the Secretary of the Treasury has determined and proclaimed that it is the policy of any State to collect tax from persons who are officers or employees of the United States or its agencies, on account of compensation received by them prior to January 1, 1939, the relief granted by title II to the officers and employees of that State or its subdivisions or agencies shall no longer apply. In making the determination as to whether or not the State is taxing Federal employees, taxation by the State of officers or employees of a corporate agency or instrumentality, a majority of the voting stock of which is not owned by or on behalf of the United States, is to be ignored. Thus, taxing such persons by the State will not result in the denial of relief to State and local officers. There is no comparable provision in the House bill. The House recedes with an amendment similar to that made by the conference agreement under amendment No. 11, the effect of which is to describe more precisely the corporate agencies of the United States which are to be disregarded in ascertaining the policy of the State with respect to taxing Federal officials.

On amendment No. 13: The Senate amendment provides that judges of the Supreme Court and other constitutional judges who took office on or before June 6, 1932 (the date of the enactment of the Revenue Act of 1932), shall not be subject to income tax under the Revenue Act of 1938 or any prior Revenue Act. This is a clarifying amendment to make certain that Supreme Court and circuit and district judges (including the Court of Appeals and District Court judges of the District of Columbia) will not be subject to Federal taxation for years prior to 1939. The taxation of judges of so-called legislative courts is unaffected by the amendment. There is no comparable provision in the House bill. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 14: The Senate amendment changes a section number. The House recedes with an amendment making a further change in section number.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the conference report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] may be allowed to address the House for 25 minutes following the legislative program of the day and the previous order of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including a short article on patriotism.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD to include therein an account recently printed in New York and Washington relative to the tornado that visited New England last September.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD at this point a letter which I addressed to the Honorable JOSEPH J. MANSFIELD, chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, and his reply thereto with reference to a river and harbor bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, April 6, 1939.

Hon. JOSEPH J. MANSFIELD,
Chairman, Rivers and Harbors Committee,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR JUDGE MANSFIELD: More than 3 months of this session of Congress have gone by and nothing very definite about a river and harbor bill has been done except to conduct hearings on a few new projects.

When, in your opinion, will it be practical for your committee to report a river and harbor bill?

I believe it is of the utmost importance that the committee report a bill at the earliest possible date so that it reach the floor on regular committee call without having to apply to the Rules Committee for a rule.

I will be pleased to have your reaction in this regard.

With kindest best wishes, I am,

Cordially yours,

CLAUDE V. PARSONS, M. C.

COMMITTEE ON RIVERS AND HARBORS,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., April 7, 1939.

The Honorable CLAUDE V. PARSONS,
Member, Committee on Rivers and Harbors,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. PARSONS: In reply to your inquiry as to when, in my opinion, it will be practicable for our committee to report out a river and harbor bill, I have to say that I think we should do this as soon as possible. I expect to be out of the hospital in a few days, and I hope that in the meantime the committee members will consider carefully the projects we have before us in order that we may be ready to act promptly.

The cost to complete river and harbor projects heretofore authorized is growing smaller each year. Extensive projects for waterway improvements sometimes require 15 or 20 years for completion. The smaller projects cannot always be completed quickly. Even if we are to continue to have an annual river and harbor appropriation as low as $30,000,000, we need a backlog of authorized projects for a proper waterway program to proceed along economical and sound lines. This means that to the present authorization backlog there should be added an authorization for new projects. It should be kept in mind that such an authorization is unlike the huge annual appropriations being made for sundry purposes and is merely provision for orderly governmental procedure in prosecuting sound public improvements, which aid in keeping men off the relief rolls.

As usual the railroads are opposing waterway improvements, and at this time have a particularly energetic and skillful group employed for this purpose. It is my opinion that railway officials are short-sighted in the matter. In the long run the various forms of transportation aid each other. This great country has been developed because of improvements in transportation facilities, and our waterways should not be permitted to fall behind in progress.

The waterway planning both for urgent construction and for long-range improvements is in excellent shape. The Army engineers have investigated thoroughly and after digested consideration have supplied our committee with a large number of excellent projects throughout the United States. We should be able to pass on these projects promptly and report out a river and harbor bill without delay.

For the information of the committee, brief descriptions of reports favorably considered by the Board of Engineers or by the Chief of Engineers are given below. The whole or such parts of these projects as may be agreed upon by the committee can be reported out as soon as the committee is ready to act.

Hendricks Harbor, Maine (S. Doc. No. 40, 76th Cong.): At a small first cost and with nominal annual maintenance a safe entrance can be provided for the substantial benefit of the fishing fleet and for transient recreational craft.

Northeast Harbor, Maine (H. Doc. No. 132, 76th Cong.): The great increase in volume of small-boat navigation has overtaxed the capacity of the good natural harbor. Dredging at relatively small cost will make available a large additional area for safe harboring of transient recreational craft.

Ogunquit-Perkins Cove, Maine (H. Doc. No. 227, 76th Cong.): Local interests will contribute one-half of the cost of providing sufficient depth in Flat Pond and in the entrance channel to permit transient recreational craft to seek shelter, regardless of stage of tide.

Boston Harbor (reserved channel), Mass. (H. Doc. No. 225, 76th Cong.): This channel was improved and has been maintained by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. It serves the general commerce of Boston Harbor and is the only approach to the important Army base in South Boston.

Connecticut River, Hartford, Conn., to Holyoke. Mass. (H. Doc. No. 165, 76th Cong.): This project contemplates the extension of the navigable channel of the Connecticut River from Hartford, Conn., to Holyoke, Mass.

Clinton Harbor, Conn. (H. Doc. No. 240, 76th Cong.): The harbor is used by a great number of small craft from distant places. Local interests will contribute substantially to the cost of dredging and will establish and maintain service facilities for public use.

Greenwich Harbor, Conn. (H. Doc. No. 125, 76th Cong.): The existing harbor is crowded and needed space for accommodation of transient craft can be provided at relatively low cost, of which local interests will contribute half.

Norwalk Harbor, Conn. (H. Doc. No. 220, 76th Cong.): The improvement will remove existing hazards to general navigation; provide a safe entrance channel, and afford much needed sheltered anchorage area. Local interests will contribute one-half the cost of the anchorage.

Little Narragansett Bay, R. I.: In accordance with pending report by the Chief of Engineers, the improvement is to restore depths that have been impaired by natural forces; also to remove certain obstructions which particularly endanger transient recreational boats cruising eastern Long Island Sound.

Orowoc Creek, N. Y. (H. Doc. No. 126, 76th Cong.): This is an improvement of an existing channel provided by local interests to permit water transportation of bulky commodities to suburban Long Island.

Northport Harbor, N. Y. (H. Doc. No. 109, 76th Cong.): The improvement is needed to afford convenient access to excellent facilities that have been provided by local interests for recreational craft operating through Long Island Sound. Local interests will contribute one-half the cost.

Peconic River, N. Y. (H. Doc. No. 237, 76th Cong.): Removal of shore areas in Flanders Bay restricts the use of the improved channel in Peconic River to Riverhead, the county seat of Suffolk County, an important port of call for craft traversing the Long Island Intracoastal Waterway.

Shark River, N. J. (H. Doc. No. 102, 76th Cong.): The entrance to this river has been provided and maintained by the State of New Jersey. It serves a large resort population drawn from the entire country and should be improved and maintained as a Federal project.

New Jersey Intracoastal Waterway, N. J. (H. Doc. No. 133, 76th Cong.): This is an essential link in the intracoastal route from Boston to Miami. The saving in transportation cost of bulk commodities alone distributed over the waterway justifies the cost; in addition, large numbers of recreational craft will have a safe route from New York Bay to Delaware Bay.

Susquehanna River at Havre de Grace, Md.; in accordance with pending report by the Chief of Engineers: This harbor, near the head of Chesapeake Bay and the entrance to the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal, will serve principally the recreational craft traversing the canal and cruising in the upper bay. It provides for the larger vessels facilities made available to small craft at the municipal yacht basin.

Island Creek, St. Georges Island, Md. (H. Doc. No. 99, 76th Cong.): For the benefit of the oyster industry and a harbor of refuge for small boats traversing the wide expanse of the lower Potomac River.

Mill Creek, Md. (H. Doc. No. 100, 76th Cong.): An entrance channel through a sand bar can be provided at small cost to give access to a large bay especially suitable for small-boat anchorage.

St. Catherines Sound, Md. (H. Doc. No. 242, 76th Cong.): This is a small-boat harbor upon which fishermen depend for safety in their precarious occupation. The fishermen offer a cash contribution toward the cost of providing the slight increase in depth which is so important to them in their struggle to earn their living.

Duck Point Cove, Md. (H. Doc. No. 241, 76th Cong.): This improvement is primarily for the benefit of the sea-food industry. Depths in the natural channel are not adequate to permit the free movement of the fishing boats that is necessary to assure deliveries on schedule and avoid spoilage of the catch.

Lower Thoroughfare (Deals Island), Md. (H. Doc. No. 238, 76th Cong.): This is a small project for the benefit of the sea-food industry to permit the use of larger boats and to remove the uncertainty attending dependence on tides. The benefits will greatly exceed the cost.

Town Creek at Oxford, Md. (H. Doc. No. 219, 76th Cong.): This creek in its present condition carries an important general commerce and is the base for operations of an important oyster fleet. The need for adequate depth at all stages of tide was emphasized by the loss of eight lives in a sudden squall in Tangier Sound just off this harbor last February.

Black Walnut Harbor, Talbot County, Md. (H. Doc. No. 217, 76th Cong.): This project serves an island community dependent for its livelihood on the sea-food industry. Improvement of the harbor at small cost to the United States will permit the community to continue to be self-supporting when otherwise it may become a public charge.

Chesapeake Bay to Chincoteague Bay, Va., inland waterway; in accordance with pending report by the Chief of Engineers: This is a link in the coastal waterway between Delaware Bay and Chesapeake Bay. It will reduce the hazards of ocean navigation by small boats now serving the commercial needs of the area and will provide a safe route for those who prefer the coastal waters to the steamship route via the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal and upper Chesapeake Bay.

Appomattox River, Va. (H. Doc. No. 223, 76th Cong.): This river is carrying a substantial commerce on a depth of 10 feet. It serves the industrial city of Petersburg, Va., and is an important feeder of the Intracoastal Waterway. Deepening to 12 feet will permit the economy of through shipment over the Intracoastal Waterway.

Norfolk Harbor, Va. (H. Doc. No. 224, 76th Cong.): The Eastern Branch of Elizabeth River serves an important and growing industrial part of the port. A turning basin has been dredged by private interests to improve conditions in the channel. Some widening of the channel and maintenance of the turning basin will increase the efficiency of the harbor.

Inland waterway from Norfolk, Va., to Beaufort Inlet, N. C. (in vicinity of Great Bridge, Va.) (H. Doc. No. 117, 76th Cong.): The improvement is to protect the canal against damage from storm tides such as those that caused great damage to Government and adjoining private property in 1933 and 1936. The entire cost of protection is less than the loss in one storm.

Chowan River, N. C., and Blackwater Creek (River), Va. (H. Doc. No. 101, 76th Cong.): This project serves an area producing pulpwood and is a feeder to the intracoastal waterway for the products of a large paper mill. Annual transportation savings are six times the cost of the improvement.

Channel from Pamlico Sound to Rodanthe, N. C. (H. Doc. No. 234, 76th Cong.): This channel will serve the need of the United States Coast Guard, and will also provide the necessary facilities needed by the population for transporting mail and supplies.

Channel from Edenton Bay into Pembroke Creek, N. C. (H. Doc. No. 235 76th Cong.): The benefits from this project will accrue primarily to the United States, as it will provide necessary navigational facilities to the fish hatchery in which the Government has an investment of $30,000; it will aid general navigation by providing an access to a sheltered anchorage; and it will facilitate the shipment of lumber, not presently included in general navigation.

Cape Fear River, N. C., at and below Wilmington, N. C. (H. Doc. No. 131, 76th Cong.): The enlargement of the channel and turning basin is warranted by the economies that will result from the safe handling of fully loaded large vessels, and the prospective savings to inland-waterway commerce that will result.

Swan Quarter Bay Waterway, N. C. (H. Doc. No. 239, 76th Cong.): This project will eliminate tolls and permit the establishment of a fish and oyster market. In addition, there will be a resultant saving in time and distance traveled, thus reducing the transportation cost to the local inhabitants.

Rollinson Channel, N. C. (H. Doc. No. 236, 76th Cong.): Benefits resulting from this project will accrue to the following Federal agencies: The United States Coast Guard, the Lighthouse Service, the Weather Bureau, and the National Parks Service. Local and general commerce of the harbor will also benefit.

Abbapoola Creek, S. C. (H. Doc. No. 97, 76th Cong.): The cost of transportation to and from this port will be reduced by eliminating the truck haul to Charleston that is now required during periods of low tide. The improvement will also permit lumber to be transported by barges at reduced cost.

Russell Creek, S. C. (S. Doc. No. 41, 76th Cong.): This improvement will reduce damaging delays experienced in moving farm produce to market. Additional expensive truck hauls now necessary during periods of low flow will be eliminated. It will increase the general small-boat navigation in the vicinity.

Santee, Congaree, and Cooper Rivers, S. C. and N. C.; in accordance with plans approved by the Chief of Engineers: This project contemplates the extension of navigation from the project now under construction up to Columbia, S. C., as well as the development of hydroelectric power.

Winyah Bay, S. C. (H. Doc. No. 211, 76th Cong.): The added depth over the entrance bar is generally desirable to offset the effect of storm waves and of the increased draft of vessels under way. Other benefits include an increase in an already substantial commerce and the resulting savings in transportation costs.

Charleston Harbor, S. C. (in accordance with pending report by the Chief of Engineers): This improvement will permit larger ships to enter the naturally deep harbor and will assure the locality of the savings in transportation costs that these larger carriers make possible. The improved channel will serve the United States navy yard and will have an increased value as a harbor of refuge.

Clark Hill Reservoir, Savannah River of Georgia, South Carolina, and North Carolina, in accordance with pending report by the Chief of Engineers: This is a navigating project capable of developing hydroelectric power and providing some flood control.

Anclote River, Fla. (H. Doc. No. 243, 76th Cong.): Benefits from the turning basin will accrue in general to small-boat navigation by relieving congestion at the sponge wharf, thereby reducing the fire hazard. It will provide much-needed additional anchorage space for recreational craft.

The Atlantic-Gulf Ship Canal across Florida (H. Doc. No. 194, 75th Cong.): This project can be authorized as a whole or one of several self-contained useful units can be authorized at greatly reduced cost. Any one of these units will be a part of the plan for the whole.

Channel from intracoastal waterway to Vero Beach, Fla.; in accordance with pending report by the Chief of Engineers: This improvement will enable small freight boats and recreational craft to move advantageously between the intracoastal waterway and several thriving winter resorts along this part of the lower east coast of Florida.

Canal from intracoastal waterway to St. Josephs Bay, Fla.; in accordance with pending report by the Chief of Engineers: Local interests provided waterway improvements that were effective in reviving and extending the business at Port St. Joe, and resulted in the restoration of railroad service to this port. The contemplated Federal project will take over and enlarge the canal provided by local interests to make it serve as a feeder to the intracoastal waterways.

Apalachicola, Chattahoochee, and Flint Rivers, Ala., Fla., and Ga.; in accordance with pending report by the Chief of Engineers: This is a limited self-contained unit of moderate cost which is an integral part of a comprehensive development.

Mobile Harbor, Ala. (H. Doc. No. 221, 76th Cong.): The contemplated modification of the harbor will take advantage of previous improvements made by the Emergency Fleet Corporation and the city of Mobile and will give access to a large area suitable for the development of terminal facilities. Local interests will be required to furnish assurances that they will provide adequate terminal and manufacturing facilities.

Warrior and Tombigbee Rivers, Ala. and Miss. (lock and dam near Demopolis, Ala.); in accordance with pending report by the Chief of Engineers: Eliminating four existing small locks by the construction of a single lock with larger dimensions will be of marked benefit to the steadily growing commerce moving over this waterway.

The Tennessee-Tombigbee Waterway in Alabama, Mississippi, and Tennessee: This project can be authorized as a whole, or a self-contained unit at greatly reduced cost can be authorized. This unit will be a part of the complete canal project.

Galere Bayou, Miss. (H. Doc. No. 112, 76th Cong.): The proposed channel and turning basin will, for a small cost, afford a necessary and convenient harbor of refuge along a part of the Gulf coast where the many fishing and recreational craft do not at present have a convenient and dependable harbor to run to during storm.

Back Bay of Biloxi, Miss.: For a nominal expenditure the provision of this channel will give access to natural depths in Old Fort Bayou and enable commercial and recreational craft to penetrate farther inland into this important resort area.

The mouth of the Mississippi River, La. (H. Doc. No. 215, 76th Cong.): The important and ever-growing commerce of the port of New Orleans, together with the trend toward the use of larger ships, makes it desirable to modify and consolidate the several existing channel projects in the passes at the mouth of the Mississippi River, with a view to permitting free and uninterrupted passage of larger vessels.

Louisiana and Texas Intracoastal Waterway, from the Mississippi River to Corpus Christi, La. and Tex. (H. Doc. No. 230, 76th Cong.): The movement over this waterway of petroleum, iron, and steel products is steadily increasing in volume. The enlargement of the cross-sectional area of the waterway and the elimination of sharp bends will permit increased capacities of barges, with resulting operating economies.

Guadalupe River and Canyon Dam, Tex. (H. Doc. No. 247, 76th Cong.): The existing channel in the Guadalupe River will be enlarged and a dam will be constructed for stream-flow regulation in the interest of navigation, power development, and flood control. These stream improvements are urgently needed in this area and, together with the hydroelectric power that will become available, will afford widespread benefits.

Houston Ship Channel, Tex. (H. Doc. No. 226, 76th Cong.): The improvement of the channel of Buffalo Bayou behind Brady Island is needed to accommodate larger draft boats now using this channel.

Houston Ship Channel, Tex.: Enlargement of channel and turning basin to accommodate commerce which has developed far beyond expectations.

Ouachita River Channel to Felsenthal, Ark. (H. Doc. No. 104, 76th Cong.): Modification of the existing project is necessary in order to relieve local interests of obligations to construct certain facilities which, due to changed conditions, are not needed. This modification requires no Federal expense.

Lake Erie-Ohio River Canal, Pa. and Ohio (H. Doc. No. 178, 76th Cong.): This project could be authorized as a whole, but a self-contained unit only can be authorized at greatly reduced cost, and such unit will be an integral part of the complete project.

Oswego Harbor, N. Y. (H. Doc. No. 96, 76th Cong.): The proposed improvement consists of dredging and improving the breakwater of a harbor where additional facilities are needed to accommodate shipments of coal.

Rochester Harbor, N. Y. (H. Doc. No. 139, 76th Cong.): The improved channel is needed for commerce exceeding 500,000 tons annually. Less than 1 percent of the commerce is local and a large percentage represents exports to Canada.

Allegheny River Reservoir (in accordance with pending report by the Chief of Engineers): Construction of this reservoir as a unit in the project for the protection of Pittsburgh, Pa., from floods has been authorized, and it is now proposed to raise the dam 10 feet to provide storage for pollution abatement.

Erie Harbor, Pa. (H. Doc. No. 116, 76th Cong.): The project contemplates the preservation of the peninsula of Presque Isle, which serves as a breakwater for Erie Harbor.

Cleveland Harbor, Ohio (H. Doc. No. 232, 76th Cong.): Provision of the proposed turning basin will accomplish for commercial craft an annual saving in time and towing fees of more than three times the annual cost.

St. Joseph Harbor, Mich. (H. Doc. No. 129, 76th Cong.): The proposed improvement will eliminate loss of time and remove a distinct hazard to navigation, as approximately one-half the commerce is now carried in vessels too long for the existing turning basin.

Menominee Harbor and River, Mich. and Wis. (H. Doc. No. 228, 76th Cong.): This project provides for the maintenance of an existing channel in Menominee Harbor.

Green Bay Harbor, Wis. (H. Doc. No. 95, 76th Cong.): The benefits in the saving of time and the cost of moving vessels upstream to existing turning basins and the reductions in the cost of bridge protection and operation more than justify the costs.

Milwaukee Harbor, Wis. (S. Doc. No. 29, 76th Cong.): This project provides for needed extensions to existing channels in Milwaukee Harbor.

Calumet-Sag Channel to Indiana Harbor, Ill. and Ind. (H. Doc. No. 145, 76th Cong.): The proposed widening and extension of the existing project will accommodate the expected traffic of over 8,000,000 tons with estimated benefits three times the costs.

Calumet Harbor and River, Ill. and Ind. (H. Doc. No. 233, 76th Cong.): Improvement of Calumet Harbor by the provision of an approach channel and the extension of an existing breakwater will protect the growing traffic of one of the most important ports on the Great Lakes.

Baudette Harbor, Minn. (H. Doc. No. 216, 76th Cong.): The proposed channel and turning basin will permit the use of the village wharf at times when the Lake of the Woods is drawn down.

Red Wing Harbor, Mississippi River, Minn. (H. Doc. No. 103, 76th Cong.): The small boat harbor proposed will meet the immediate needs of the locality resulting from the provision of a 9-foot channel on the Upper Mississippi River.

Mississippi River at Cochrane, Wis. (H. Doc. No. 137, 76th Cong.): The report in this document covers payments for damages resulting from the operation of navigation pool No. 5, Upper Mississippi River project.

Mississippi River at McGregor, Iowa; in accordance with pending report by the Chief of Engineers: Adequate depths for the increasing number of transient and visiting craft are greatly needed at McGregor, Iowa.

Mississippi River at Chain of Rocks, St. Louis, Mo. (H. Doc. No. 231, 76th Cong.): The report on this project sets up a comprehensive plan, including navigation and water-front development, at the city of St. Louis. The navigation plan only can be authorized or the comprehensive development can be authorized.

Missouri River, Sioux City to the mouth, Missouri, Kansas, Iowa, and Nebraska (H. Doc. No. 214, 76th Cong.): This document recommends increasing the Missouri River project from a 6-foot to a 9-foot depth. A substantial commerce is already developing on the partially completed 6-foot project and indications of steady increases in traffic warrant a 9-foot channel.

Monterey Harbor, Calif., in accordance with pending report by the Chief of Engineers: Dredging is needed to provide full use of existing wharves and facilities for receiving fresh fish and for repairing and servicing boats.

Sacramento River flood control, California: The item for this project in the River and Harbor Act of August 26, 1937, is amended by adding thereto a proviso to authorize an additional contribution by the Federal Government for completion of the project previously adopted.

Columbia River at Arlington, Oreg. (S. Doc. No. 28, 76th Cong.): The development of Arlington as the natural point of transfer serving an important farming and mining area in north Oregon is essential to realize the full savings from water transportation on the improved Columbia River Channel.

Columbia River at Camas, Wash. (H. Doc. No. 218, 76th Cong.): Port development at Camas will eliminate terminal and handling charges in the transshipment of commerce to and from ocean carriers at Vancouver, Portland, and other deep-water terminals.

Tacoma Harbor, Wash. (H. Doc. No. 124, 76th Cong.): Further extension of the deep-draft channel is badly needed, and the Federal expenditures proposed are fully warranted by the estimated benefits to the important foreign commerce at this locality and by the substantial expenditures for harbor improvements heretofore made by local interests.

Metlakatla Harbor, Alaska (H. Doc. No. 138, 76th Cong.): A protected small-boat basin is greatly needed to afford protection of the fishing boats and other property of the Indians of the Metlakatla Reservation, who depend upon the fishing industry as their principal means of livelihood.

Meyers Chuck Harbor, Alaska (H. Doc. No. 222, 76th Cong.): The construction of a breakwater will provide a protected harbor of refuge for the inhabitants of the village of Meyers Chuck, who are dependent on their fishing industry.

Wrangell Narrows, Alaska; in accordance with pending report by the Chief of Engineers: Greater depth, width, and improved alinement of the channel and provision of an anchorage area are essential to assure the safe operation of the large vessels now in use in Wrangell Narrows, a part of the protected route from Puget Sound to the Gulf of Alaska.

Harbor of Apra on the island of Guam: A suitable harbor to accommodate ocean-going vessels and afford refuge from the open sea is needed at Guam, which is over 1,000 miles distant from the nearest existing haven for large vessels and is in a zone subject to typhoons.

Yours very truly,

J. J. MANSFIELD,
Chairman, Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert at this point in the RECORD a resolution of the Lowe-McFarlane Post of the American Legion, of Louisiana.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

Be it remembered that on this the 16th day of March 1939 at a regular meeting of Lowe-McFarlane Post, No. 14, of the American Legion, held at Shreveport, La., the following resolution was introduced and unanimously adopted; be it

Resolved, That every effort be used to induce the United States Veterans' Administration to locate a hospital and home for domiciliary care in the Fourth Congressional District of the State of Louisiana.

Whereas the members of this post feel that Shreveport, La., is the proper place for this hospital and home, due to the fact that the larger number of veterans in need of hospitalization and care live in and near Shreveport, La.;

Whereas it has come to the attention of the Legion that at times there is a delay of as much as 2 months in getting a veteran in the hospital for treatment. These delays cause undue suffering to those in need of immediate attention;

Whereas the Lowe-McFarlane Post feels that a hospital located in Shreveport, La., which is in the extreme northern part of the State of Louisiana would not only serve the veterans in north Louisiana, which is isolated from the other sections of the State having hospital facilities but will also serve east Texas, south Arkansas, and northwest Mississippi territory, and it is the belief of this post that Shreveport would be the most centrally located point to serve this area; be it

Resolved, That the Honorable OVERTON BROOKS, Congressman of the Fourth Congressional District of the State of Louisiana, be requested to use his influence and vote in having the United States Veterans' Administration and the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs locate a hospital and other facilities necessary for the care of veterans in Shreveport, Caddo Parish, La.; be it also

Resolved, That this post now express its thanks and gratitude to Congressman OVERTON BROOKS for his past untiring efforts in this matter.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may be given 5 additional days to prepare my W. P. A. address, because I have been delayed somewhat in getting the information.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I was very much interested in this morning's United States Daily News, a very reliable paper and authentic, giving an account of the amount of cotton that has been exported the past several years.

The 10-year average, from 1922 to 1932, was 8,000,000 bales; 1933, 7,534,000 bales exported; 1936, 5,598,000 bales exported; 1938, 3,800,000 bales exported—less than one-half of the year 1932. I feel confident the Bankhead cotton bill is responsible for the decrease in exports.

Mr. Speaker, if the reciprocal trade agreement policy were working properly, and if we were looking after the affairs of the cotton farmers of America in a proper way, we would try to bring about some arrangement under which we could export more cotton, inasmuch as we are growing more and more cotton in order to take care of the cotton farmers of the South. We now have on hand owned by the Government over 25,000,000 bales, and we produce over 12,000,000 a year. What is going to happen?

We need some real men in government to handle the affairs of the Nation today. This spending spree must stop. We must cancel the reciprocal-trade agreements. Put in a tariff to protect the American laborer, the American farmer, and the American manufacturer. Let us change the N. L. R. B., the Wagner Act, and put the 12,000,000 unemployed men back to work in industry and get them off the W. P. A. and P. W. A. in a hurry before it is too late or we will go into bankruptcy. What will you do about it?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SECCOMBE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address delivered by Hon. E. G. Causer, of Canton, Ohio.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a very short statement by Walter Winslow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a supplemental statement by William H. McMasters, of Cambridge, Mass., to the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including a short editorial from the Chicago Tribune of the issue of Saturday last.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein part of a letter from Secretary Wallace.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. IGLESIAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and to place therein a speech delivered by the president of the senate of Puerto Rico.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein a resolution adopted by the Wisconsin County Boards Association.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

AMENDING NATIONAL HOUSING ACT

Mr. SABATH, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following resolution (H. Res. 155), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

House Resolution 155

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of H. R. 5324, a bill to amend the National Housing Act, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 3 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA BUSINESS

The SPEAKER. Today is District of Columbia Day, and the Chair recognizes the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH].

SUFFRAGE IN THE DISTRICT

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, before bringing up the single item of legislation from the Committee on the District of Columbia, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point and to include therein two editorials from the Times-Herald, of Washington, and the Evening Star, of Washington, on the subject of possible suffrage for the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the Washington Times-Herald]

MR. SUMNERS HAS CHARACTER; DEMOCRACY HAS A CHANCE

On May 18, 1938, the House Committee on the Judiciary met to consider House Joint Resolution 564 (LEWIS-RANDOLPH) and House Joint Resolution 232 (CAPPER-NORTON), proposing various ways to amend the Constitution and provide suffrage for the District of Columbia.

On May 20, 1938, the committee adjourned, having permitted several dozen voteless taxpayers of the Nation's Capital to "blow off steam" as the cynics put it. Those who oppose democracy and self-government here said, "Well, it's all over, now. Those boys will just bury it and we won't hear any more of this. SUMNERS is from Texas. He'll never do anything about votes for Washington on account of the Negroes." Well, the cynics and the self-assured enemies of suffrage got a shock yesterday.

Chairman SUMNERS introduced a resolution to amend the Constitution which combines most of the elements of the Lewis-Randolph and the Capper-Norton resolutions, and provides some additional points evidently devised by him.

To evaluate you have to know some details of each resolution. Here are the main points of each.

Capper-Norton (the oldest and most limited):

The Congress shall have power to admit to the status of citizens of a State the residents of the District constituting the seat of Government of the United States, created by article I, section 8, for the purpose of representation in the Congress and among the electors of President and Vice President and for the purpose of suing and being sued in the courts of the United States, under the provisions of article III, section 2.

When the Congress shall exercise this power the residents of such District shall be entitled to elect one or two Senators as determined by the Congress or such other representative in the Senate as Congress may provide for, Representative in the House according to their numbers as determined by the decennial enumeration and presidential electors, equal in number to their aggregate representation in the House and Senate or as Congress may provide.

Lewis-Randolph (broadest):

Section 1: The Congress shall have power to establish a republican form of government for the District constituting the seat of Government of the United States. The government so established shall have such legislative, executive and judicial officers, to be selected in such manner as the Congress shall be law provide; and such government shall exercise such legislative, executive, and judicial powers over the said District as the Congress shall by law provide.

Section 3: The Congress shall by law provide for the times, places, and manner of holding elections for the officers of the government of the said District, and the Representatives, Senators, and Presidential electors, herein authorized, and for the qualifications of the voters at such elections.

And now the Sumners resolution:

Section 1: The Congress shall have power to provide for the people of the District constituting the seat of the Government of the United States, representation in the Congress and among the electors of President and Vice President no greater than that of the people of States, and to delegate to such government as Congress shall establish therein all or any of its power over said District; and the judicial power of the United States shall extend to controversies to which citizens of said District shall be parties the same as to controversies to which citizens of the States shall be parties.

Section 2: All legislation hereunder shall be subject to amendment and repeal, provided that no amendment or repeal shall affect the office of a Senator or Representative during the time for which he was elected.

You can see that the Capper-Norton plan provides no authority for Congress to transfer to a local government the powers of legislation and taxation essential to the democratic process. It is hesitant concerning representation in Congress, and is positive only on voting for the President and Vice President, and on establishing our technical position in the courts.

MIDDLE OF THE ROAD

The Lewis-Randolph resolution is a full and unrestrained proposal for permanent republican government here, making the District, in effect, an irrevocable forty-ninth State of the Union. We like it best of all for it makes us equal forever with the people of the rest of the Nation.

The Sumners formula strikes a middle ground, providing Congress with all the power necessary to establish local self-government, representation in Congress and a voice in Presidential elections, but retaining for Congress the ultimate authority to revoke any or all these if the national interest so demands. In this, it appears there is still some doubt that the people of Washington are the equals of the people of the States, though they have to pay taxes, obey the laws, and die in war with all other Americans.

But we are not quibbling with Mr. SUMNERS on that matter of an irrevocable transfer of power. The great thing is that any transfer at all is suggested.

More than suggested.

HE GOES IN TO WIN

Chairman SUMNERS is a man of character. He does not introduce measures lightly. He believes the District of Columbia is entitled to the kind of government his resolution outlines and he intends to see that it gets that kind of government. Of that you may be assured, for he is not a liberty-faker. He does not wrap himself in the flag when doing so is histrionics. He acts on conviction, and when convinced he does not retreat.

No stronger friend could be found in Congress. Mr. SUMNERS belongs with Senators ARTHUR CAPPER, of Kansas, and J. HAMILTON LEWIS, of Illinois, and Representatives MARY NORTON, of New Jersey, and JENNINGS RANDOLPH, of West Virginia, in our catalog of patriots.

Let us all join with these five and go in to win, this session of Congress:

Votes for Washington.

[From the Washington Star of April 6, 1939]

THE SUMNERS AMENDMENT

The constitutional amendment proposed by Chairman SUMNERS, of the House Judiciary Committee, enabling Congress to confer national representation and other privileges now denied to them upon the people of the District of Columbia, gains added importance because of the circumstances preceding its introduction.

Chairman SUMNERS, one of the real leaders of the House, presided at the hearings before his committee last year on the two somewhat similar resolutions—the Capper-Norton and the Lewis-Randolph—proposing constitutional amendments. The resolution he now sponsors is reasonably to be interpreted, therefore, as meeting his own views and, it is hoped and believed, the views of his committee colleagues as to the language and scope best designed to assure success of an amendment in meeting the test of congressional and State ratification.

Still more important to the people of the District is the fact that Chairman SUMNERS, in proposing the amendment—which he discusses briefly in a special article elsewhere in today's Star—champions the principle of national representation for the District of Columbia; equal status for District citizens with the people of the States and aliens before the Federal courts; and their right to a voice in the Government which taxes them and sends them to war. Quoting from his article, "There is something fundamentally inconsistent in a government such as we have, a government by the people, which would deny to nearly a half million persons all voice even in their Federal Government, although in the judgment of Congress they could have such voice with no hurt to the Federal rulers. This amendment would remove that inconsistency."

That inconsistency is what the people of the District want removed and they will eagerly endorse Mr. SUMNERS' plan of procedure in removing it. This endorsement becomes the more enthusiastic because the Sumners amendment contains nothing that is hostile to the basic spirit of previous proposals or those now pending. It is naturally disturbing to Washingtonians to find in the proposed amendment that the grant to them of the right to participate in their Government which taxes them and may send them to war should be subject to a possible withdrawal of that right by a majority vote of Congress.

If, however, the grant could not be obtained at all without reservation of the power of withdrawal, the Washingtonian might reassure himself by the thought, as suggested indirectly by Representative SUMNERS, that the power of withdrawal would never be exercised; that if the Americans represented by two-thirds of Congress and three-fourths of the States had, in effect, approved the Americanization of the Washingtonians, he would never by these Americans be de-Americanized.

The Sumners amendment does not go as far as the Lewis-Randolph amendment, in that the latter, in effect, proposes amendment of the "exclusive legislation" clause of the Constitution—at least it raises the question of continued retention of such powers as the courts have construed them. The Sumners amendment, on the other hand, retains and in its phraseology can be seen to emphasize the principle of the paramount control over the District of Columbia which the Constitution vests in the National Government. In this respect it follows the theory of the Capper-Norton amendment, whose advocates have always argued that the grant of national representation to the people of the District does not need to mean and does not mean the surrender by Congress of its supreme power of control.

As Mr. SUMNERS points out in his article for the Star, the grant of representation in Congress and the electoral college to the people of the District involves no loss of power to Congress, no loss of power to the people of the States and leaves to Congress the unquestioned right to delegate those of its powers in local government which it chooses. There is no conflict here with the principle of the Capper-Norton amendment, but additional support from a powerful quarter—such support being expressed in language which, in the highly respected opinion of Mr. SUMNERS, gives it added weight with the Members of Congress and the people of the States.

HOURS OF DUTY FOR FIREMEN OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the District of Columbia, I call up the bill (H. R. 3314) to provide shorter hours of duty for members of the Fire Department of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, in order to reduce hours of labor in the fire-fighting division of the Fire Department of the District of Columbia, which now are greatly in excess of those required in industry and other Government services, said hours being 10 hours per day and 60 hours per week when on day duty, and 14 hours per day and 84 hours per week when on night duty; and to improve service and efficiency, and promote morale among said officers and members, upon the passage of this act, or as soon thereafter as necessary additional personnel can be obtained, there shall be granted to each officer and member of the Fire Department of the District of Columbia required to serve under the two-platoon system, 2 consecutive days off duty each week of 7 days, which shall be in addition to his platoon tours off duty, to his annual leave and sick leave now allowed by law or official regulation; and no member of the fire department shall be required to remain on duty more than 70 hours per week on night platoon duty nor more than 50 hours per week on day platoon duty: Provided, That compensatory time, in addition to regular annual and sick leave, shall be allowed any officer and member of the fire department for all of the 8 legal holidays on which he may be required to be on duty: Provided further, That under conditions which may be defined by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia as emergencies of such a character as to require the service of all or any member of the fire department during their normal off-duty hours, the chief engineer of the fire department shall have authority, and it shall be his duty, in person or by power delegated to subordinate officers, to require such duty during the continuation of such emergency, but compensatory time, in addition to platoon tours off duty, and to the annual leave and sick leave now allowed by law or official regulation shall be allowed later to those affected by the extra time so worked during the said emergency period.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, lines 8, 9, and 10, strike out "70 hours per week on night platoon duty nor more than 50 hours per week on day platoon duty" and insert "an average of 60 hours per week."

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, this legislation comes to the House from the District Committee after hearings were held which disclosed that the firemen in the District of Columbia have been working approximately 72 hours per week. Throughout the States and the cities from which the membership of this body come I think it is a known fact that firemen work perhaps 60 hours per week, and, in many instances, a less number of hours. We are attempting to establish a 60-hour workweek here in the District of Columbia and provide that compensatory time, in addition to regular annual and sick leave, be allowed to any officers or members of the Fire Department for any legal holiday on which they may be needed on duty or for any time in excess of the 60-hour limit they may be required to work due to any emergency that might arise.

The Fire Department occupies a unique position in the District of Columbia, answering about 5,000 calls a year and operating on a 24-hour basis every day in order to give adequate protection.

These fire fighters are loyal public servants and the guardians of life and property in the Nation's Capital.

It is an interesting fact that out of the total annual appropriations for the District of Columbia the Fire Department uses only about 5 percent of that amount, whereas in most cities the appropriation for the Fire Department amounts to about 9 percent of the total.

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Yes; I yield to my colleague from Michigan, a member of the committee.

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I think it will be well to state that a similar bill passed the House last year.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Yes; the gentleman is correct.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Yes; I gladly yield.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Merely to say that from the far-off State of Arizona I have had two resolutions from fire departments there asking that this bill be passed.

Mr. SECCOMBE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Yes; I yield to a member of the committee.

Mr. SECCOMBE. To state that firemen at the present time receive 4 days off a month. Being a fireman is one of the most hazardous positions in the Nation. These men do not come under the wage and hour bill, and for that reason I think they are justified in asking for a 60-hour week, and from time to time I think there is no one who suffers more than do the firemen in respect to the allocation of both their conditions and wages and hours. I merely mention this in support of what the gentleman says.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I am delighted to have the gentleman from Ohio contribute to the debate. I feel that this measure is most meritorious.

Mr. Speaker, if there is no further discussion I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, that is the only item of legislation to be brought before the House today by the committee.

INCREASED AUTHORIZATION FOR APPROPRIATIONS FOR ADMINISTRATION OF STATE UNEMPLOYMENT COMPENSATION LAWS

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5482) to increase the authorization for appropriations for the administration of State unemployment compensation laws; and, coupled with that, I ask unanimous consent that general debate may proceed not to exceed 1 hour, one-half the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] and one-half by myself; the debate to be confined to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. JONES of Texas). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 301 of the Social Security Act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 301. For the purpose of assisting the States in the administration of their unemployment compensation laws, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, the sum of $4,000,000, for each fiscal year thereafter up to and including the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, the sum of $49,000,000, and for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, and for each fiscal year thereafter, the sum of $80,000,000, to be used as hereinafter provided."

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, the pending bill (H. R. 5482) is before the House for consideration under a unanimous report from your Committee on Ways and Means.

This bill seeks to make one rather simple, specific amendment to the Social Security Act. The report filed by the committee is comprehensive and complete and will afford all Members detailed information on any phase of the question with regard to which they may desire definite information.

The Social Security Act provides, in titles III and IX, for a Federal-State system of unemployment compensation. Title IX lays certain taxes on employers of eight or more individuals, and provides that when and if any State passes an unemployment compensation law and taxes such employers for the purpose of paying benefits to unemployed individuals the employer may credit the taxes paid to such States against the Federal tax, up to 90 percent of the Federal tax. This leaves 10 percent of the total taxes under title IX in the hands of the Federal Government.

Title III of the Social Security Act provides that, for the purpose of assisting States in the administration of their unemployment compensation laws, certain appropriations shall be made by Congress. The Social Security Board is authorized to grant to the States which have unemployment compensation laws, approved by the Social Security Board, the total amount which may be necessary to cover the cost of proper administration. The act as written provides that for each fiscal year after 1936 the Congress is authorized to appropriate the sum of $49,000,000 for this purpose.

At the time the Social Security Act was written it was not known definitely just how fast the States might enact State unemployment compensation acts, or just how fast this plan or program might develop. For the time being it was thought that the amount of $49,000,000 authorization for appropriations would be adequate, and it has proven adequate up to this time; but now it appears that the States adopted unemployment compensation plans perhaps faster than we had anticipated at the time the Social Security Act was enacted. So it now appears that all States of the Union have passed unemployment compensation acts, and all States of the Union except two are now actually paying benefits under their unemployment compensation acts. Those two States will begin the payment of benefits in July of this year. Therefore the situation has developed that the authorization for the appropriation of these funds for the various States of the Union for the administration of their unemployment compensation acts, is not adequate to provide the funds that are found to be necessary. For the present fiscal year the fund will be adequate except possibly for the last quarter of this year, and for succeeding fiscal years as the States further develop their programs, it is thought from the best information your committee has been able to secure, that an additional authorization from $49,000,000 up to $80,000,000 will be necessary to provide adequate funds for the various States for this purpose.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. This is simply an authorization bill?

Mr. COOPER. That is true.

Mr. COCHRAN. The question of amendments to the act itself has been receiving consideration of the Ways and Means Committee and will come in at a later date?

Mr. COOPER. That is correct. I might say to the gentleman that the Committee on Ways and Means began hearings on the Social Security Act on February 1. About 57 days have been devoted to public hearings on the Social Security Act. The public hearings were closed last Friday afternoon. Naturally your committee will have to go into executive session now to consider all of the various matters presented in course of the public hearings, and as soon as reasonably possible will report legislation to the House for consideration.

Mr. COCHRAN. I thank the gentleman for the information, as we are receiving a great deal of mail with reference to the Unemployment Compensation Act, and suggestions are being offered to perfect it. We are looking forward to some future date when the committee will bring in a bill that will perfect existing law and make it more workable.

Mr. COOPER. Of course, during the course of the hearings many matters were brought to the attention of the committee with respect to present title III and title IX of the Social Security Act, which are the titles relating to unemployment compensation. That is under consideration now by the committee. This is one specific matter rather in the nature of an emergency, to simply increase the amount of the authorization so that proper appropriations may be made to provide for the States to continue to function as they have in the past in carrying forward the program for unemployment compensation.

Mr. TREADWAY. In the last remarks the gentleman made he practically covered the inquiry I was about to make. Is it not further a fact that this special item is brought before the House at this time in the nature of an emergency to assist the States to meet the expenditures authorized under the Social Security Act for which the Government is not in a position to contribute beyond $49,000,000?

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman is correct; that is the situation exactly.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. I yield.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. What is the proposed amendment to the Social Security Act which has aroused such protests from the ministry?

Mr. COOPER. That, of course, has nothing to do with the pending bill, but I am glad to give the gentleman an explanation of it, because all of us have received similar requests from ministers and others interested in religious institutions.

I may say to the gentleman from Tennessee and for the information of the House, that your Committee on Ways and Means has already met in executive session and decided that the exemptions of the present Social Security Act with respect to religious, educational, and other nonprofit institutions, also with respect to agricultural labor and domestic servants in the home, will not be changed. No change in those exemptions will be recommended by your committee.

Mr. GORE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. I yield.

Mr. GORE. Is it not true that the maximum authorization of $80,000,000 will not approximate the total 10-percent collection which comes from the Federal Government?

Mr. COOPER. The situation is that up to the present time the 10 percent has amounted to about $90,000,000, and it is thought that the authorization of $80,000,000 in the years of the future will still be well within the 10 percent which is provided under the Social Security Act which now provides for grants to the States for the administration of their programs.

Mr. GORE. In other words, this authorization does not go so far but that the act can be self-sustaining in its administrative features?

Mr. COOPER. That is true. It is estimated on the basis of the best information we have been able to secure that the 10 percent will still be adequate to cover the $80,000,000 authorized.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina, the chairman of the committee.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, the $90,000,000 referred to by the gentleman from Tennessee is not the total amount received up to this time, as I understand; but the amount received approximates $90,000,000 per year. It was $90,000,000 for the year 1937.

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. I yield.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. The gentleman stated a while ago that the committee had definitely decided not to include religious, educational, or nonprofit organizations. I have been memorialized in a great many letters by our fraternal benefit societies, which are rather strong in the State of Missouri, asking that they likewise be exempted. Will the gentleman from Tennessee inform us whether or not it is contemplated to include these organizations in the amendment?

Mr. COOPER. I may say to the gentleman from Missouri that the matter is definitely under consideration by the committee. While that particular phase of it is somewhat different from the exemptions now included in the Social Security Act with respect to religious, educational, and other nonprofit institutions, we have definitely under consideration the very point to which the gentleman has referred, and I am hopeful that we shall be able to work out something satisfactory along that line.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. I may say to the gentleman from Tennessee that the people of my State who belong to these organizations are very strongly opposed to being included in this program, and I want the gentleman to have that information in considering the matter.

Mr. COOPER. I think that matter has been adequately presented to the committee during the course of the hearings, and I am sure that it will receive careful consideration.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. I think, for the benefit of the gentleman from Missouri, that it might be well to have the RECORD show that the societies he mentions are not opposed to the act. They constitute a small group of fraternal societies, credit unions, and small chambers of commerce. Under the existing law, the Internal Revenue Department has construed an officer as being an employee for the purpose of tax collections, taxes applying to an employer of eight or more people.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. I yield.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. I am referring to fraternal insurance societies, insurance organizations. They are fraternal organizations.

Mr. McCORMACK. There are many groups in a similar situation, affected by the interpretation placed upon the law by the Bureau of Internal Revenue. I, like the gentleman from Tennessee, can assure my friend that the committee has the matter under very serious consideration, and I join with him in his expression that we are hopeful that the gentleman's specific problem and other similar problems will be met in any bill which the committee reports.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. I thank the gentleman for the explanation.

Mr. COOPER. I thank the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. I yield.

Mr. POAGE. Possibly I failed to catch the trend of the discussion, but as I understand it, this appropriation is simply to take care of the unemployment compensation feature of the Social Security Act. Is it simply to take care of the payment of compensation? As I understand it there are two divisions: There is the payment of unemployment compensation and then there are the employment bureaus who seek to place unemployed persons in jobs.

I know in my State last fall we reached a situation where there was plenty of money available to keep up the payments and the compensation office force had plenty of money to exist and to handle payments of the insurance, but there was no money to carry on the work of placing unemployed people in jobs. Does this take care of both of those situations or only the one?

Mr. COOPER. Of course, as the gentleman will readily see by reference to the bill itself, this is only an authorization. The Ways and Means Committee cannot report an appropriation bill. This is an authorization for grants to be made the various States for the administration of their unemployment insurance or unemployment compensation programs. The point that evidently is in the gentleman's mind is with respect to the employment service. That is taken care of under the so-called Wagner-Peyser Act, which provides for a cooperative arrangement or system for operating the employment agencies throughout the various States.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. POAGE. Will this appropriation make possible additional help to those State employment agencies that are trying to place men in jobs?

Mr. COOPER. This bill does not authorize an appropriation for that purpose. It authorizes an appropriation in order to make contribution to the States for the administration of unemployment compensation.

Mr. POAGE. Which covers simply the insurance feature?

Mr. COOPER. I may say to the gentleman, however, that the Social Security Board under the unemployment compensation title of the present act does make contributions to the various agencies, and these unemployment agencies receive definite benefits under this arrangement.

Mr. POAGE. It will receive that out of this money?

Mr. COOPER. The same as in the past.

Mr. POAGE. The trouble is they have in the past cut down on many States where the greatest demand is, of course, to find placements or to find jobs for people. This, of course, cuts down the number of payments they have to make on the insurance side. They have been given plenty of money to pay the insurance, but have been cutting off money which could be used to find new jobs for people out of work.

Mr. COOPER. I think the gentleman has specifically in mind the Wagner-Peyser Act. The Committee on Ways and Means does not have jurisdiction over that matter. The Committee on Labor has jurisdiction.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. With further reference to the matter brought up by the gentleman from Texas, in my State we have these unemployment offices set up under the Wagner-Peyser Act. The last State legislature, believing that they constituted possibly an unnecessary expense, but at least a function that might be handled by some other agency, made no appropriation for the continuance of those employment offices. The question rose as to how the determination of people who may be eligible for unemployment compensation benefits under this particular legislation may be made. It has been proposed as a possible solution that the social-security offices which are recognized by the Social Security Board for the certification of people for old-age assistance and also for the certification of people for employment by the Works Progress Administration be recognized as the office or agency for the administration of the unemployment-compensation law. We found some difficulty, however, with the Social Security Board recognizing that branch, although, of course, the gentleman from Tennessee recognizes that the Social Security Act provides that the Social Security Board may recognize these employment offices or such other agencies as it may desire.

Does the gentleman feel, if this further appropriation is authorized for the Social Security Board, that the Board will adopt the policy of recognizing the available agencies we may have in my State under the circumstances I have described?

Mr. COOPER. I do not think the question in the gentleman's mind is directly involved in this bill.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The gentleman will see that those of us who feel that the Social Security Board is not disposed to recognize such other agencies hesitate to vote in favor of granting them additional appropriations unless it is going to recognize such agencies.

Mr. COOPER. I think the gentleman is confused with reference to the question here under consideration. The question of grants-in-aid to the States for the operation of employment agencies is a matter that comes under the Wagner-Peyser Act. That is not under the jurisdiction of the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I understand that.

Mr. COOPER. It is my understanding that legislation seeking to amend the Wagner-Peyser Act is now under consideration by the Committee on Labor. This is a different matter. This simply allows the gentleman's State, as well as all other States of the Union, to receive the necessary funds and make it possible for them to administer their unemployment-compensation program. The purpose of this bill is to increase the authorization so that sufficient funds may be appropriated for this purpose.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. But if they fail to recognize the only available agencies we have in the State, the matter is a moot question.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. MASSINGALE. The confusion that seems to exist in the House applies to my State. It is a prerequisite to receiving this aid that a person shall have been employed and shall have contributed to the fund itself prior to the time he receives it.

Mr. COOPER. Of course, the applicant must qualify under the terms of the Social Security Act and the Unemployment Compensation Act of the State in which he lives. Not only the Federal act but the State law determines the question of qualification.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Is it a prerequisite that the applicant shall have been on a pay roll prior to the time he can receive any benefits under this act?

Mr. COOPER. Yes; he must have had the required period of so-called covered employment, but I cannot answer the gentleman's question specifically because I am not familiar with the State law of his State. Of course, the State law of the gentleman's State, along with the Social Security Act, controls the question of eligibility.

Mr. MASSINGALE. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. As a matter of fact, the State law is the determining factor?

Mr. COOPER. That is true.

Mr. McCORMACK. All the Social Security Act provides is certain basic requirements to which the State law must conform, but outside of that the State law is practically unlimited with regard to what its provisions shall be and eligibility for unemployment compensation is for all practical purposes determined by State law.

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman is absolutely correct. The Federal act lays down certain broad standards to which State acts must conform. Of course, all details of the administration, as the gentleman from Massachusetts very properly suggests, come under the State act.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I believe that, generally speaking, the agency which administers unemployment insurance as covered by the bill under consideration today is not the same agency which supplies employment, to which the gentleman is referring. I do not know whether that is the case in every State, but I believe it is, because the Federal law provides very strictly what kind of an agency this must be. I do not know of any State where they would have the same board administer these two activities.

Mr. COOPER. In further reply, I believe it may be well to point out that rather generally throughout the country there is close coordination between the unemployment-compensation agencies and the employment-service agencies.

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. CARLSON. The facts are that payments for unemployment compensation have been made out of these same offices, and that the group which is dealing with the unemployment service under the Wagner-Peyser Act has made these payments and been reimbursed from funds of the Social Security Board.

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman is correct. There has been a very close coordination along that line.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Has not the interpretation been made to the effect that if the Social Security Board grants money for the operation of the work of the employment service, it is thereby making a contribution to the State which has to do with the administration of unemployment compensation?

Mr. COOPER. If I understand the gentleman's question correctly, I believe that is true.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. If that is true, then would it not follow that it would be possible for assistance to be given under this interpretation out of these funds for the work of finding jobs for people through the employment service?

Mr. COOPER. As I endeavored to point out, there is cooperation between these two agencies, the unemployment-compensation agency and the employment-service agency, throughout the various States.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I know that in my own State the employment service has gotten more money from the Social Security Board than it has through the Wagner-Peyser Act.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I should just like to call attention to one other item in connection with this bill that is now under consideration, and that is it is shown in the hearings we had before our committee that much better progress has been made in this country than was made in Great Britain so far as the amount of money necessary to administer the unemployment compensation law is concerned. It took that country 15 or 20 years to bring its cost of administration down to about 10 percent, whereas our cost of administration is now below that figure. Therefore, I believe a splendid job has been done by the Social Security Board and on the whole by the various States throughout the Union. This additional authorization is now found to be necessary in order that they may continue to carry forward this splendid program. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, in view of the nature of the discussion and the inquiries that have just been made of the gentleman from Tennessee, who has given such a splendid explanation of the bill, I am first going to yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

THE BOARD SHOULD RECOGNIZE OTHER AGENCIES WHEN EMPLOYMENT OFFICES ARE NOT AVAILABLE

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, with further reference to the matter on which I interrogated the gentleman from Tennessee, there is no confusion as to what this bill does and there is no confusion as to the connection between the employment offices in South Dakota and the function they serve in the certification of people for the payment of unemployment-compensation benefits. The bill before us proposes to increase the funds from which the Federal Social Security Board may contribute to the State administration of unemployment-compensation laws. The question I raise is simply whether in a period when a State may have no employment offices under the Wagner-Peyser Act, whether the Social Security Board will recognize some other agency to handle unemployment compensation, a thing for which the basic law makes definite provision.

I have in my hand a copy of the Social Security Act, title III and title IX of which both provide that the Board in handling unemployment-compensation benefits may utilize either public-employment offices in the State or "such other agencies" as the Board may approve. I read paragraph (a) under section 303, which states:

The Board shall make no certification for payment to any State unless it finds that the law of such State, approved by the Board under title IX, includes provisions for—

There follow several subsections and subsection (2) reads as follows:

Payment of unemployment compensation solely through public-employment offices in the State or such other agencies as the Board may approve.

The particular problem we have in South Dakota is that the State legislature in its wisdom, which I am not here to prove or disprove, decided a few weeks ago not to make an appropriation for the employment offices that then were being conducted, apparently feeling that the work could be handled by the county-welfare or social-security offices which we have in each county seat. Under the Wagner-Peyser set-up we have had 14 regional offices or employment offices. Some people feel that these 14 regional offices have been so scattered that they have not been able to give the close attention to employment and unemployment problems that would be given were offices to be maintained in each of the 64 counties of the State. Therefore, with no State funds to continue the State's Wagner-Peyser employment offices, it has been suggested that the Social Security Board should recognize the county-welfare offices for the certification of persons for the payment of unemployment-compensation benefits. It would be intolerable that our employers should be required to pay unemployment-compensation taxes and have their unemployed unable to receive the benefits.

In the section of the law that I read it was clearly and definitely provided that the Social Security Board might recognize agencies, other agencies than employment offices, in administering unemployment compensation.

I am not here to argue that one agency is better than another. It may be desirable to have the agency that pays insurance to the jobless be the agency that is seeking to place people in jobs. It may be that it is bad sociology for a man who wants either a job or his job insurance to report each week to the office where other jobless people are seeking work on W. P. A. as they do at our county-welfare offices. It may be that there is no handicap to those who have lost their jobs to travel from 150 or 300 miles each week to check in before they can qualify for their weekly unemployment compensation. There have been only 4 employment offices to serve the 24 counties in my district, with an area the size of Kentucky.

Those are all interesting questions, but the practical question that concerns the employees and employers in my State is whether the Social Security Board will recognize some agency to administer the unemployment-compensation fund.

I realize this is purely an authorization bill to increase Social Security's funds for making grants to States in the administration of their unemployment-compensation laws. But we must insist that they use it for that purpose fairly among the States and not as a club over them. The employers in my State pay their unemployment taxes the same as in any other State.

Accordingly, in all fairness I must say, or serve notice, so to speak, that unless the Social Security Board is willing to operate under the specific provision in the Social Security Act which authorizes them to recognize other agencies when employment offices under the Wagner-Peyser Act are not available, that I, as a member of the Appropriations Committee, will feel bound to propose that any appropriations made under the authorization herein proposed must be accompanied by a limitation to provide that these funds shall not be available unless the Social Security Board finds some solution or recognizes some agency for the administration of the State's unemployment-compensation laws, including the certification of people for unemployment-benefit payments. Why increase the funds unless they are used for the purpose intended?

In justification of this position I may point out that these social-security offices in each county seat in my State are all recognized by the Federal Social Security Board for the certification of people under other titles of the Social Security Act. They certify the people for old-age assistance. They certify the people for assistance to the blind. And the Works Progress Administration accepts their certification as to the eligibility of people for work under the W. P. A. program. So we can see no reason why their certification should not also be recognized by the Social Security Board under title IX for unemployment compensation.

As I have pointed out, the Social Security Act expressly sets forth that the Social Security Board may recognize employment offices "or other agencies," and under the circumstances described, where we face a practical problem, I feel the Board should recognize the "other agencies." [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER].

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this measure coming so promptly to our attention, as it has given very considerable concern in the State of Maine as to whether the provision would arise in sufficient season to prevent curtailment of the activities in unemployment compensation which would be most unfortunate in view of the widespread stagnation.

It is my undestanding that if action is taken here today as promptly as would be indicated and the matter goes to the Senate, final action may be completed before April 15, by which time I understand Maine, at least, will be in need of allocation of the additional funds for which this measure would provide.

I want also to say that I trust the Social Security Board will continue a sympathetic attitude in viewing the problems of the various States in its administration, to which reference has been made here.

It may be that the citizens of Maine and their officials are unduly sensitive because of differences in viewpoints that have existed in the past, but it is my impression the matter is working out very satisfactorily at the present time so far as reports received by me are concerned; and I trust that the very prompt cooperation of the Congress, as indicated by this action, will be interpreted by the Social Security Board as meaning that they, too, should view with sympathy the problem of the States and not use the very tremendous powers which are necessarily lodged in them in any arbitrary or bureaucratic fashion. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT].

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, in the heavily industrialized State of Pennsylvania we are much concerned with the problem of unemployment, and in cooperation with the Social Security Board, Pennsylvania established its unemployment-compensation commission. At the present time we maintain a central office at Harrisburg and 100 field offices, and in accordance with the wire I have in my possession from the director of our department of labor and industry, the Honorable Lewis G. Hines, unless additional appropriation is authorized by this Congress, it will be necessary to curtail the efforts of the commission.

At this time, in order that the Congress may know that we in Pennsylvania approve of the compensation commission and want to continue our efforts for the relief of the unemployed, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD as a part of my remarks the telegram I have received from the Honorable Lewis G. Hines.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pensylvania?

There was no objection.

The telegram referred to follows:

HARRISBURG, PA., April 5, 1939.

Congressman JAMES E. VAN ZANDT,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

On March 31 the director of unemployment compensation of the Social Security Board informed the writer that the Chairman of the Social Security Board had on March 16 informed the Acting Director of the Budget that in addition to $9,000,000 appropriated by the first deficiency bill the Board estimated that $11,700,000 additional would be required for balance of current fiscal year for grants to States for operation of unemployment-compensation and employment-service agencies and that further on March 28 the Acting Director of the Budget replied stating that no further supplemental estimates could be considered unless Congress enacts legislation increasing the limit of $49,000,000 now in the Social Security Act; and further, that there could be no assurance even if authorized limit were increased that additional funds would be provided for current fiscal year. Until deficiency appropriation was available to the Social Security Board only about one-half of the grant for first calendar quarter was remitted to Pennsylvania. I am informed that funds now available to the Social Security Board are only sufficient to pay expenses of administration of unemployment compensation and employment service through the month of April. It is urgent therefore that sufficient additional funds be furnished by the Congress for the balance of fiscal year. Understand that Ways and Means Committee has reported favorably bill H. R. 5482 increasing statutory limitation on appropriations. It is imperative that not only for Pennsylvania but for all States that the necessary legislation be passed to furnish the essential funds so that we can operate during the months of May and June. The 100 employment offices and central administration cannot continue to pay unemployment compensation and render service if funds are not made available.

LEWIS G. HINES,
Secretary, Department of Labor and Industry.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CARLSON].

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to use any time on this bill. The bill has the unanimous approval of the Ways and Means Committee, as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER] stated, but I saw a very interesting newspaper clipping from my home district this morning. It occurs to me it might be of interest to the House. Here in Congress we discuss and hear so much about unemployment that we begin to believe there are no jobs available.

The Salina Journal of April 7 carried a report of the progress being made by the Kansas State Employment Service. The Kansas State Employment Service district office, working under the Social Security Act and the Wagner-Peyser Act, has submitted a most encouraging report for the first quarter of 1939. The United States Employment Service in this district has placed 352 workers since January 1, and it is estimated by Mr. Floyd H. Shield, manager of the Salina office, that about 25 percent of the 352 will have permanent jobs. The United States Employment Service is rendering a real service, and nothing must be done to decrease its efficiency. As they are receiving a large portion of their funds from the Social Security Board, I was fearful there might be a tendency on the part of the Social Security Board to demand that those who are receiving social-security benefits be given first consideration when it comes to reemployment. This would be unfair in a large section of our country. In the agricultural and nonindustrial area most of our workers are not covered by the social-security unemployment insurance as the larger portion of our businesses employ eight people or less. In addition to this group we have the unemployed veterans and detached agricultural workers. Should the Social Security Board insist that those receiving unemployment insurance be given first consideration for employment, it would work to the disadvantage of the other groups. During the discussion on this bill in committee I called these facts to the attention of Dr. Arthur J. Altmeyer, Chairman of the Board, and he assured me they would be fair with all unemployed individuals. In my opinion, we will not have national prosperity until private industry and business are able to largely absorb the unemployed. This Congress can render no greater service to our Nation than to remove many of the restrictions which are withholding private enterprise. During the past few years much time has been devoted to reform programs. We should now begin to spend more time on a program of recovery.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARLSON. Yes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I think the gentleman is raising an important point. If they should do that, it is perfectly patent there will be some people left out of the purview of this expenditure, because there are many who do not have employment status, that would enable them to get compensation under the Social Security Act. In other words, take, for instance, an agricultural employee, or, for instance, a man who mows lawns or who works part of the time. He has no status under the Social Security Act, and if they take over this whole class this fellow might be left out.

Mr. CARLSON. As I stated, that is a real danger, and I do not say that it will happen; but I can see possibilities where that might work to the disadvantage of workers in agricultural sections.

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARLSON. Yes.

Mr. DISNEY. There was no evidence before the committee on that subject, was there?

Mr. CARLSON. The gentleman will remember that I asked Dr. Altmeyer that very question and he stated that he did not think we should have any fears about it. Personally I am fearful that the Social Security Board will take over the entire employment service to the disadvantage of some individuals.

Mr. DISNEY. There was no evidence of any such experience in the operation of this. There is no evidence that has come to the committee that there will be any taking over.

Mr. CARLSON. That is very true, but under the present set-up, the United States Employment Service is receiving a large portion of money under the Wagner-Peyser Act. In the future they may not receive this money and the costs will be paid by the Social Security Board. If that is the case then it would be only natural for the Social Security Board to ask them to take care of those drawing unemployment compensation.

Mr. DISNEY. Suppose the Wagner-Peyser Act appropriation is complete. Still the issue would be here in Washington between the employment service and the Social Security Board.

Mr. CARLSON. Of course we realize that this United States Employment Service is handled by the Department of Labor, and this fund deals only with the Social Security Board.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the remainder of my time.

It is a splendid way to begin Monday morning after Easter by being in hearty accord upon two matters brought in by the majority of the Committee on Ways and Means. We disposed of one in a favorable manner a few minutes ago. I trust that within the next few minutes this present bill will be similarly disposed of. I can see no serious reason for any delay in passing this measure, as it is presented to the House as an emergency measure, and not as a part of the general program of revision of the Social Security Act. Naturally, the Members of the House have the Social Security Act in mind, and as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER] so well said a few moments ago, the Committee on Ways and Means has a tremendous task on its hands in bringing in a satisfactory revision of the present Social Security Act.

I would hesitate to prophesy that the same harmony and unanimity of expression of opinion is likely to exist on that great measure when the Ways and Means Committee finally makes a report as today appears on the two measures now before us.

In view of this unanimity of expression on the part of the entire committee, I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, at this point in my remarks to insert the report of the committee on this bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The Committee on Ways and Means, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5482) to increase the authorization for appropriations for the administration of State unemployment-compensation laws, having had the same under consideration, report it back to the House without amendment and recommend that the bill do pass.

GENERAL STATEMENT

The Social Security Act provides, in titles III and IX, for a Federal-State system of unemployment compensation. Title IX lays certain taxes on employers of eight or more individuals and provides that when and if any State passes an unemployment compensation law and taxes such employers for the purpose of paying benefits to unemployed individuals, the employers may credit the taxes paid to such States against the Federal tax up to 90 percent of the Federal tax. This leaves 10 percent of the total taxes under title IX in the hands of the Federal Government.

Title III of the Social Security Act provides that, for the purpose of assisting States in the administration of their unemployment-compensation laws, certain appropriations shall be made by Congress. The Social Security Board is authorized to grant to the States which have unemployment compensation laws approved by the Social Security Board, the total amount which may be necessary to cover the costs of proper administration. The act as written provides that for each fiscal year after 1936 the Congress is authorized to appropriate the sum of $49,000,000 for this purpose.

At the time the act was written there was no way of knowing how rapidly the States would respond to the incentives so provided, by passing unemployment compensation laws. Consequently, it was impossible to predict what amount might be necessary in future years to cover the costs of administering such laws. The sum of $49,000,000 was probably a reasonable limit on appropriations for this purpose during the initial period. However, the States have responded very rapidly, as everyone might have wished, and today every State in the Union has an unemployment-compensation law and all but two States are actually paying benefits to unemployed workers—and these other two will begin to pay benefits in July.

The costs involved in developing such a program have thus increased more rapidly than might have been anticipated at the outset. During the fiscal years 1937 and 1938 the necessary appropriations were well within the authorization of $49,000,000 fixed in the Social Security Act. During these years the State agencies were gradually developing, and their necessary expenditures increased as their operations expanded. At the present time, with all but two States actually paying benefits, operations are at a level which requires expenditures well beyond the $49,000,000 authorized by the Social Security Act. The Board has already found it necessary to grant to the States for the current fiscal year almost $49,000,000, and it seems likely that approximately $12,000,000 more will be needed to carry through the fourth quarter. Beginning with the first quarter of the next fiscal year, all States will be paying benefits, so that the expenditures are likely to be not less than $17,000,000 or $18,000,000 per quarter for the present activities.

Information which the Social Security Board has made available indicates that the cost of administering those State systems which have been longest in operation was at a maximum during the first few months after benefits were first paid. If this experience is indicative of what may be expected in other States, it would seem that expenditures at the present time are probably as high for all of the States taken together as they are likely to be, except as additional functions are required of the State agencies. There are some such added functions which must be provided for. Certain activities connected with so-called "employers' merit ratings" are authorized by the Social Security Act but have been undertaken by the various State agencies only to a very limited extent because of the pressure of more immediate problems. However, inasmuch as the majority of State laws provide for merit rating to go into operation in the near future, a large part of the annual cost involved in the operation of such a program will need to be incurred in the fiscal year 1940, so that the modified rates can be put into effect in 1941. It will be necessary, therefore, to increase the appropriation for the coming fiscal year above the amount required for present operations.

Although the Federal Social Security Act now exempts certain classes of employees from coverage, the tendency at the present time is to amend the State acts to include certain of these exempted occupations. Furthermore, many State unemployment-compensation laws have extended coverage to employers of one or more rather than limiting coverage to employers of eight. These developments naturally increase somewhat the costs of operation of the State programs.

When consideration is given to these various factors it seems clear that the total cost of operating the State systems may eventually reach $80,000,000 per year. In order that the Congress may be in position to make the necessary appropriations for carrying on this important service, it seems both necessary and advisable at this time to amend the Social Security Act to increase the authorization in title III to at least $80,000,000.

Such authorization in the basic law does not necessarily mean that this sum will be spent each year. The States are required to present their requests for funds to the Social Security Board and the Board determines the amounts which are actually necessary for the proper and effective operation of the State laws. As experience shows where economies can be made, and as laws are simplified to eliminate some of the more cumbersome and expensive procedures now necessary, expenditures may be expected to decrease somewhat. The experience of the 23 States which have paid benefits since January 1938 justifies this assumption. For the quarter January 1 to March 31, 1939, the allotment to these States was something over a million dollars less than for the corresponding period last year. With a few exceptions the States have, in the main, done a very good job in setting up and getting into operation a system such as unemployment compensation in the short period of 3 years. In some cases costs are probably still too high, but, with the help of the Social Security Board, these States, too, may be expected to bring their operations in line with the general experience.

It should be pointed out, too, that the $80,000,000 suggested as a maximum authorization is well within anticipated receipts from the 10 percent of pay-roll taxes under title IX which will be retained by the Federal Government. The actual collections in the year 1937 were over $90,000,000, and the estimate for 1938 is somewhat above that amount. Unless business activity should be much less in the future than anything we have known in the last 5 years, collections may be expected to run over $90,000,000 annually. Since the 10 percent retained by the Federal Government was intended to cover the costs of administration of the unemployment-compensation system, an authorization of $80,000,000 annual appropriation is therefore very conservative.

It may be mentioned in passing that during the early years of the English system costs were regularly well above 10 percent of collections. To be sure, the coverage was small and costs relatively large, but these costs ranged from 26 percent in 1913 down to 10.5 percent in 1922–23, and were less than 10 percent for only 3 years up to 1932. In view of this experience, a 10-percent operating cost would not seem unduly high, and the system as a whole in this country is actually operating well below that level.

CHANGES IN EXISTING LAW

In compliance with paragraph 2a of rule XIII of the Rules of the House of Representatives, changes in existing law made by the bill are shown as follows: Existing law proposed to be omitted is enclosed in black brackets; new matter is printed in italics; existing law in which no change is proposed is shown in roman.

"SEC. 301. For the purpose of assisting the States in the administration of their unemployment compensation laws, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, the sum of $4,000,000 [and] for each fiscal year thereafter [the] up to and including the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, the sum of $49,000,000, [to] and for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, and for each fiscal year thereafter, the sum of $80,000,000, to be used as hereinafter provided."

Mr. TREADWAY. My reason for doing this is that I consider the report a very complete and proper answer to the various questions involved in this bill, and it ought to be thoroughly understood by the membership of this House.

I do not know that it is necessary for me to elaborate at all on the statement made for the committee by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER].

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. There is no authorization in this to take the United States Employment Office from the Department of Labor, is there?

Mr. TREADWAY. That question has been discussed pro and con during the general hearings. There is nothing of that nature in the measure before us, but the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] has given warning that when the measure comes up in the Appropriations Committee he will ask that the Social Security Board take over some of the functions, at least, of the United States Employment Service. I might say further that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER] did not touch upon the point that this question has been considered by the Ways and Means Committee, and both sides have been heard upon the subject. There is not harmony in the two departments involved as to whether or not the United States Employment Service, now in the Department of Labor under the Wagner-Peyser Act, should be amalgamated with the Social Security Board. We had a difference of opinion expressed to the committee at one of the hearings. Directly answering the inquiry of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS], I would say that this bill does not make any reference whatsoever to the United States Labor Employment Service.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. The money could be taken from the Social Security Board and given to the United States Employment Office?

Mr. TREADWAY. It is possible that it could if agreeable to the officials carrying out the purpose of the Social Security Act.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Of course, social security is unemployment insurance and the other is finding jobs. It seems to me they should be separate.

Mr. TREADWAY. There is such a wide difference between the two types, one the payment of unemployment insurance and the other finding jobs for people, that it would seem to be a mistake to combine them.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. TREADWAY. But that is not for me to say.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield.

Mr. LEAVY. The gentleman stated he would make no prophecy as to what will come out of the Ways and Means Committee with reference to amendments to the Social Security Act?

Mr. TREADWAY. That is a correct statement.

Mr. LEAVY. There are a great many Members on the floor of this House, and I think among the American public generally, who are quite interested in knowing whether H. R. 2, the Townsend plan, or H. R. 11, which is the general welfare plan, may come out. Would the gentleman care to make a prediction on that?

Mr. TREADWAY. Not the slightest prediction, not knowing the intention of the Democratic majority. If the gentleman will find out what my colleagues on the Ways and Means Committee on his side of the House think about those two measures or about bringing them out, then I could answer; but under existing conditions my mind is a blank, as is that of the gentleman from Washington—absolutely a blank.

Mr. LEAVY. I think they should both come out, and I am wondering if the gentleman is going to aid us in bringing them out.

Mr. TREADWAY. I would refer the gentleman once more to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means and his associates on the majority side of the House.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Certainly.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman says his mind is entirely a blank as to what the majority of the Ways and Means Committee might do. His own mind is a blank as to what the minority members may do.

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes, indeed.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The mind of the gentleman from Massachusetts is never a blank when it comes to raising partisan questions.

Mr. TREADWAY. We are discussing in a very jocular manner a very serious question. I will answer directly, in all earnestness, to my distinguished chairman that in view of the fact that neither H. R. 2, nor H. R. 11, nor the amended H. R. 11, nor any other social-security matter has as yet been discussed in executive session, I am justified in saying that we know nothing about what is likely to come out in the future. I think that is a fair statement.

Mr. DOUGHTON. But the gentleman did refer to the majority members. I have been hoping——

Mr. TREADWAY. I am perfectly willing to include my colleagues.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes; I yield.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I was hoping that the debate on this entire subject of amendments to the Social Security Act would proceed without any reference to the majority or minority, entirely separate and apart from any partisan consideration, and I still hope so.

Mr. TREADWAY. Have I not stated the fact correctly, that neither of those bills nor any other amendment to the Social Security Act has been given any consideration whatever in executive session, other than the single agreement that we entered into not to include charitable, educational, and religious employees?

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman is absolutely correct on that.

Mr. KNUTSON and Mr. O'CONNOR rose.

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield first to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON].

Mr. KNUTSON. Answering the chairman of the committee, we realize, of course, that the majority was badly handicapped during the absence of the President, but we expect with his return that the majority will know what we are going to do.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I hope that partisanship will not enter into the discussion of a very meritorious measure, such as the one we now have before us, and I would prefer not to answer any further questions, but I will yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Does not the gentleman feel that the millions of people throughout the United States interested in it are entitled to have H. R. 2, known as the Townsend plan, brought to the floor of the House and discussed? Surely they are entitled to know what the Congress wants to do with it.

Mr. TREADWAY. That matter is not under discussion this morning and general debate on the bill is nearly completed. In fact I believe my time has expired or will presently expire. I have yielded time I expected to use for myself in discussing the measure before us in answering my colleague's questions, many of which were not pertinent to the bill, and I would prefer not to get into a further discussion of that matter at this time.

Mr. Speaker, I had intended to use the time remaining in discussing some of the features of this measure, but having probably now consumed my time——

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks by inserting some remarks I expected to make today.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. TREADWAY. The effect of the bill is to increase from $49,000,000 to $80,000,000 the authorized Federal appropriations to the States for meeting the cost of the administration of their unemployment-insurance systems. This increase does not involve any expense to the Federal Government, inasmuch as the appropriations are within the $90,000,000 of revenue which the Government now collects from the pay-roll tax under title IX of the Social Security Act.

This $90,000,000 represents the 10-percent of the Federal pay-roll tax for unemployment insurance which the Government retains after allowing the 90 percent offset for amounts contributed by employers to State unemployment-insurance systems.

The present appropriations are not adequate to meet the needs of the States, but cannot be increased without raising the limit authorized by law. The present limitation of $49,000,000 was not intended to be an upper limit of Federal contributions, but it was thought that this amount would be sufficient while States were setting up their unemployment-compensation systems. However, there has been such rapid progress that all but two States are now actually paying unemployment benefits.

It was the intention of the original act that the amount of pay-roll tax revenue retained by the Federal Government should be used for paying administrative costs. It should be made clear that no Federal benefits for unemployment insurance are paid. The only purpose in imposing a Federal pay-roll tax for unemployment insurance was to force the States to set up systems of their own. This was done through the 90-percent credit device. Presumably the whole 100 percent would have been credited if constitutionally possible. The only alternative is for the Government to use the 10 percent of the tax it retains for the purpose of meeting State administrative costs.

In this way all the money collected through pay-roll taxes for unemployment insurance, both by the Federal and State Governments, is used for unemployment-insurance benefits and administrative costs. It is not expected that the full $80,000,000 authorization will be used at once, but the Social Security Board estimates that about $72,000,000 will be required in the next fiscal year.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK].

Mr. MCCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I join with my distinguished friend from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] in his expression of satisfaction at the spirit of peace and happiness that prevails in this Chamber on Easter Monday. It would be a very fine example for the rest of the world to follow and a very fine example for us to follow during the remainder of this session. If my friends of the minority will continue to follow with this same spirit of cooperation I am sure we shall be able to adjourn somewhere between the 1st of June and the 15th of June. I have in mind, of course, the recent statement made by my distinguished friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN], for whom I have the highest regard that it is possible for one man to have for another. The minority leader said that the expectation of adjournment some time in June was just a hope, that probably it would be sometime in July or August.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts rose.

Mr. McCORMACK. If this fine, this pleasant state of mind continues—Mr. Speaker, I am happy to yield to the minority leader.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman realizes, of course, that the statement I made was to the effect that we had plenty of business to keep us here probably until July. The gentleman from Massachusetts with his great ability, with his fairness, of course, never makes a political speech.

Mr. McCORMACK. Oh, I do, I do! I am not one of those fellows who say they never talk politics. I am just like my friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I apologize; the gentleman does make partisan speeches.

Mr. McCORMACK. Oh, I make political speeches. I would not want the RECORD to carry any other insinuation that I did not make political speeches. Like my distinguished colleague from Massachusetts, I frankly confess that I make political speeches at times, but this is not one of those times.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. What was the gentleman trying to get at concerning the possibility of adjournment by the middle of June?

Mr. McCORMACK. I was saying that my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], in the very fine remarks that he made, referred to the harmonious spirit that prevails in the House on Easter Monday. I just extended the sentiment of his remarks by expressing the hope that this harmonious state of mind would continue; and I stated that if it did continue we would be out of here between June 1 and June 15. Has my friend from Massachusetts any objection to that hope?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Not at all; but I would ask the gentleman if he does not believe that Members of the minority side may have some ideas of their own, and if they do, does he not believe that they should have the right to express themselves?

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is assuming something that does not exist in my mind.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Oh, the gentleman means, does he, that because a matter is proposed, the matter is right?

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman is again assuming something that does not exist in my mind.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I am afraid I cannot imagine what is in the gentleman's mind.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am afraid the gentleman is correct in this particular statement. I now yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

Mr. TREADWAY. I would like to speak in a little less serious vein.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am not speaking in a serious vein. If I were, I would not have made the remarks I just made to my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN]. Our exchange was in a purely jocular vein.

Mr. TREADWAY. May I ask the gentleman whether or not one of the further reasons for his hope of adjournment in June is to a certain extent based on the glories of Massachusetts scenery, the seashore, the hills, and the climatic conditions there that he and I want to return to as early as possible?

Mr. McCORMACK. That is always a strong inducement. I am glad to see that again the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] and I are in agreement this day.

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes; on Easter Monday.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman is not going to take issue with the statement just made by the gentleman from Massachusetts, is he, about the attractiveness of Massachusetts?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I am going to ask the gentleman for some information. I asked the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] the same question and I did not get any information.

Mr. McCORMACK. On the Townsend plan?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes. The gentleman said he would answer the question. May I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK], as a member of the Ways and Means Committee, whether or not he is in favor of reporting H. R. 2 so that the House of Representatives may have an opportunity to vote upon it, talk about it, and discuss it?

Mr. McCORMACK. As far as I am concerned, personally, I am in favor of a vote being taken on this and any similar bill.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact the pending resolution has been ably discussed, especially by my colleague from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER], I see nothing to be accomplished by further discussion of the bill. I do want to make one statement in reference to something that has not been referred to. This is an authorization only. Of course, the Committee on Ways and Means has no authority to appropriate money. This authorization is well within the 10 percent that is paid into the Treasury in the form of a tax for the purpose of administration of the law and imposes no additional burden on the Treasury of the United States. Further, this being an authorization and not an appropriation, the Social Security Board will be compelled to make its case before the Appropriations Committee before $1 of this authorization is appropriated. The authorization is, therefore, absolutely safeguarded and the money will not be appropriated unless the matter is satisfactorily explained to the Appropriations Committee by the Social Security Board.

Mr. REED of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. REED of New York. All that is really involved here in this authorization is simply the question of meeting an obligation which we should discharge to the several States which have since come in under the Social Security Act?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes; obligations for the remainder of this fiscal year and obligations which will arise in future years. The 10 percent retained for this purpose is admitted to be adequate to meet the appropriation which may be authorized under this bill.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, now at the conclusion of the reading of this bill, and before its final passage, I want to say briefly that I favor it and shall not even offer a pro forma amendment to gain 5 minutes to speak on it, although it had been suggested to me that a bill now before the Ways and Means Committee, H. R. 898, which I introduced, would make an appropriate amendment to this act. There has been so much harmony expressed here—perhaps it be the carry-over of the Easter spirit—I do not feel I ought to inject anything into the measure about to be voted on that might stir up controversy. We have been assured by several that legislation amending the Social Security Act will soon be presented, and I think my measure, H. R. 898, will undoubtedly receive consideration at that time. Therefore, I reserve my amendment.

This authorization for the appropriation of money to enable the present social security set-up to function is undoubtedly a proper move. I know that there are needed amendments to the basic act itself, and I hope to see those brought forward soon. Although the Social Security Act was passed before I came to Congress, I approve of the general spirit of the legislation. I have heard many complaints about it and realize that it has imperfections and is in need of remedy. Any new legislation of such far-reaching import is bound to have imperfections. This is an experimental piece of legislation and merits leniency of judgment and sympathetic treatment at the hands of Congress and in the minds of the American people. Both those who are to receive benefits under it and those who must foot the bill deserve our consideration in writing or rewriting the law.

Last year the committee very justly and generously wrote into the Revenue Act of 1938 a provision granting a credit or refund to certain taxpayers who were having difficulty in regard to their 1936 social-security taxes under certain circumstances. I felt then, as I do now, that we should show proper leniency in the collection of this tax and not be too severe for the first few years of its beginnings. I have no desire to shield willful tax evaders, but I do wish to see the Government deal fairly with the taxpayers who may have gotten confused in regard to some of the complexities of this new legislation. For that reason I have again introduced a bill which is the proposed amendment, H. R. 898, as a matter of simple justice to many overburdened taxpayers without weakening the financial structure of this great humanitarian social-security system. Let us pass the bill before us as the immediate need, and then as quickly as may be modify the original act in a spirit of justice and fair play to those who are to be taxed and those who are to be benefited.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD with reference to the presentation of a gavel to our colleague the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR], and to include therein a very brief memorial passed by the Senate of Colorado regarding his long services in Colorado and in the Congress of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN]?

There was no objection.

ELECTION OF JAMES G. POLK

Mr. THOMAS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Elections No. 3, I present a resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 156

Resolved, That the Honorable JAMES G. POLK was duly elected as Representative from the Sixth Congressional District of the State of Ohio to the Seventy-sixth Congress and is entitled to his seat.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMAS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMAS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I understand this resolution is agreeable to the gentleman on the minority side of the aisle, and I therefore move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. REED of New York asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on the bill H. R. 933, a bill which would create 9,000,000 new jobs.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK]?

There was no objection?

Mr. TENEROWICZ, Mr. PITTENGER, and Mr. COFFEE of Washington asked and were given permission to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on the bill H. R. 3314.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce may have until 5 o'clock this afternoon to file a report on the bill H. R. 5412.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point in the RECORD and include therein a tabulation showing contributions, domestic and imported, to sugar consumption of the continental United States from all areas.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, an agricultural absurdity which has handcuffed and is now slowly starving sugar-beet growers of Montana and other Western States must be corrected through legislation during this session of Congress.

I can best express my stand and the views of sugar-beet growers in Montana by terming the present sugar program of the Department of Agriculture as the height of folly, unsupported by any logic.

I challenge any Member of this House to answer this statement: How can the Department of Agriculture conscientiously curtail acreages of domestic sugar-beet or cane growers when we provide only 29.69 percent of the amount of sugar necessary for domestic consumption? And as a follow-up to that statement: How can the Department of Agriculture and other Federal agencies allow Cuba to provide 28.82 percent of our domestic consumption and then curtail the acreages of our farmers in the United States? The figures are based on 1938 compilations released by the Department of Agriculture.

I would appreciate and would be indebted to any Member of this House who would enlighten my knowledge and defend the present sugar-beet program at the conclusion of my statement.

Senate bill 69, known as the Ellender sugar-quota bill, is a partial answer to continuous demands of Congressmen from sugar-beet-producing States for acreage increases. The bill as passed the Senate will be of immense value to sugar-beet growers in the West, with the clause stricken providing for an allocation of 6,000 acres of the increase to the State of Nevada.

It is unfair to single out the State of Nevada or any other Western State in the bill, and I condemn the clause as discriminatory against States not specifically mentioned. With the Nevada amendments, introduced by Senators PITTMAN and MCCARRAN, stricken, the bill will mark our first step toward offering our sugar-beet growers a fair deal.

At this point permit me to insert excerpts from a news story which appeared in the Washington Post, under copyright by International News Service, on April 4:

President Roosevelt will veto the Ellender sugar-quota bill should Congress enact it, House Democratic leaders said they were informed yesterday.

The bill, passed last week by the Senate, now is before the House Agriculture Committee. It increases the continental sugar quota of 300,000 tons, which would curtail a corresponding quantity from Cuba and the Philippine Islands.

President Roosevelt's objections were reported to be on the ground of conflict with reciprocal-trade agreements with Cuba and that Hawaii and Puerto Rico would be denied participation in the increase to be given domestic beet- and cane-sugar growers.

Chairman MARVIN JONES, of the House Agriculture Committee, revealed there are no plans to give consideration to the measure.

After reading the aforementioned story the thought occurred to me that if crops must be curtailed and thereby contribute to our relief rolls, it is much better for the unemployed to be in Cuba rather than in the United States. That is, if we must have people on relief through unemployment, let us give preference to our own farmers.

Under the amendment offered by Senator ADAMS to the Ellender bill the sugar-beet acreage in the United States would be increased by 80,000 to 100,000 acres, according to an informal estimate by the Department of Agriculture officials.

Dr. Bernhardt, Chief of the Sugar Division of the Department of Agriculture, before the House Appropriations Committee in February, estimated that of the sugar consumption of 6,650,000 tons in the United States in 1938, 2,360,000 tons were produced in continental United States from sugar beets and cane.

But of the production of 2,360,000 tons by domestic producers, they were allowed to place only 2,013,500 tons, or 29.69 percent, on the market for consumption within the United States. There is only one answer to that situation. Either the entire sugar program is built upon absurdity or else the powerful Wall Street bloc which owns and operates the sugar refineries in Cuba and other foreign countries have dominated the Department of Agriculture.

I am not speaking for Montana alone, but for all States that are concerned with the proposed increase in sugar-beet acreage. In addition to Montana, the States include California, Colorado, Idaho, Nebraska, Nevada, New Mexico, North Dakota, South Dakota, Oregon, Utah, Washington, and Wyoming.

Our Committee on Agriculture may refer me to a letter written by Secretary Wallace to Hon. MARVIN JONES, chairman of the House Agriculture Committee, and printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 26, 1939.

Secretary Wallace set forth that—limitation through quotas on the admission of foreign and insular sugars, which limitations have been fully effective and restrictive each year since 1934, and limitations on marketings of the mainland sugarcane and sugar-beet industries, which have been nominal since 1935 because production was generally below the quotas for such areas established in the legislation.

Secretary Wallace also stated that—in 1938 Cuba contributed about 28.8 percent of the total United States requirements as compared with 43 to 53 percent in the period 1925–30.

The Cuban contribution to the United States sugar consumption has undoubtedly decreased since 1925, but certainly that fact alone does not erase the eyesore that Cuba contributed virtually the same amount of sugar for domestic consumption last year as the United States processors.

If the Secretary was correct when he wrote that "production was generally below the quotas for such areas established in the legislation," how it is possible to convince the sugar-beet growers of the West that they must curtail their production. Production may be "generally below the quotas," but the fact remains that we had 300,000 tons in 1938 above our quota toward domestic consumption.

Sugar-beet production in Montana, according to figures released by the Department of Agriculture the last 10 years, follows:

In 1929, 43,282 acres; in 1930, 49,198 acres; in 1931, 64,232 acres; in 1932, 59,225 acres; in 1933, 74,879 acres; in 1934, 72,994 acres; in 1935, 57,113 acres; in 1936, 74,398 acres; in 1937, 77,227 acres, in 1938, 84,076 acres, and the allotted production in 1939 totals 82,020 acres.

These figures reveal that production increased 3,000 acres in 1937 over the previous year, 7,000 acres in 1938 over 1937, setting the normal production increase at about 6,000 acres in 1938, which would amount to 88,000 acres against the Department of Agriculture's curtailment to 82,020 acres.

The 1939 acreage quota curtails beet production in Montana more than 2,000 acres below the production last year and approximately 6,000 acres below what Montana growers would normally produce this year. And, at the same time, the quota does not permit the production of sugar beets on new lands.

I wish to quote excerpts from an editorial which recently appeared in the Dawson County (Glendive, Mont.) Review:

Part of the Buffalo Rapids irrigated district will be under water next year and it is highly desirable that a start should be made in raising beets, but, of course, it will be necessary to call on Secretary Wallace and lick his boots to even get a hearing and then doubtless be informed that all the available acreage has been allotted.

Is this America or is it Russia or Germany? What are we coming to when a free American farmer must beg permission to raise sugar beets on his land? In spite of a sizable sugar-beet industry in many States of the Union, we still import from Cuba and other tropical countries the great bulk of the sugar consumed in this land of ours. American farmers must curtail sugar beet, wheat, and other crops so that Cuban and other foreign farmers may benefit.

George Hayes, sugar-beet grower at Valier, Mont., explains the sugar-beet situation vividly in a letter recently received by me. His letter, in part, follows:

Last season we planted 30 acres of beets, and if this area is not allowed sufficient acreage allotment whereby we will be allowed to increase our acreage to at least 40 to 50 acres, we are going to suffer considerable loss on our investment in equipment. As matters stand, we have no assurance that we will be allowed to plant any acreage whatever to beets.

You undoubtedly are entirely familiar with our condition and know full well that our diversification of crops is limited. This has been a wheat country principally and due to low prices, and in order to conform with the wheat allotment program, our wheat acreage will be considerably reduced. It seems entirely inconsistent that we should not be allowed to expand our beet acreage to offset, at least in part, the extensive decrease in wheat acreage.

It has been definitely established that the beet industry is a profitable enterprise in this area and if we are to follow along with the wheat allotment, and at the same time are denied the privilege of properly developing the beet industry, we might do well to turn the country back to the Indians, as we likely will have no alternative.

Another Valier, Mont., farmer, Thomas E. Brown, wrote me as follows:

Last year I only seeded 10 acres in sugar beets for a trial and I had planned to seed 30 acres this year, but now I am told I can only seed the same acreage that I had last year.

I have bought some high-priced machinery, and I will never be able to pay for it unless I can seed more than 10 acres. If the acreage must be cut, why can't the big growers cut their acreage and let us small farmers put in enough for expenses and to pay for our machinery? Please let me know if I can seed more than the 10 acres I had in last year.

The preceding letter is a typical example of hundreds of communications which I have received from Montana farmers who are fairly begging to grow sugar beets, but they cannot because concessions have been made to foreign countries.

The United Sates Government has spent millions of dollars on irrigation and reclamation projects in Montana and other Western States, and today the farmers cannot take advantage of the projects owning to acreage curtailments.

I have been reliably informed that two or three additional sugar refineries would be constructed in Montana if the farmers were allowed to grow additional acres of sugar beets. Construction of refineries, manning the machinery, production of sugar beets means employment, and that alone is a step toward the solution of our unemployment problem today. But how in the name of the spirits can we carry out that program when the Department of Agriculture and other agencies are blockading any progressive move?

That is the picture facing the sugar-beet growers in the United States today. The least we can do this session is to pass the sugar bill now before the House Committee on Agriculture. It will be a partial answer to the fair requests of the beet and cane growers.

It is important in our consideration of the Ellender bill that we pause for a moment and reflect on the agriculture provisions of the 1932 and 1936 national platforms of the Democratic and Republican Parties.

The Democratic platform of 1932 contained the following provisions:

Extension and development of farm cooperative movement and effective control of crop surpluses so that our farmers may have full benefit of the domestic market. The enactment of every constitutional measure that will aid the farmers to receive for their basic farm commodities prices in excess of cost.

And from the Republican platform of 1932, I read:

The fundamental problem of American agriculture is the control of production to such volume as will balance supply with demand. In the solution of this problem the cooperative organization of farmers to plan production, and the tariff to hold the home market for American farmers, are vital elements.

The Democratic platform of 1936 stated:

We favor the production of all the market will absorb, both at home and abroad, plus a reserve supply sufficient to insure fair prices to consumers.

The Republican platform of 1936 provided:

Our paramount object is to protect and foster the family type of farm, traditional in American life and to promote policies which will bring about an adjustment of agriculture to meet the needs of domestic and foreign markets. To protect the American farmer against the importation of all livestock, dairy, and agricultural products, substitutes therefor, and derivatives therefrom, which will depress American farm prices.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, the National Press Building Auditorium was the scene of a most unusual meeting last Wednesday night. What had been liberally advertised as a "Stop Hitler" meeting was the magnet which drew together a motley crowd of Communists, Socialists, "parlor pinks," and others whose humanitarian sympathies for the moment seem to have displaced a mature consideration of what groups and what influences were behind this meeting.

To say the gathering was typically un-American is to put it lightly. There were neither prayers nor pledges of loyalty to our own country. No patriotic songs were sung. Not one syllable was spoken in condemnation of the alienism element represented in our country by the Communist Party.

On the contrary, our own country's policies were subjected to severe criticism and resolutions were introduced and passed calling for a liberalization of our immigration laws so that thousands of additional aliens may be brought to our shores to find a haven of economic security.

The first speaker of the evening was a Capt. Ralph Bates, a British subject who, according to the announcement, had formerly served as a member of the Fifth Regiment of the late Spanish Loyalist Army. After a graphic description of the horrors of war in Spain, Captain Bates, in a very professional manner, launched a plea for contributions to aid Spanish refugees in France. He collected $440.02 from the audience and departed by plane for New York, perhaps to continue his money-raising activities there.

In the foyer of the auditorium, before and after the meeting, representatives of various groups were active distributing and selling anti-Fascist and communistic literature.

The Committee for Industrial Organization had a representative present who passed out circulars calling upon the people to "Save the Wagner Labor Act."

Circulars were distributed calling attention to the fact that a strike was in progress at a local motor establishment on Florida Avenue.

What have these things to do with peace and democracy?

Resolutions were passed at the meeting severely criticizing the Department of State for recognizing the government of Franco in Spain. It is said that a member of this body declared he "was ashamed of the United States of America for recognizing that kind of government" and that he "did not think it was a creditable step on the part of the State Department."

Mr. Speaker, meetings of the character that was held last Wednesday night in the National Press Building Auditorium are not conducive to peace, but stir up trouble for our own citizens. In the audience were many well-known Communists from Washington. There were others from New York. The hand behind this meeting was the hand of Moscow.

If we are to preserve peace and democracy for the American people, we must expose the forces behind these movements; we must disclose the leadership behind these meetings and halt the exploitation of our own working men and women who are the victims of un-American propaganda of all kinds.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. OLIVER] is recognized for 25 minutes.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Speaker, on April 3 the United States News carried an item that Mr. Marriner Eccles, Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board of Governors, is reported to have told the President that another depression is in the cards for 1940.

If this report is true, then it is my opnion that Mr. Eccles should be required by this House to state any recommended course of action which may be set in motion whereby such a further calamity and catastrophe may be averted. If Mr. Eccles, who occupies one of the most responsible official positions of this Government, cannot recommend such a course, then it is my considered opinion that this House should pass a vote of lack of confidence in him and he should resign. On the other hand, if the report is not true, then he should deny it.

Personally, it is my opinion that Mr. Eccles would be entirely justified in making such a statement. The only suggestion that I would add, is that I have never felt that we have freed ourselves from the clutches of the 1929 debacle. Furthermore, it occurs to me that this Nation will show tremendous vitality if our economy does not collapse before 1940.

However, my main objective in calling to your attention, Mr. Speaker, this newspaper report, which, coming from the United States News, can be considered reasonably accurate and based on fact, is that Mr. Eccles should be in a position to advise this Congress and, as a matter of fact, should be required to advise this Congress, now, on monetary moves which could and must be made to forestall such a crisis. Certainly ten to twelve millions of unemployed men and women, millions more of industrial workers who would be seriously affected by such a further decline, and all of America's farmers who are holding on, hoping and praying for better prices and wider markets; elderly men and women dependent upon old-age assistance payments and extension of the same; mothers with dependent children; veterans relying on compensation payments; in short, all of America are looking to this administration, Mr. Eccles, and all of the rest of us to meet the present absurdity of want in the midst of plenty, to say nothing about averting an accentuation or further aggravation of the present poverty-stricken and insecure conditions facing the greatest and wealthiest nation of the world.

In 1933, Mr. Eccles told Congress that he was president of First Security Corporation, owning and operating 26 banks and 1 trust company in the principal points of Utah and southern Idaho—total resources of approximately $50,000,000. He further stated that—

> It must be recognized that the break-down of our present economic system is due to the failure of our political and financial leadership to intelligently deal with the money problem. In the real world there is no cause nor reason for unemployment with its resultant destitution and suffering of fully one-third of our entire population. We have all and more of the material wealth which we had at the peak of our prosperity in the year 1929. Our people need and want everything which our abundant facilities and resources are able to provide for them. The problem of production has been solved, and we need no further capital accumulation for the present, which could only be utilized in further increasing our productive facilities or extending further foreign credits. We have a complete economic plant able to supply a superabundance of not only all of the necessities of our people but the comforts and luxuries as well.
> Our problem, then, becomes one purely of distribution. This can only be brought about by providing purchasing power sufficiently adequate to enable the people to obtain the consumption goods which we as a nation are able to produce. The economic system can serve no other purpose and expect to survive. If our problem is, then, the result of the failure of our money system to properly function, which today is generally recognized, we then must turn to the consideration of the necessary corrective measures to be brought about in that field.

This is the same man who today says, "First, prices cannot be controlled by changes in the amount and cost of money, and second, the Board's control of the amount of money is not complete and cannot be made complete."

On March 16, 1939, I addressed a letter to Mr. Eccles calling to his attention several periods since 1920 when our money supply exerted a tremendous influence on our price level. In that letter I also suggested that perhaps the usefulness of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System as presently constituted has come to an end. Today, after noting the report of this statement attributed to Chairman Eccles, I am reasonably assured of this fact.

For, Mr. Speaker, if another decline is in the cards for 1940—and I subscribe to the possibility and the probability of such a crisis—and if a governmental representative in the position of authority and responsibility which Mr. Eccles holds can make no reasonably constructive suggestion to avert such a calamity, then certainly his usefulness as a public official to our people has come to an end.

On March 17, 1937, an editorial in the Philadelphia Record referring to Mr. Eccles was written in part as follows:

> Here is the man in the country's key economic position—a position more powerful in its influence upon recovery than any other save that of the President—calling for a return to discredited deflationary policies.

On April 6, 1937, another editorial in the same paper reads in part as follows:

> The Record had hoped the Banking Act of 1935 would provide a workable compromise by which private ownership of the Federal Reserve banks could be continued, with Government holding the balance of power on the Open Market Committee. But if the Reserve Board is to continue to put public interest second to the private interests which dominate the Reserve banks, it will invite the Government to take over the whole system—in short, Government ownership.
> As it is, the Reserve Board has weakened public confidence in its administration of the monetary system. Its open-market purchases will but slightly compensate for the harm worked upon thousands of small banks, which had to sell their Government bonds at a loss to meet higher reserve requirements. That, in turn, has hurt thousands of small-business men, because the small banks have been prevented from extending the credit those businessmen need.
> Recovery depends upon forthrightness and courage in monetary management. The cover-up system isn't that kind of management.

At that time, perhaps, such strong language was not justified in view of the fact that based on his own previous statements we could feel some confidence in the attempt of Mr. Eccles to take action or make suggestions to meet our changing conditions and our emergencies. Mistakes of judgment can be overlooked but the present situation and the statement reputed to have been made by him cannot justify our further indulgence. If, in accordance with this newspaper statement, Chairman Eccles feels disaster is threatening and suggests no monetary action to meet the development, then I state again, in my opinion he should resign.

Oh, I know that he and his associates will content themselves with the thought that they have consistently advocated and experimented with deficit financing. I know that they will feel easy over the thought that through their deficit-financing policies the banks are full of demand deposits and that existing excess reserves are a base for potential credit expansion such as has never before been available.

They will state that, having furnished these available deposits for use in business expansion, there is nothing further which they can do about the situation; but, Mr. Speaker, to sit tight in this hour of the country's need and not demand constructive monetary action, in my opinion, is criminal; it is high treason. Millions of our citizens are crying for action; for example, here is an excerpt from a statement mailed to me today from Los Angeles, Calif.:

> The people have lost faith in their legislative servants and their governmental masters and are rapidly espousing the "isms"—anything but what Americanism seems to stand for is happening here, right under the noses of a dumb, pusillanimous Congress of swivel-chair national representatives—the Benedict Arnolds of our time. God forgive them. My Congress makes me ashamed of my American citizenship.

Continued deficit financing is no answer, but there is a real answer, and I believe that Mr. Eccles and his associates know that answer. They should come to this Congress and ask for authority to carry out the program which will not only avert the pending crisis but which will meet our continuing problem of needless involuntary unemployment and absurd insecurity.

There is one basic and permanent cause for the continuation of this starved economy of ours, and that is the folly and criminality of paying persistent obeisance and worshipful idolization to the superstition of debt money. A large portion of the supply of debt money in the form of demand deposits, to which Mr. Eccles will point with pride, might just as well not be in existence. A large percentage of these deposits are idle, hoarded, and out of existence so far as industrial expansion and reemployment of the millions of our people in the lower income brackets are concerned. Further debt accumulation on the part of two-thirds of our population is not possible. Business today is functioning and planning its sales campaigns on the assumption that the population of American has dwindled to 50,000,000 instead of the 130,000,000 actually existing here.

Why is it that Mr. Eccles and his advisors will not see this situation in its proper light? They know that the economy of the United States cannot be permanently healthy with a money supply dependent upon the contraction and expansion of private and/or public credit or debt. The able Dr. Laughlin B. Currie, who is an assistant director in the Division of Research and Statistics of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, and who, I understand, is held in good esteem by his immediate superiors in office, stated in his Monograph on the Supply and Control of Money in the United States, in 1935, that—

> The most perfect control of the supply of money could be achieved by direct Government issue of all money, both notes and deposits subject to check.

He further stated that the merit of such a proposal lies in the fact that it divorces the supply of money from the loaning of money.

At this point I appreciate that many good citizens will cry inflation fiat money, printing-press currency, and so forth. But, Mr. Speaker, we know that a scientific synchronization of our money supply with our production will never result in uncontrolled inflation of the price level. We also know that a continual bumping along on the underinflated tires of an economy only one-half or one-third utilized will eventually ruin the whole economic machine.

From the words of Dr. Currie, however, one can reasonably assume that Mr. Eccles has in his camp an advisor, learned and wise, who is in a position to recommend constructive monetary action. Is it not reasonable for us who are laymen on the subject of money and who are Members of Congress to ask why it is, in view of the impending decline which Mr. Eccles refers to, that he does not call into conference Dr. Currie and others of like views and submit their recommendations, in which many of us are interested, to the Congress for constructive consideration?

As has been stated before, Mr. Eccles recently advised Congress and the country that—

> (1) Prices cannot be controlled by changes in the amount and cost of money; (2) the Board's control of the amount of money is not complete and cannot be made complete.

Yet Congress has constantly been advised that control of the money supply is most vital and essential to our well-being and our preservation as a nation. Our forefathers thought so strenuously and strongly on this point that they incorporated such a safeguard in our Constitution. Again in 1876, in the Silver Commission Report a congressional investigating committee found that the expansion and contraction of our money supply is the most powerful factor for good and evil in our national economy. Let me quote from that report:

> Money is the great instrument of association, the very fiber of social organism, the vitalizing force of industry, the protoplasm of civilization, and as essential to its existence as oxygen is to animal life. Without money civilization could not have had a beginning with a diminishing supply it must languish and, unless renewed, finally perish.

Again let me call to your notice further statements from the same report which parallel conditions of 1873 and now—

> Whenever and wherever the mutterings of discontent were hushed by the fear of increased standing armies, the foundations of society were honeycombed by powerful secret political associations. The cause at work to produce this state of things was so subtle and its advance so silent that the masses were entirely ignorant of its nature. They had come to regard money as an institution fixed and immovable in value, and when the price of property and the wages of labor fell, they charged the fault, not to the money but to the property and the employer. They were taught that the mischief was the result of overproduction. Never having observed that overproduction was complained of only when the money stock was decreasing, their prejudices were aroused against labor-saving machinery.
> They were angered at capital because it either declined altogether to embark in industrial enterprises or would only embark in them upon the condition of employing labor at the most scanty remuneration. They forgot that falling prices compelled capital to avoid such enterprises on any other condition, and for the most part to avoid them entirely. They did not comprehend that money in shrinking volume was the prolific parent of enforced idleness and poverty, and that falling prices divorced money, capital, and labor. * * * It is in a volume of money keeping even pace with advancing population and commerce, and in the resulting steadiness of prices, that the wholesome nutriment of a healthy vitality is to be found. The highest moral, intellectual, and material development of nations is promoted by the use of money unchanging in its value. * * * Money in shrinking volume becomes the paramount object of commerce instead of its beneficent instrument. Instead of mobilizing industry it poisons and dries up its life currents. It is the fruitful source of political and social disturbance. It foments strife between labor and other forms of capital, while itself, hidden away in security, gorges on both. It rewards close-fisted lenders and filches from and bankrupts enterprising borrowers. It circulates freely in the stock exchange, but avoids the labor exchange. It has in all ages been the worst enemy with which society has had to contend. The great and still continuing fall in prices in the United States has proved most disastrous to nearly every industrial enterprise. The bitter experience of the last few years has been an expensive but most thorough teacher. * * * The worst effect, however, economically considered, of falling prices is not upon existing property, nor upon debtors, evil as it is, but upon laborers, whom it deprives of employment and consigns to poverty, and upon society, which it deprives of that vast sum of wealth which resides potentially in the vigorous arms of the idle workman. A shrinking volume of money transfers existing property unjustly, and causes a concentration and diminution of wealth. It also impairs the value of existing property by eliminating from it that important element of value conferred upon it by the skill, energy, and care of the debtors from whom it is wrested. But it does not destroy any existing property, while it does absolutely annihilate all the values producible by the labor which it condemns to idleness.
> The estimate is not an extravagant one that there are now in the United States 3,000,000 persons willing to work, who are idle because they cannot obtain employment. This vast poverty-stricken army is increasing and will continue to increase as long as falling prices shall continue to separate money capital, the fund out of which wages is paid, from labor, and to discourage its investment in other forms of property. Money capital, labor, and other forms of capital are the warp and woof of the economic system. Labor cooperating with the forces of nature is the source of all wealth, and to reach the highest degree of effectiveness it must be classified through the aid of capital and supported by capital during the process of production and be measured and paid in money, each unit of which is a sight draft on all other forms of property, bearing a value in proportion to the number of such drafts. In order that any country may reach the maximum of material prosperity certain conditions are indispensable. All its labor, assisted by the most approved machinery and appliances, must be employed, and the fruits of industry must be justly distributed. These conditions are only possible when capital is absolutely protected against violence and free from illegitimate legislative interference and when the laborer is protected in his natural right to dispose of his labor in such manner as he may prefer. They are utterly impossible when the money value of property and services is declining. Howsoever great the natural resources of a country may be, however genial its climate, fertile its soil, ingenious, enterprising, and industrious its inhabitants, or free its institutions, if the volume of money is shrinking and prices are falling its merchants will be overwhelmed with bankruptcy, its industries will be paralyzed, and destitution and distress will prevail. * * * Under an unjust money system, under a system which through law or accident fails to regulate the quantity of money so as to preserve the equilibrium between money and the other factors of production, the conflict between money and labor and other forms of capital becomes destructive and ruinous. It is in the shadow of a shrinking volume of money that disorders social and political gender and fester, that communism organizes, that riots threaten and destroy, that labor starves, that capitalists conspire and workmen combine, and that the revenues of governments are dissipated in the employment of laborers, or in the maintenance of increased standing armies to overawe them.
> The peaceful conflict which under a just money system is continually waged between money capital and labor and which tends only to secure the rights of each and is essential to the progress of society is changed under a shrinking volume of money to an unrelenting war, threatening the destruction of both. * * * The peculiar effect of a contraction in the volume of money is to give profit to the owners of unemployed money, through the appreciation of its purchasing power, by the mere lapse of time. It is falling prices that robs labor of employment. Idle machinery and industrial appliances of all kinds, instead of being productive of profit, are a source of loss. * * * The loss which this country sustains by reason of the enforced idleness of 3,000,000 persons who, although idle, must still in some scanty way be supplied with food, clothing, and shelter, is in the aggregate very great. If it be estimated at $1 per day for each laborer, it would amount in 2 years to a sum sufficient to discharge the national debt. It would pay the interest, at 5 percent per annum on $18,000,000,000. It would be a sum more than sufficient to supply anew each year the circulating medium of the country. It would amount, in 4 years, to a greater sum than the world's entire gold product has amounted in the last 50 prolific years. It would aggregate in 10 years a value far greater than the world's entire product of both gold and silver for the last hundred years. It would amount in 4 years to a sum more than sufficient to duplicate and stock every mile of railroad now in the United States.

On February 12, 1820, William H. Crawford, Secretary of the Treasury, said:

> All intelligent writers on currency agree that when money is decreasing in amount, poverty and misery must prevail.

In 1859 in the Encyclopedia Britannica, J. R. McCulloch stated:

An increasing amount of money, and consequently augmenting prices, are attended by results precisely the contrary. Production is stimulated by the profits resulting from advancing prices; labor is consequently in demand and better paid, and the general activity and buoyancy insure to capital a wider demand and higher remuneration.

The report of the Silver Commission of 1876 concludes in part as follows:

The contrast presented by these authorities between the effects of an increasing and decreasing volume of money shows that if a change in the one direction or the other is unavoidable, a change in the direction of increase is the most desirable. Undoubtedly the best condition upon the whole is that of steadiness, or only such an increase of money as would correspond with the advance of population. But with the history before us of 30 centuries of mining, we know that an injurious and excessive increase of metallic money has never occurred. We may feel assured that it never can occur, because the enlargement of commercial exchanges, which results from an increase of money, speedily restores the equilibrium. The danger of an unduly increasing money is theoretical and fanciful. The mischief which practically threatens the world, and which has been the most prolific cause of the social, political, and industrial ills which have afflicted it, is that of a decreasing and deficient money. It is from such a deficiency that mankind are now suffering, and it is the actual and present evil with which we have to deal.

But now in the face of these studies and recommendations of the past when various authorities agreed that the expansion and contraction of our money supply caused definite and ascertainable results in our national economy; now, in the face of congressional attitude on this issue as reflected in the passage of the Goldsborough bill in May 1932 through the House; now, in the face of the passage of the Thomas amendment to the agricultural bill in 1933; now, in the face of the viewpoint expressed by at least one of his technical and research advisers; now, Mr. Speaker, in the face of these factors, Mr. Eccles, chairman of the Federal Reserve Board of Governors, complacently sits and smugly informs this Nation that he and his associates disagree with the viewpoint that the money supply has a direct bearing on prices and as a direct result the making and breaking of our civilization. Mr. Eccles sits in the seat of the mighty and reputedly gazes into the crystal, calls the turn on the possibility and probability of a further economic decline; makes no suggestions except a continuation of deficit financing. Such a man, Mr. Speaker, should resign. His usefulness to the American people in a public capacity has ended. We do not expect Mr. Eccles to be a miracle worker—we do not want him to be a medicine man but we do require from our public officials forthright and constructive discharge of their duties and in my opinion Mr. Eccles is not hitting the ball. As a matter of fact he is not even up at the bat. His sincere and persistent adherence to the policy of deficit financing has placed this country and its people directly behind the economic eight ball. Now, the country demands positive and constructive action. Idle man power, idle plant structure, and idle resources demand the same action. Mr. Eccles should either fish or cut bait. Recommend, act, or resign. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address by the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] on the subject of the services of our former leader, Mr. Snell.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. O'CONNOR). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN and Mr. CRAWFORD asked and were given permission to revise and extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous special order, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] is recognized for 25 minutes.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I desire first to congratulate the last speaker and those others who are attempting to bring about monetary reform, especially for their persistence and enthusiasm, although I cannot fully agree with their theories.

This money plan is so very strange
That few people comprehend it;
Reforms oft bring about some change
But do not seem to mend it.

I recommend this thought to those who are advocating these new doctrines.

I wish to speak this afternoon about the housing bill, in the hope that I may arouse curiosity and cause the Members to think about the measure before tomorrow, when it will be brought up for general discussion. Before I begin the reading of my remarks, however, I wish to make a few comments.

I listened carefully to the speech which the Honorable Jesse Jones, of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, made on the radio last evening. If you listened, you probably were overwhelmed, as I was, at the tremendous number of activities in which our Government has been engaged. But Mr. Jones did not say anything about the national debt.

He did not tell us where he got the money to carry on these many activities. He did not tell us that he borrowed it of the people at one-half of 1-percent to 2¼-percent interest and loaned it out at from 4 to 5 percent, so that he could mop up all the losses. Why could not the Government carry on? Why could it not absorb all business if it can be provided with funds in that manner? With no profit permitted to private business, how do you expect private business to continue? Businessmen will not take chances under present conditions, and a strong protest must be made by the people lest the Government embark upon every single phase of business.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Would the gentleman favor a lowering of the rate of interest on such loans in order to narrow the margin?

Mr. GIFFORD. No; I would not. I do not want the Government to lose money; neither do I want the departments of the Government to boast that they will not lose any money under such conditions. On a business of some $20,000,000,000 they can mop up tremendous losses which private industry could not endure or absorb. Have we embarked already upon such competition with business and shall it be so attractively presented to the people that they will want the Government to continue at even a greater pace than heretofore? It is not a pleasant picture. Even your monetary reforms would not lessen but would rather accelerate it. How much longer will our people loan these Government agencies money at such a small rate of interest for the Government to do business by politically appointed administrators? To me this prospect is rather frightening.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If the gentleman will, I wish he would clear up in my mind, at least, his opinion on the thought just expressed. Are we, the people, lending this money to government? I have gotten fixed in my own mind this formula, that it is one proposition for the gentleman or for me or others to go to government and say, "Here, Mr. Government, I have saved from my earnings $1,000. I want to loan it to you for you to use in promoting the program you are following." It might be such a program as Mr. Jones has discussed. That would be one proposition, but in my mind it is entirely dissimilar from the proposition where the Government operates the banking machinery in such a way that the deposits of the people are, in a way, used without their consent or permission or endorsement by government in order to promote the great activities to which Mr. Jones referred last night. Would the gentleman enlarge on this point?

Mr. GIFFORD. Of course, the people do not know much about it, but they will demand to know about it pretty soon. They are beginning to realize the way the banks are using their money by loaning to the Government to compete with private business.

I sometimes hesitate to complain so much, but it is my job. I am here to watch expenditures of government. I am assigned to that position. I helped to form the R. F. C., and voted for most of these things as emergency measures. But we should turn and take the road back and we should not make these emergency agencies permanent institutions. This is what we are doing and this is what I am protesting against today. With respect to the housing bill, please give it some attention and let me now point out to you some of the dangers.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. I think the gentleman's position is absolutely sound, and none of us, certainly I do not, want to see the R. F. C. become a permanent agency. I am not going to ask a question about any remarks heretofore made, but I simply want to ask my friend if he does not think that Mr. Jones on that question, by insisting upon bank participation, is doing more to prevent the R. F. C. from becoming a permanent agency than any other action the gentleman knows about; in other words, is it not the gentleman's frank opinion that Mr. Jones himself does not want the R. F. C. to become a permanent agency?

Mr. GIFFORD. I cannot speak too highly of Mr. Jones. If the Speaker of the House is not to be a candidate, I wish he might be the candidate on your side for President. I might even vote for him—but the Speaker would come first. [Applause.]

The Federal Housing Act was to be the great steam shovel to lift the country out of this historically defined Roosevelt depression. Lack of proper housing in the Nation was greatly stressed and the credit of the Government was again jeopardized to insure many more billions of private capital which needed to be coaxed from havens of security where it had fled rather than invest itself in business suffering from the lash of reform and the confiscation of all profits under and by its own present Government. The amount of new construction is, indeed, highly disappointing. In some localities it has, of course, been of some value. The outcome of the pressure brought to bear to revive the music of the saw and hammer in so many sections of the country already overbuilt, where business stagnation has already brought about a tremendous oversupply of vacant tenements, is not reassuring. There has been much switching and brokerage of existing mortgages which is having a devastating effect upon the building and loan associations of the Nation. They seem to be unanimously protesting against further insurance of existing loans. Shall we continue to allow real-estate brokers to fatten and financial institutions willing even to pay premium on insured mortgages deliberately attracted from local institutions which have functioned so splendidly in the public interest? Both the President and the Administrator gave their assurance last year that this phase would be discontinued in July 1941. There is little or no justification for its continuance. Every well-informed citizen knows full well that 80 and 90 percent mortgages on real estate are seldom safe investments. What individual would take such a risk with his own money? Why should a legislator be willing to risk the credit of his own government in a guarantee of losses on mortgages of such unreasonable amounts?

However, in spite of the tremendous sums spent in the extraordinary ballyhoo of this new venture of government, the effect on the Nation's recovery is yet almost unnoticed. Very few Congressmen can rise and testify as to its potency for recovery in their own districts.

Certainly promoters have attempted to fatten on these projects. Some appear to have succeeded. However, the most startling statement is made by the Administrator that of $750,000,000 worth of large housing projects, he has been able to approve only $71,000,000. This scheme of insuring large units for 80 percent of their value is one of almost impossible proper supervision by the officials of this Government.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I seldom refuse to yield.

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman makes a statement which seems to satisfy me and should satisfy him that the affairs of the administration or the department or the bureau are safeguarded if they have refused so many of the applications on the part of the brokers.

Mr. GIFFORD. I am paying tribute today to those people who are trying to administer an impossible situation under the pressure of those prominent in the administration to O. K. these promoters' projects.

Under the lash of the administration, they were probably urged to make haste to help in the business depression. Certainly I have no criticism of the management of the F. H. A. in its attempt to administer such an impossible assignment. They acknowledge that there are many tricks in the business, and in order to hasten the work they have evidently condoned many sharp practices. We cannot put too much faith in politically appointed supervisors of large building operations. Such operations have to be approved in their blueprint stage, since the insurance must be guaranteed in order that the funds of private institutions may be advanced for the purpose.

I have a large folder containing much information from individuals and clippings from newspapers relating to two large units in St. Louis, Mo., insured by the Government. Certainly this city already had a great amount of vacant and available tenements. The erection of these two great units simply lessened real-estate values in the entire locality. This information I have received from the real-estate boards and others whose authoritative knowledge as to value and real-estate conditions cannot be questioned. It seems a paradox that, in order to revive building operations and furnish employment for this class of workmen, it must be carried on in places already overbuilt and the real cause of the idleness of this class of workers.

Let us glance at the way the promoter works. When Government insurance of such propositions at its inception was broached in our committee it was freely predicted what would happen. In these two projects in St. Louis, Mo., an architect and a builder were the actual promoters. Indeed, the architect seemed to have been very much of a promoter, according to the letters I have on file. The land purchased for these two projects was bought for about $35,000 and $71,000, respectively. The parcels were immediately marked up and transferred to the corporation for $171,000 and $300,000, respectively. This mark-up was allowed and even condoned by the F. H. A., and, of course, counted heavily toward the 20-percent equity contribution. It is indeed a strained defense that can be offered to soothe the shock of this transaction to the ordinary citizen whose Government furnishes the guaranty. The land was bought in the name of the clerk in the office. It was sold immediately by her to the corporation formed to carry on the project. Will she be assessed a Federal income tax on these very large and profitable transactions? Or will she simply have taken stock in the corporations, which shares really have no value?

The revenue stamps on the deed show the transaction, although it is very customary to add more stamps than needed in order to indicate a higher price than that which was actually paid. In fact, it is noted that the amount of stock representing the 20-percent cost of the project, except for one share or a very few shares, is held by the office clerks. The F. H. A. says this is quite customary, and I fully agree with them. However, it takes but a little degree of comprehension to decide that other write-ups furnished the stock necessary for the 20-percent contribution. Shall we ask the clerk where she obtained the money? One of these projects for $2,000,000 originally paid a fee for building permit on basis of $1,000,000. Letters I have received say that the zoning law was changed under most questionable methods. It is shown that the plumber holding the large contract was paid by the city to approve his own work. An electrician paid by the city was displaced and another employed. In fact, I have a statement that the electrical inspector had to kick back one-half his fee to the promoter.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Would the Administrator know about that?

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, yes; the Administrator fully explained that such methods might be customary, but were merely local phases of it. They did not deem raw land of so much value, but argue that land, after building thereon, may be worth at once three times what it was valued at in the first place. We don't think they paid even $35,000 for that land marked up to $171,000. Real-estate brokers often put too many revenue stamps on deeds to make you think they paid more for the property than they actually did. That is an old trick. We recognize that.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Did the Administrator have any knowledge of the local conditions; that is, of the value of that land?

Mr. GIFFORD. He ought to have been familiar with the value of that land. He is, or was, a resident of St. Louis. Nearly the whole 20 percent of the stock was held in the name of the clerks in the office. They said they saw no significance in that—do not people often carry property in their wives' names? Yes; but my wife and I are supposed to be one. But when you select a clerk, it does seem different. Must this clerk acknowledge to the Government that she bought something for $35,000 and then sold it the next day for $171,000? What a Federal income-tax she must pay!

Mr. HOFFMAN. In more simple language, will the gentleman please describe that transaction for me?

Mr. GIFFORD. The promoters must put up 20 percent. They must form a corporation, to be a limited-dividend corporation. The promoters who form the corporation generally have the management and can milk it at will if they desire to be dishonest.

In order to put up the 20 percent, they put up the value of the land at seemingly any price, and it is assumed that contractors "kick in" a good share of their profits in construction.

Right here I may say that while much of this is a matter of public record, I recognize that these witnesses who have written me should be placed under oath before we can give full credence to their statements.

I inquired of one large contractor who has had much experience in these matters how the 20-percent equity was usually accounted for. He informed me that under a $2,000,000 contract, the contractor might well estimate a profit of $450,000 so that he could kick into the 20-percent fund at least 50 percent and still have a most satisfactory profit on the operation. It is generally understood that subcontractors would make their estimates high enough to contribute their full share. The stock held by the young ladies is to some of us definite evidence that it is of no real value unless the project itself proves profitable. It is perfectly plain that the 20-percent equity bears little, if any, relation to the actual cost of construction. That there have been attempts in a very large way to impose on the Government is amply demonstrated in the fact that of $750,000,000, only $71,000,000 could be approved.

Letters from St. Louis state that only a very small percentage of units are yet occupied in the project which has been completed for some months. The district attorney is contemplating action because of lack of fire escapes and proper stairways. In fact, the newspapers of St. Louis have condemned the project from so many angles, it is small wonder that they demand a congressional investigation. They have sent two attorneys with some 2,000 signatures to Washington to make this request. I read that this is too hot a potato for the Congressmen from that city to wish to handle. I regret that I must act for them in the matter. As a member of the Banking and Currency Committee, to whom this very heavy correspondence has been addressed, I feel it my full duty to bring it before the House. If you will read the record of the hearings, you will find much of interest and which is of course, the basis of these statements.

The plumber, though paid by the city, approved his own work; and we are assured by the F. H. A. that they have a competent man there all the time during the construction, and he could take care of the situation. How impossible that any man politically appointed could know all the intricacies of such larger building operations!

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The performance which is now being described by the gentleman is entirely in keeping with the loopholes that we have in the act which this House passed?

Mr. GIFFORD. Exactly; and, as we in the committee last year and the year before freely predicted, it has happened exactly as we said it would happen.

Mr. CRAWFORD. And the bill in its amended form as it will come to the House tomorrow afternoon will continue these same loopholes, and this procedure can go on its way?

Mr. GIFFORD. It corrects nothing; but I hope by taking the floor this afternoon and from what may be said tomorrow caution may be put in the hearts of the administrators of this law, so that the promoters in the future will not be permitted to impose upon them quite as much as they have in the past. The propositions have been so questionable, they threw out all except $71,000,000 of $750,000,000 as it is. Oh, the gentleman from Chicago [Mr. SABATH] has tried to uncover the operations of real-estate investment trusts. Think of what the Republicans will have to do to uncover the frauds and mistakes of the past 6 years.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. Certainly I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SABATH. I agree with the gentleman that perhaps some of these loans to the manipulators of these big projects should not have been made, and I do not believe in it, but I want to say that, on the whole, this thing has been of great benefit to the Nation, and as there is nothing perfect under the sun, we cannot expect that this administration will be perfect.

Mr. GIFFORD. I hope the gentlemen are listening to what I say. I told you about the plumber being paid by the city to approve his own work. I have letters here, although the writers should be under oath, stating that one electrician was discharged and another put in his place, and the latter had to kick back to the promoter one-half the fee paid to him by the city. I am not surprised that that is so. I should expect it to be so.

These witnesses, I say again, ought to be put under oath, and from their letters I feel sure they would be quite willing.

How these corporations can make any money is beyond my comprehension, especially in localities already overbuilt. I regret that I am speaking for St. Louis. I wish her Congressmen would take the floor on this matter. I am trying to represent that city, because the people who have written to or called on me have said: "This is a hot potato for the St. Louis Congressmen to handle." Quite possibly the promoters involved may be highly reputable men. If so, they ought to be defended. But what they have done can only be condoned. Of course some sort of defense will be forthcoming.

As a member of the Banking and Currency Committee to whom this heavy correspondence has been addressed, I have felt compelled to speak. I fear the same conditions prevail in other large projects. I do not blame the officials of the F. H. A. It is altogether too impossible an assignment. It is too difficult to detect sharp practices in large building operations.

I have asked, "How can you milk the Corporation after construction?" I was reminded that some units cost $5 for heat, while other units cost as high as $12. Who gets the profit on such a difference in oil contracts? Your imagination need not be strained too much to think of many ways a sharp manager might obtain profits.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 minutes more.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GIFFORD. Financial institutions take these insured mortgages even at great distances and with slight examination. That they are insured by the Government is enough, and they will even pay brokerage in the way of a premium to get them.

Are we not convinced that our Government should discontinue this sort of business? We should at once abandon the feature of insuring existing mortgages and protect those institutions already doing a completely satisfactory job. If this is allowed for 2 years more, it is plainly evident that all existing mortgages might as well, or will actually be forced to get under this Government umbrella of insurance. Furthermore, if the F. H. A. is to be continued, it should be limited to mortgages of such scope that the tricks of the promoter and real-estate contractors could be held to a minimum.

It is not possible under our form of government that political appointees would be men of sufficient training to supervise large units of building construction. It is a highly complicated work, and as we gaze at the large buildings being erected in this city of Washington every one of us may well imagine how helpless we would be if we were called upon to ferret out the devious methods used to cut corners and force down the prices in order that we might get at the actual cost to the contractor. It is an impossible situation for any department of government to be placed in. The Administrator himself strongly hinted at the very great pressure brought upon him by some highly placed in the Government to approve many of these projects. I greatly wonder why he, or anyone else, should be willing to serve in such a capacity.

In summing up, I approve of title I, when limited to loans of $2,500 or less for repairs or small types of construction. I insist that we should discontinue insuring existing mortgages. I would approve of the insurance, even at 80 percent value, of small units which could without question be successfully supervised. However, because of the unfortunate experiences already had in these large-scale housing experiments, I would expect much fewer of them in the future. Certainly unless promoters see a real profit in the construction itself, few such would be built except in prosperous cities like Washington where, at the moment, more housing is needed. Even here, when the multitude of jobs created by New Dealers are canceled, we would not strain our imagination if we predicted losses to the Government even in this highly prosperous and protected area, supervised by Congres itself. Let us act sensibly and erase the prejudicial opinion we may have held for the continuation of this highly dangerous activity and limit it to those channels capable of proper supervision.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Is it not true that this fight is going to resolve itself pretty much between the Home Owners' Land bank and the Federal Housing Administration in the final analysis, the first working in the interest of the building and loan leagues of America scattered throughout all of our local communities, and the other attempting to administer the Federal Housing Act as it has been handed to them by Congress?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes. What a shame for a traveling broker with no money at stake to get a list of the mortgages owned by a bank and openly solicit the mortgagor to apply an 80-percent mortgage. The life insurance companies pay them a premium for the business. The building and loan associations, of course, which we have built up painstakingly during all these years are fighting for their lives because of this Government operation. [Applause.]

COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Foreign Affairs may sit during the sessions of the House for the balance of the week.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

STATISTICAL STUDIES BY DEPARTMENT OF LABOR

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2021) to authorize the Department of Labor to continue to make special statistical studies upon payment of the cost thereof, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentlewoman from New Jersey explain the bill?

Mrs. NORTON. Yes; I shall be pleased to. The purpose of the bill is merely to continue the authorization to the Department of Labor to make special statistical studies, prepare records, and furnish transcripts of such studies when requested by business organizations. There is no additional expense to the Department of Labor for this service because it is paid for by the persons, organizations, and corporations requesting the information.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentlewoman means that the companies pay the Government for the reports that are made for them?

Mrs. NORTON. Yes. The charge is based on cost to the Department for preparing the information desired. I have here a list of some of the companies who asked for such information last year. I have one from the gentleman's State, the Boott Mills, of Lowell, Mass. This company paid $60 for a tabulation of pay rolls in connection with the cotton-textile industry. The United Hatters, Cap, and Millinery Workers of New York City, is another. The National Association of Wool Manufacturers is another; and there are many others. The fees paid range all the way from $15 to $150.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. When was this service established?

Mrs. NORTON. In 1935.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. And it is now desired to make it permanent?

Mrs. NORTON. Yes. The authority under the present law terminates on April 13, 1939.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Can the gentlewoman from New Jersey tell us how much it costs the Bureau and also what the receipts are?

Mrs. NORTON. The cost depends entirely upon the nature of the information requested and the time necessary to prepare it.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. But there must be some regular employees carried by the Bureau for this special purpose.

Mrs. NORTON. Yes. This comes under Mr. Lubin's department, the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. It certainly must cost the Government something.

Mrs. NORTON. It does not cost the Government anything. The charge is passed on to the parties requesting the information.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Suppose nobody asked for information.

Mrs. NORTON. Then none would be furnished.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. What about the salaries of the clerks who prepare this information? There must be some employees carried for the purpose of preparing these studies.

Mrs. NORTON. Before the study is undertaken a contract is made with the person requesting the information. As has been explained, there is absolutely no additional cost to the Department for this service. I refer the gentleman to the report of the Senate committee in which Senator LA FOLLETTE, Senator WALSH, and others recommended that this service be continued. Mr. Bell, the Acting Director of the Budget, advised that he has no objection whatsoever to the submission of the bill to Congress; that it will not cost the Government any additional money.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. It is a service that is desired, and I believe the Committee on Labor is unanimous in its report on the bill.

Mrs. NORTON. Yes. The bill is accompanied by a unanimous report from the committee.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I cannot, however, agree with the statement that it does not cost the Government something, because a certain number of clerks are necessary if we are to give this service.

The lady has not any information with reference to the receipts?

Mrs. NORTON. If the gentleman would like me to do so, I can read a letter from the Secretary of Labor in full explanation.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. What becomes of the fees? Are they turned into the Treasury?

Mrs. NORTON. Yes. Into the Labor Department treasury or fund to pay for the service rendered as per contract.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON]?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the authorization contained in the act entitled "An act to authorize the Department of Labor to make special statistical studies upon the payment of the cost thereof, and for other purposes," approved April 13, 1934 (48 Stat. 582), as amended, is hereby extended without limitation as to time.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A similar House bill (H. R. 5226) was laid on the table.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts, in his usual critical way, recited some instances in reference to the activities of the Federal Housing Administration, and in particular he referred to what he called two St. Louis projects, characterizing them as "hot potatoes." He stated further the St. Louis Representatives did not care to handle the "hot potatoes," and it became his duty to do so, or words to that effect.

Mr. Speaker, it so happens that these "hot potatoes" are not in my congressional district. They are, however, in the metropolitan district of St. Louis. They are in St. Louis County, which adjoins the city of St. Louis, and, when occupied, probably 85 percent or more of the tenants will be people who earn their livelihood in the city of St. Louis.

I am one St. Louis Representative and one Representative in this House who never has nor never will condone any fraud or any unethical practice. The gentleman knows that I have talked to him on numerous occasions about the St. Louis projects. I have not only talked to the gentleman from Massachusetts, who is a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, but I have also talked to the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL], and other members of that committee, urging that something be done to correct such practices as the gentleman referred to. What was the answer that I got from the gentleman from Massachusetts? The answer he gave me was that he did not blame the Federal Housing Administration but he blamed the law. I said to him, "Then it is your duty and the duty of your committee to see that the law is so changed as to prevent a recurrence of what has happened in St. Louis."

I repeat what I said to the gentleman from Massachusetts and to other members of his committee, "If it is the law, the law should be changed," and it should be changed when this bill comes up tomorrow.

The gentleman suggests that we look at the hearings. The gentleman has full information with reference to what occurred in St. Louis. He has this from the lips of officials of the Federal Housing Administration, besides what he has received from newspapers and in letters, which I have likewise received. If it is the fault of the law, why are not suggestions made to improve the law? It is not too late to prepare an amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I want to say publicly, just as I have stated to the Federal Housing Administration, not once but many times, that I do not propose now, nor at any other time, to approve the manner in which the Federal Housing Administration permitted the promoters to cover the 20 percent which was necessary under the law to receive an allocation from the Federal Housing Administration. What has happened? I do not know whether the figures given by the gentleman from Massachusetts are absolutely correct, but they are approximately so. I think the promoters in one project claimed they put in in the land $44,000 rather than $35,000. I say this in fairness. The Federal Housing Administrator told me, as he told the gentleman from Massachusetts, that he was not interested in the price of raw land. I told him, in my opinion, he should be interested in the price of raw land, and I say so now. If the promoters after purchasing land had spent thousands and thousands of dollars in putting in water, gas, electricity, and other improvements, including streets, sidewalks, alleys, and roadways leading to the project, then they would have a perfect right to add to the purchase price of the land the amount that was spent in making these improvements. That would be perfectly proper. It is my understanding, however, that not a dollar of their own money was spent inside of the building line, or inside of what we might term the property line. The streets, sidewalks, and so forth, were taken care of out of money received after the F. H. A. guaranteed the mortgage. The money that the promoters spent or intend to spend, if it has not already been spent, was for the roads leading up to the property outside of the property line. How much that is, I do not know.

If we are going to have a set-up which provides that promoters shall advance 20 percent before the Government shall guarantee 80 percent of the mortgage, then I say we should have 20 percent of money, not of watered stock or inflated values of any kind. That is my viewpoint. I have already stated in plain language that I do not approve of the manner the 20 percent is accounted for as it was in the two projects discussed.

I tried to get a complete break-down on the projects. What the officials of the Federal Housing Administration insist is that the promoters, in making up their 20 percent, spent $50,000 of their own money on roads, and so forth, leading up to the Manhassett Village project, which has been completed, which, of course, was added to the cost of the land, and, I presume, they took the position in constructing the roads, and so forth, up to the land where the building was constructed they increased the value of the land much more than $50,000. This $50,000 was spent outside the property line. The other amounts in making up the 20 percent on Manhasset Village was, according to F. H. A., $125,000 in cash advanced by the promoters and claims for services amounting to $121,000. How they reached the amount for services I do not know.

I insist we still have a chance tomorrow to correct this law so this cannot recur, the gentleman from Massachusetts insisting it is the fault of the law. I do not know whether this has happened in any other place in the United States, but I believe we would be far better off if the Government bought the land and then went out and asked for bids and let all responsible contractors bid on projects where they found these projects to be necessary in order to house the people properly. You would get your projects constructed for far less than they are costing under the present set-up and you would still have it done by private contractors, and your insurance companies would still take the mortgages, and the watered stock would disappear. The F. H. A. says the promoters have nothing but common stock and they are not going to realize anything on that common stock at all until the bonds are paid off, and that might be 20, 25, or 30 years from now. They call their method a new financial set-up. They say, if there is any water in the stock, the promoter is carrying the water rather than the general public. as in the old way.

Here is how Mr. McDonald explains that and other features of the project. I quote from a letter he wrote me:

Putting it tersely, this new type of financing, under which Manhassett Village is built, eliminates any watered stock in the venture, but if there should be any, it puts it in the pockets of the promoter instead of those of the bondholders and investors, and if his pockets are made of rubber and he can carry the water until the mortgage is paid off, he may be able to turn it into something useful—but not until then can he take a nickel out of the project without the F. H. A.'s approval.

So, if there is any bag to hold, instead of the public or the gullible investor holding it, it is the promoter this time.

Of course, the F. H. A. lets the promoter build the building, and if he can make a legitimate profit in doing so, or if the subcontractors can make a legitimate profit in doing so, or if the labor can get regular wages in doing so, the F. H. A. has no complaint; but we first estimate the cost of the building carefully and so do the mortgage companies making the loan. In this instance the New York Life Insurance Co. and the F. H. A. figured independently and their estimates were only $12,000 apart.

However, we do require the contractor to make a firm bid, and since the firm is a responsible one and, furthermore, has to put up a surety bond with a reliable surety company guaranteeing completion in accordance with plans and specifications and approval of F. H. A. inspectors, there is no way the fulfillment of the obligation can be avoided. We have two outstanding inspectors on these projects who will see the rigid specifications are carried out.

Building under a large contract is a very speculative venture. If the contractor is confronted by a rising market, labor troubles, bad weather, or if there should be jurisdictional disputes between various labor unions, or if he should run into bad foundation problems requiring more retaining walls or further-driven piling, and dozens of other ills and unknown hazards that contractors are beset with, then he might run into a very substantial loss on his contract, which he is obliged to carry out in accordance with his bond.

Furthermore, these buildings are of a new type of apartment-house construction in that they only occupy approximately 25 percent of the ground area, as against 75 to 80 percent of the ground area occupied by the old type of apartment houses.

Neither do they have any inside rooms, and, moreover, there is cross ventilation in every apartment, which is highly essential in summer in St. Louis.

This is one of the reasons why these apartment houses have proved so popular and have been fully rented almost immediately on completion in practically every city where they have been built.

How much a village of this type enhances the neighborhood is something that has not yet been fully determined. We do have here, for instance, in Arlington County, Va., near Washington, two of the most outstanding projects—Colonial Village and Buckingham. Colonial Village has just recently caused its mortgage to be paid off, insurance canceled, and reappraised on a valuation greatly in excess of what we gave it. Incidentally, the same life-insurance company took back a new mortgage at one-half of 1 percent less rate and with no insurance.

In the case of Buckingham the owners have just had to pay $70,000 for a little less than 5 acres, which they could have bought when they first started 2 or 3 years ago for around $1,500 an acre, showing how much this village has increased property values in that neighborhood.

It seems strange to us that we should be attacked at the same time by apartment-house owners because the rents on our projects are lower than what they want on their existing old properties, and, therefore, we are appraising too low, while others attack us because we are appraising too high.

Mr. Speaker, my constituents are not going to occupy these apartment houses. What I am interested in and they are interested in is low-cost housing. I represent people who need low-cost housing. When I am talking about low-cost housing I am not talking about $8,000, $10,000, $12,000, or $15,000 houses, either, I am talking about $3,000, $4,000, or $5,000 houses, something they can afford to live in.

My people are also interested in the Federal Housing program because I represent thousands of building mechanics who were hard hit by the depression. These constituents get work constructing the projects which enables them to support themselves and families. I supported the original law and amendments from time to time although I have tried hard to get more attention paid to the three, four, and five thousand dollar projects and also the interest reduced on the low cost housing projects. I recall offering an amendment to lower the interest rate on the last bill considered. I also supported title I, which I understand has not been popular with some, because the Government has lost money under that title.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield to my colleague from Missouri in whose district the projects are located.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Does the gentleman know of any member of the St. Louis delegation who would approve of or condone any fraud in any department?

Mr. COCHRAN. I certainly do not. So far as I have been able to ascertain no St. Louis Member of Congress or any other Member had anything to do with the "hot potatoes," so called.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. If this is any violation of law or any fraud, as the gentleman states, and if he has positive proof of it, does not the gentleman believe it is the gentleman's duty as a citizen to present the matter to the Federal grand jury?

Mr. COCHRAN. Nothing like that will occur, and I will tell you why. I am going to read just exactly what happened in the committee room of the Committee on Banking and Currency.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. I read from the hearings. Mr. McDonald, the Federal Housing Administrator, was on the stand, and Mr. GIFFORD, the gentleman who has just criticized the projects, said:

I want to congratulate you in this respect: That is, you were given the job to get this house building going in a hurry. It was a thing to pull the country up. You have been able to show $71,000,000 of insured mortgages already, and I want to congratulate you for doing your best. I ask you bluntly now, after your experience, is it not very difficult to protect yourself?

Mr. MCDONALD. It is the most difficult job I have ever had.

Mr. GIFFORD. I said a year ago, and I say it again now. My sympathy goes out for you, really. I do not claim I could do any better or anything like nearly as well. I do not claim that at all, but I do claim in looking this up it is about as we expected.

The gentleman from Massachusetts patted Mr. McDonald on the back after he got through criticizing him, and then he comes on the floor to criticize him. I am not saying the gentleman's criticism is not justified, but he is acting in a different way this time than he generally does.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there, because the gentleman wants to be fair?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield. Of course, I want to be fair to my good friend.

Mr. GIFFORD. I did not criticize them on the floor today. I said they were doing the very best they could under such a law and under such circumstances. Twice I said it. I have not criticized them up to this moment, and I am very grateful to the gentleman from Missouri for agreeing with me on everything I have said. The "hot potato" I got from your own own newspapers.

Mr. COCHRAN. I will accept the gentleman's explanation that his remarks were not critical of the F. H. A.

Mr. GIFFORD. I have not criticized them a particle today for what they have done. I have criticized the law.

Mr. COCHRAN. I will agree with the gentleman to save argument and conserve my time. I want to proceed. He criticizes the law; not the F. H. A. Now, the gentleman has said he has been in the real-estate business for over 30 years.

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman knows how the dealers operate.

Mr. GIFFORD. Pretty nearly.

Mr. COCHRAN. He is a very able legislator.

Mr. GIFFORD. I hope so.

Mr. COCHRAN. I know he is, as he and I have been on a committee for 12 years. The gentleman understands the Federal Housing Administration Act far better than I do. I admit that. Therefore, I hope that tomorrow when this bill is up for consideration the gentleman will use his ability and submit amendments we can tack onto this measure that will absolutely prevent what the gentleman has spoken of today, and I will support the gentleman not only with my voice but with my vote.

Mr. GIFFORD. I thank the gentleman, but I may say I can do nothing against the poundage over there.

Mr. COCHRAN. I will help the gentleman work on the poundage on this side. [Applause.] If the gentleman will only bring in amendments, I will guarantee to get him votes on this side of the House and if he can muster the full total on his own side, and I am sure the gentleman can get the support of his leader [Mr. MARTIN] from his own State to do that. We will get votes on this side, and we are liable to add the amendments. I promise every assistance I can render the gentleman if he will submit the proper amendments.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Can the gentleman see one thing the three St. Louis Congressmen can do to stop this practice?

Mr. COCHRAN. I do not know of any way we can stop it, other than amending the law. The gentleman from Massachusetts says it is the law.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Unless the law is changed.

Mr. COCHRAN. That is correct. But I want the House and the people in my city to understand now that I do not condone any practices where land values are written up overnight, as they were written up in these two projects. I hope the gentleman from Massachusetts will realize now there is one St. Louis Representative—and I feel my colleagues take the same attitude—who is not afraid to handle the so-called "hot potato." [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. SIROVICH, for 2 weeks, on account of illness.

To Mr. MAGNUSON, for April 11, on account of official business.

To Mr. LELAND M. FORD (at the request of Mr. ANDERSON of California), for 3 days, on account of illness.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein certain letters from public officials of my State regarding the W. P. A.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by including a statement as to keeping out of foreign wars.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, the American people are looking to the Congress of the United States for immediate relief for the railroad industry.

So that the people of my district may speak their word, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD as a part of these remarks an editorial taken from the DuBois Courier, of DuBois, Pa.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

[From Du Bois (Pa.) Morning Courier of April 4, 1939]

ACTION—NOT ALIBIS

Informed quarters say that Congress will probably not get around to doing much about the railroad problem this session. The reason given is that the subject is extremely involved, and that there is sharp difference of opinion as to possible solutions.

If Congress really does attempt to alibi itself out of digging into this issue, it will do the Nation at large—to say nothing of the railroads, their investors, and their employees—a grave injustice. It takes no economist to see that our economic structure is dependent to a remarkable degree on what is happening to the railroads. A prosperous railroad industry means expansion and betterment and stimulation of all business. It means a tremendous amount of purchasing—everything from pins to locomotives—which is felt directly in every State, indirectly in every community, and which creates opportunity and productive employment.

So far as the question of differences of opinion over possible transportation legislation goes, it's hard to see how that is a real stumbling block—if Congress is willing to forget playing politics and examine the problem in a nonpartisan manner. A number of excellent, comprehensive solutions have been offered, of which the President's Committee of Six report is a recent and important example. These surveys all point to the fact that inequality of regulation, plus subsidies of some carriers, has been largely responsible for the railroad problem; that no industry can long continue to meet rising costs of wages, taxes, and materials if it is prevented by law from increasing the price of its own product, and that entire revision of our outmoded Transportation Act, in the light of current conditions, is vital.

It's squarely up to Congress. And that body faces no more important domestic problem. The country wants action, not alibis and evasion.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks, and to include therein a brief article of Walter Winchell, appearing in the New York Daily Mirror on last Tuesday with reference to war.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think that matter was put in the RECORD this morning by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF].

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I think this is a very important article, but since it has been put in the RECORD, I withdraw the request.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein a speech made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY] before the Military Order of the World War on Army Day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, on last evening Mr. Jesse Jones, Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, made a very informing statement over the radio and I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing that statement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. St. Claire, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Senate Resolution 118

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow and deep regret the announcement of the death of Hon. JAMES HAMILTON LEWIS, late a Senator from the State of Illinois.

Resolved, That a committee of 16 Senators be appointed by the President of the Senate to take order for superintending the funeral of the deceased Senator.

Resolved, That the secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, the Senate do now adjourn.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution of the House of the following title, which was thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. J. Res. 225. Joint resolution amending the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution providing for the construction and maintenance of a National Gallery of Art," approved March 24, 1937.

The SPEAKER also announced his signature to enrolled bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 10. An act for the relief of the Fred Harvey Transportation Department;

S. 11. An act for the relief of Hubert H. Clark and Dr. W. C. Copeland;

S. 511. An act for the relief of Dolores P. de Williamson;

S. 545. An act for the relief of George H. Pierce and Evelyn Pierce; and

S. 745. An act for the relief of the Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Co.

THE LATE JAMES HAMILTON LEWIS

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, it is my sad duty to announce to the House of Representatives the death of the Honorable JAMES HAMILTON LEWIS, the senior Senator from the State of Illinois, which occurred last night here in the Capital City.

The passing of Senator LEWIS so suddenly and unexpectedly brings to a close a long and distinguished career in the public service, and comes as a great shock, not only to us, his colleagues from Illinois, but to the people of the city of Chicago, the State, and the Nation.

Senator LEWIS was in his third term in the Senate, acting in that body as Democratic whip, a position he was reluctant to accept when it was offered, yet one in which he demonstrated the same ability and understanding which characterized his whole career of statesmanship. No man has served in either branch of Congress who was a more popular, colorful, and effective representative of the people than JAMES HAMILTON LEWIS. From the time he first came to Washington as a Member of this House, throughout his public career, which has ended so suddenly, his wide knowledge, fine culture, his perfect courtesy, and high character endeared him to all with whom he came in contact and enabled him to serve his city, State, and Nation in an outstanding manner. He was a soldier in peace and war time, in early youth rising to the rank of colonel in the Spanish-American War. He was a fearless legislator and an accomplished orator. He was a keen and discerning student of public affairs at home and abroad, and he labored unceasingly in the last few years of his career to aid in the solution of the great problems facing the American people, giving unsparingly of his time and energy to help promote those humanitarian objectives that would make America a better place in which to live.

Mr. Speaker, no man, in my humble opinion, has rendered more unselfish, patriotic, and efficient service to our country than this outstanding citizen of Illinois. His passing came in the midst of his work, in the Capital City of the Nation he so honorably served as a Member of the greatest legislative body in the world.

He died as I am sure he would have wished to die had he the choice to select the manner and time of his going. The people of our State, and especially of Chicago, will mourn with us his untimely passing. The Nation has suffered a serious loss, Illinois has suffered an irreparable loss in the death of a most distinguished citizen.

At a later date, Mr. Speaker, I shall ask that a day be set aside when the membership may offer remarks more protracted and suitable to the occasion in honor to the memory of the respected and beloved senior Senator from Illinois.

Mr. Speaker, I have been requested by several gentlemen to yield to them for a few brief remarks.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to my colleague the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, the Nation has lost a truly great son. I rise to pay humble tribute to the late Senator JAMES HAMILTON LEWIS, who was summoned last night to the eternal beyond. Words are inadequate to express the sadness of this hour to me. I know no man who so completely exemplified the finest things of life. I know no man who was so dearly loved and respected by all.

He was a soldier, a statesman, a gentleman, and a scholar. Of few men may that be said. In the service of his country, in war and in peace, he distinguished himself.

During the Spanish-American War he was staff colonel, and during the World War he was designated by General Pershing as soldier aide in France to Gen. George Bell.

With the sword he ably and courageously served his country. But he was more than a soldier: he was a statesman, devoted to the cause of peace and justice. On many occasions he was sent on diplomatic missions to Europe. He was knighted for his service by Belgium and Greece and was made a member of the Knights of the Round Table at London.

On the library shelves throughout the country will be found his writings. Removal of Causes from State to United States Courts; Constitutions, Statutes, and Their Construction; Two Republics—Rome and the United States; are among the scholarly books that bear his name.

Mr. Speaker, Senator LEWIS, summoned yesterday at the Nation's Capital to eternal rest just as the Easter sun was setting, was a great American and a statesman of whom Illinois was justly proud. His courtesy and thoughtfulness was always extended without stint to all regardless of their political faith.

Mr. Speaker, his courtly manner bespoke the broad vision and purpose of the Senator. He lived each day to serve, and he has erected a monument of service that time cannot destroy. His life will be a lasting inspiration to us and to those who come after us.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield now to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON].

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Speaker, 40 years ago the late JAMES HAMILTON LEWIS occupied the seat that I now occupy in this Congress. To my constituency in the city of Seattle JIM HAM LEWIS is a fond tradition. He went to school there. He taught in our university. He worked on our docks and practiced law in the city of Seattle, and represented that city in the Congress of the United States; and may I say to the gentleman from Illinois that the State of Washington mourns along with the State of Illinois and the Nation the passing of a great statesman.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I now yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MITCHELL].

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Speaker, I appear before you at this moment with a heavy heart, filled with sadness because of the great loss which this Nation and the world have sustained. I shall not speak of the late Senator LEWIS simply as a statesman. That has already been done by those preceding me. I shall not speak of him as a diplomat, for the reason a great deal has already been said along this line. During the brief moments allotted me I wish to speak of him as a friend to mankind—as a friend to helpless and downtrodden of all races and nationalities. I am in position to know real friends as many of you might not be. I have come in contact with men of all races and of all nations, in this country and in many foreign countries. Because of the color and hue of my skin and the race with which I am identified, I have an opportunity to see the bigness of men's hearts as a great many people cannot see it. I stand here to tell you that in the passing of Senator JAMES HAMILTON LEWIS this country has lost one of its most outstanding statesmen and diplomats. The world has lost one of its greatest scholars and most polished gentlemen. My race has lost a friend—true and tried. He was not only free from all race prejudice but he was more than that: his heart was filled with charity and sympathy toward suffering humanity wherever he found it, and his heart was filled with interest in those of our Nation, whether Jew or gentile, Protestant or Catholic, black or white. The color of the skin, the shape of the nose made no difference to him. He was truly a friend of mankind.

When I came as a Member to this House and looked around for friends on whose arms I could lean for help and support and when I looked in the direction of the Senate of the United States, it was none other than this great Chesterfieldian gentleman who said to me, "My office door stands wide open to you. Have no hesitancy in calling on me for help whenever you think help is needed." He said to me that in 1913 when the Senate was considering the confirmation of a Negro for judge here in the District of Columbia, "It was my vote and my work that made it possible for a member of your race to sit on the municipal bench in the District of Columbia." I have gone to this great statesman time and again for help and advice. He never refused or failed to help me. Just 2 weeks ago he called my office, an unusual thing, and said to me, "The first time you are on the Senate floor or the first time you have a moment to spare I want you to come over. I want to have a talk with you." I was then rushing to go down South to speak at Tuskegee, and I did not find the time to comply with his request. It is now one of the sad moments of my life to think of the opportunity I lost by not going when I was called by this true friend of my race and true friend of mankind.

As shadows cast by cloud and sun
Flit o'er the summer grass,
So, in thy sight, Almighty One,
Earth's generations pass;
And as the years, an endless host,
Come swiftly pressing on,
The brightest names that earth can boast
Just glisten and are gone.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield now to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KELLER].

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, at the present time I rise only to announce that the gentlewoman from New York, Mrs. O'DAY, who knew JAMES HAMILTON LEWIS as a young man in his home town, is going to speak on that phase of his life. Following her in due course, I am going to speak on his entry into the politics of Illinois and his election to the United States Senate, in which I took considerable part. We are trying to go along the same line that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MITCHELL] has just started, to get a true understanding of the man from a statement of the facts in relation to him rather than in praise of him, because all will praise him, but we want to get the facts back of the praise.

For that reason the gentlewoman from New York [Mrs. O'DAY] will speak, and I am going to follow along, as I have suggested at the proper time, and I will ask to be permitted to put our remarks in the RECORD at this place when they are ready.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution (H. Res. 157), which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 157

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. JAMES HAMILTON LEWIS, a Senator of the United States from the State of Illinois.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased Senator.

Resolved, That a committee of 16 Members be appointed on the part of the House to join the committee appointed on the part of the Senate to attend the funeral.

The resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it proper to state that, inasmuch as the funeral services of the late distinguished Senator will not be held until Wednesday, the Chair will appoint the funeral committee on tomorrow.

The Clerk will read the balance of the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the House do now adjourn.

The resolution was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 52 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, April 11, 1939, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE

TUESDAY, APRIL 11, 1939

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, who hast given Thine own self so wondrously that, when we seek, we find Thee everywhere: Speak to us out of Thy great world's throbbing heart concerning the things that belong to our peace, and reveal in the hush of this moment the sacramental gifts of life whereby strength is imparted for our great emprise; friendship, knitting heart to heart; joy, too wonderful for words; and sorrow, when Thou drawest nigh with love's immeasurable tenderness, for here on earth evil and tyranny, poverty and sin, retain their ancient power, and all man's learning seems to leave him still unsure.

At such a time as this let every man among us seek first the kingdom of God and His righteousness; then shall the light dawn and our eyes shall waken to reality; then, and not until then, shall we see the King coming in His beauty, arrayed in the garments of peace. So may Thy coming be, Lord Jesus. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Monday, April 10, 1939, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to approve the action of the Secretary of the Interior deferring the collection of certain irrigation construction charges against lands under the San Carlos and Flathead Indian irrigation projects, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

PINE RIDGE, S. DAK., LOST ALLOTMENT CLAIMS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to provide for the correction of the list of approved Pine Ridge lost allotment claims, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

LANDS IN CALIFORNIA AND NEVADA—FORT MOJAVE RESERVATION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to reserve certain public-domain lands in California and Nevada for the use and benefit of the Indians of the Fort Mojave Reservation, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

PURCHASE OF INDIAN PRODUCTS BY GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to modify sections 68 and 87, title 25, United States Code, so as to permit employees of the Government to purchase arts and crafts and other products manufactured, grown, owned, or controlled by Indians, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of Minnesota, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Concurrent Resolution 15

Concurrent resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to revise the Social Security Act or to pass a new act, so that the Federal Government will assume one-half the burden of aid to dependent children

Whereas the Congress of the United States, acting in accordance with the demands of the President, did enact a law extending assistance to dependent children; and

Whereas the present Social Security Act provides that the several States pay two-thirds of the grants-in-aid for dependent children; and

Whereas the present Social Security Act provides for reimbursement to the States to the extent of one-half of the moneys expended for old-age assistance and assistance to the blind; and

Whereas this appears to be a discrimination against aid to dependent children, and not a fair apportionment: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Minnesota (the house of representatives concurring therein), That Congress at its present sitting be, and the same is hereby, urgently petitioned and requested to amend the Social Security Act or to pass other appropriate legislation whereby the Federal Government will assume one-half of the burden and payment of aid to dependent children; be it further

Resolved, That a duly authenticated copy of this resolution be presented to the President of the United States, the presiding officers of the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, and to each of the Senators and Representatives from the State of Minnesota.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of Hawaii, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the Twentieth Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii (the senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States be, and it is hereby, respectfully requested to enact legislation permitting the Territory to tax the income of Federal officers and employees in the Territory on the same basis as other residents of the Territory; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded to the President of the Senate of the Congress of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, to the Secretary of the Interior, and to the Honorable SAMUEL WILDER KING, Delegate from Hawaii to the Congress of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of Nevada, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Senate Joint Resolution 13

Whereas the laws of Nature are the governing forces of the universe, including human civil relationships, and were so referred to in the Declaration of Independence as "the laws of Nature and of Nature's God";

Whereas the fundamental natural law controlling human relationships as they exist in communities, states, and nations, and as between nations, is the law of supply and demand;

Whereas an essential requisite of the law of supply and demand is a basic medium of exchange properly distributed;

Whereas gold and silver have been recognized as such medium of exchange throughout recorded history, and, as said by the distinguished statesman James G. Blaine, "The two metals have existed side by side in harmonious, honorable companionship as money ever since intelligent trade was known among men";

Whereas the framers of the National Constitution, among the limited restrictions placed upon the powers of State governments, included the provision, "No State shall make anything but gold and silver coin a tender in payment of debts";

Whereas the United States operated upon the bimetallic standard from the time of its organization until 1873, when, at the time of the revision of the statutes into a new code, without any public knowledge or the knowledge of the Members of the Congress generally, the silver dollar was omitted from the list of coins required to be minted;

Whereas the demonetization of silver by this Nation followed closely upon similar action taken by the British and German Empires, shortly following general world knowledge that this Nation was possessed of great silver mines, which would be a most material aid to it in solving the financial distress resultant of the War between the States;

Whereas history demonstrates that the action of England was prompted by a desire to continue to purchase the cotton crop of the Southern States without danger of an increase in the price therefor, and that of Germany because of the exaction of a payment by France of a billion dollars in gold upon the conclusion of the Franco-Prussian War;

Whereas the effect of the action of Germany was, as stated by Senator Blaine, "Thus by one move the German Government enhanced consequently the value of gold, and then got into position to draw gold from us at the moment of their need, which would also be the moment of our sorest distress"; and the action of England was, as stated by Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, "England is governed in her attitude toward silver solely by her own interest. * * * The rest of the world stands either ready or anxious to do something for silver";

Whereas the declared policy of the United States is "to continue the use of both gold and silver as standard money, such equality to be secured by international agreement," as evidenced by three several acts of Congress passed, respectively, in the years 1893, 1897, and 1900, all of which are now in force, one of which, 1897, authorizes the United States to call an international conference for such purpose, and making an appropriation therefor, and the act of 1900, fixing the gold dollar as "the standard unit of value," provides that such act is "not intended to preclude bimetallism by concurrent action of the leading commercial nations of the world" (31 U. S. C. A., secs. 311–314). That the issue in the Presidential campaign of 1896 was not the gold standard, but whether bimetallism should be accomplished by this Nation acting alone or by international agreement;

Whereas, as a result of conditions growing out of the World War, by 1930 the United States had acquired half the money gold of the world and France a fourth thereof, leaving the major portion of the world without sufficient basic money to carry on international trade;

Whereas the record of the production of gold and silver establishes the fact that the two metals exist in nature by weight at a ratio of almost exactly 15 to 1;

Whereas the known world supply of money gold is substantially 550,000,000 ounces, which, expressed in United States money at the coinage value of $20.67 per ounce, would represent, in round figures, $11,550,000,000, and at the present advanced value, $35 per ounce, about $20,000,000,000;

Whereas the world's population is approximately 2,000,000,000, and that of the so-called leading commercial nations 1,300,000,000, or 10 times the population of the United States, and if gold were apportioned at the former coinage value, would make a per capita circulation for all such nations of approximately $9, and, at the present advanced value, $15. At the beginning of the depression in this Nation, 1930, the per capita amount of gold by it held was about $40, and now is about double that amount;

Whereas international commerce requires that the balance of trade be accounted for in basic standard money, and the fact that the United States had acquired half the standard money of the world by 1930 made it impossible for the farming industry of this Nation to find a market for its surplus products, particularly wheat and corn, a large portion of which has been shipped to the Orient, until the exhaustion of the Orient's finances, which left ships at their docks in American ports and the surplus wheat and corn was thus made the occasion for the agricultural depression affecting all industry, with the consequent loss of employment to many millions of citizens;

Whereas, in determining the amount of basic money required by the leading commercial nations of the world to adequately transact national and international trade, other matters, such as national resources and wealth, should also be considered, upon a basis of population alone, a gold-money basis of $25 per capita, would require that gold be advanced to $60 per ounce, and if a return be made to bimetallism on the present gold value of $35 per ounce, silver would be advanced to $1.33 per ounce, the old European standard;

Whereas the world depression, causing wars and threats of war, with the terrible consequences resulting therefrom to all nations, including not only both vanquished and victors, but to peaceful nations as well, is the necessary result of the failure to recognize and provide for the normal operation of the natural law of supply and demand;

Whereas a basic standard of money is necessary, as is the yardstick for length and the pound for weight, in the normal operation of the law of supply and demand, and that such basic standard be relatively apportioned and distributed;

Whereas the United States is the greatest producer of silver, and the direct loss to this Nation by its demonetization, shortly following the discovery of great silver mines, was around a billion dollars and the earning power thereof for all time;

Whereas the production of silver like that of gold not only aids the immediate place of production but mainly the Nation at large, as witness the laying of the Pacific cable and the building of the postal telegraph from a portion of the product of the Comstock lode;

Whereas silver is usually found with other metals and the price thereof often makes possible the successful operation of deposits containing gold, copper, iron, lead, zinc, and other metals essential to industry;

Whereas the act of Congress of March 3, 1897, authorizes the calling by the United States of an international conference "with a view to securing by international agreement a fixity of relative value between gold and silver as money," provides for the appointment by the President of commissioners, and makes an appropriation for the expenses of such conference;

Whereas at this time, as said by the act of Congress of March 14, 1900, "Conditions * * * make it expedient and practicable to secure international bimetallism by current action of the leading commercial nations of the world and at a ratio which shall insure permanence of relative value between gold and silver": Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States be, and it hereby is, requested to make provision for the calling of such international conference and for the consideration of all other matters that may appropriately be involved, and that the President be, and he hereby is, requested to appoint commissioners to such international conference, as in said act provided, or as the same may be amended to more fully deal with situations now confronting this Nation and the world, to the end that wars may be averted and the world returned to conditions of permanent peace and universal prosperity through the normal operations of natural laws, and particularly that of supply and demand;

Resolved, That His Excellency the Governor of this State be, and he hereby is, requested to send a certified copy of this resolution to the President and the Congress of the United States and to the Governors of the several States.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a letter in the nature of a memorial from the San Pedro (Calif.) Home Owners' Protective Association, by F. O. Adler, president, remonstrating against the operations of the United States Housing Authority, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions of Buffalo (N. Y.) Typographical Union, No. 9; S. W. O. C. Local No. 1577, of Provo, Utah, and Los Angeles (Calif.) Auxiliary Council, I. L. W. U., protesting against amendment of the National Labor Relations Act, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate petitions of sundry citizens of Denver, Colo.; Lincoln, Nebr.; Montgomery, Ala.; Richmond, Calif.; and New York City, N. Y., praying for the enactment of the so-called Wagner-Van Nuys-Capper antilynching bill, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate telegrams in the nature of petitions from the executive committee of Local G–472, Workers' Alliance of America, and the Twentieth Assembly District Branch of the Communist Party, both of San Francisco, Calif., praying for an appropriation of $150,000,000 for the Works Progress Administration program, as recommended by the President, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the Parliament of Community Councils of New York City, N. Y., favoring the appropriation of $150,000,000 for the Works Progress Administration program, as recommended by the President, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, I present for appropriate reference and will read into the RECORD a petition from 147 delegates to a convention representing 65 colleges and universities of the South. The petition reads:

To the Congress of the United States:

We, the undersigned students from southern colleges and universities, believe that the United States should assist the nations desiring peace by sending them raw materials, munitions, and technical advisers, and should apply economic sanctions against the aggressors. With that end in view, we respectfully urge the adoption of the Thomas resolution (S. J. Res. 67).

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petition will be received and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. DANAHER presented a resolution of the Padriac Pearse Council, American Association for the Recognition of the Irish Republic, of Hartford, Conn., expressing appreciation to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], Representative MCCORMACK, and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER], and others, for valuable services extended to the movement to have the United States give formal recognition to the Irish Republic, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. WALSH presented a resolution of the General Court of Massachusetts favoring the enactment of legislation to provide for the reimbursement by the Federal Government of cities and towns for the amount of welfare aid and relief granted by them to aliens, which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

(See resolution printed in full when laid before the Senate by the Vice President on March 31, 1939, p. 3598, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

Mr. TYDINGS presented a petition of members of Cheverly Legion Post No. 108, American Legion, of Cheverly, Md., praying for the enactment of House bill 5, to amend the act approved June 28, 1934, to compensate widows and children of persons who died while receiving monetary benefits for disabilities directly incurred in or aggravated by active military or naval service in the World War, as amended, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. LOGAN presented petitions of sundry citizens of the State of Kentucky, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the advertising of alcoholic beverages by press and radio, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. CAPPER presented a petition, numerously signed, of sundry citizens of Mitchell County, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation exempting small independent telephone companies from the operation of the Labor Standards Act of 1938, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented resolutions of Locals Nos. 36 and 232 of the United Packing House Workers, of Kansas City, Kans., protesting against amendment of the National Labor Relations Act, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a petition from the president and secretary of the Women's Home Missionary Society of the University of Methodist Episcopal Church, of Salina, Kans., praying for revision of the Neutrality Act (1) to extend the embargo to cover essential war materials as well as munitions and (2) to lift the embargo from the victim or victims of aggression, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a resolution of the Kansas Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, protesting against increase of the quotas for the admission of aliens to the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. GREEN presented the following resolution of the General Assembly of Rhode Island, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor:

Resolution requesting the Senators and Representatives in Congress from Rhode Island to confer with the Federal Works Progress Administrator in order to secure for all persons on the Works Progress Administration rolls in each of the cities and towns of Rhode Island an equalizing of the rate of wage per hour as payment for services rendered

Whereas in the State of Rhode Island there is an evident and unjust inequality in the rate of wage per hour paid to employees on the Works Progress Administration rolls and in the maximum number of hours said employees may be permitted to work, which in the opinion of the General Assembly of Rhode Island should be adjusted as soon as possible: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island respectfully requests the Senators and Representatives in Congress from Rhode Island to confer with the Federal Works Progress Administrator in order to eliminate the inequality now existing in the rate of wage per hour paid to employees on the Works Progress Administration rolls and to secure for all said employees in each of the cities and towns of Rhode Island an equal rate of wage of 50 cents per hour and opportunity to work the maximum number of hours per week elsewhere permitted; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state be, and he hereby is, directed to transmit duly certified copies of this resolution to the Senators and Representatives from Rhode Island in Congress and to the Federal Works Progress Administrator at Washington, D. C.

Mr. KING presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of Hawaii, which was referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs:

Whereas the Congress and the national administration have repeatedly recognized the status of the Territory of Hawaii as an integral part of the United States and entitled to treatment by the Federal Government in all respects on equality with the several States; and

Whereas the said Territory has ever since its voluntary annexation in 1898 more than paid its way as said integral part of the United States, having contributed in the 1938 fiscal year to the Federal Treasury internal-revenue collections of over $14,000,000, or more than any one of 15 of the States; and

Whereas the control of the Works Progress Administration in Hawaii, after having been efficiently and honestly handled by civilian control, has been transferred to the United States Army, as has been done in no other State or Territory; and

Whereas said transfer is regarded by the civil population of Hawaii as not constituting treatment of the Territory on a basis of equality with the States, but as constituting discrimination against the Territory and its 400,000 civil population, and as a virtual repudiation of the heretofore recognized status of the Territory: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii (the senate concurring), That a vigorous protest be entered on behalf of the people of Hawaii against said transfer of control of the Works Progress Administration in the Territory to the United States Army, and that the officials responsible for said transfer be, and they hereby are, respectfully requested to rescind said transfer order and return said Administration in Hawaii to civil control; and be it further

Resolved, That properly certified copies of this resolution be transmitted to the Honorable Franklin Delano Roosevelt, President of the United States of America; Hon. Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior of the United States; Col. F. C. Harrington, National Administrator of the Works Progress Administration; Hon. William H. King, Senator from Utah, chairman of the Joint Committee on Hawaii; Hon. Millard E. Tydings, Senator from Maryland, chairman of the Senate Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs; Hon. Lex Green, Congressman from Florida, chairman of the House Committee on the Territories; and to Hon. Samuel Wilder King, Delegate to Congress from Hawaii.

FLORIDA SHIP CANAL

Mr. KING presented a letter from the president of the Miami (Fla.) Chamber of Commerce, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MIAMI CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
March 15, 1939.

Hon. WILLIAM H. KING,
Senate Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR KING: Gov. Fred P. Cone has recently assured the Rivers and Harbors Committee that "Floridians are 'wholeheartedly' in favor of the proposed cross-State canal." South Florida will face irreparable loss through the completion of this canal, and Governor Cone's statement does not express the opinion of residents south of the canal.

South Florida's continued existence as a mecca for hundreds of thousands of tourists annually would be placed in jeopardy with the completion of this project. Thousands of citizens—farmers, citrus growers, and extensive property owners of this area—are protesting the Florida cross-State canal.

After careful investigation, we consistently maintain this project would not only endanger our agricultural advancement but also the water supply. We feel that this canal would be absolutely ruinous to this area, which includes two-thirds of Florida's population.

Among other important reasons for this opposition are:

(a) No demand for this project from shipping interests.

(b) Negotiations of canal during winter would be difficult because of fog and high cross winds.

(c) Operators of steamship lines say canal would not be used extensively.

(d) Tremendous waste of money.

We earnestly seek your assistance in defeating this measure and urge you to hear the voice of the people of south Florida.

Sincerely,

C. D. LEFFLER, President.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 1574) to authorize the attendance of the Marine Band at the national encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic to be held at Pittsburgh, Pa., from August 27 to September 1, inclusive, 1939, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 258) thereon.

Mr. SMITH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 3946) to authorize the attendance of the Marine Band at the United Confederate Veterans' 1939 Reunion at Trinidad, Colo., August 22, 23, 24, and 25, 1939, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 259) thereon.

Mr. GLASS, from the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 4830) to amend the act approved April 27, 1937, entitled "An act to simplify accounting," reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 260) thereon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY—PRINTING OF ADDITIONAL COPIES OF HEARINGS

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, from the Committee on Printing I report back favorably, with an amendment, Senate Concurrent Resolution 7, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 7) submitted by Mr. DONAHEY on March 20, 1939.

The amendment was, in line 9, after the words "printing of", to strike out "2,000" and to insert "1,000", so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That, in accordance with paragraph 3 of section 2 of the Printing Act approved March 1, 1907, the special Joint Congressional Committee of the Congress appointed pursuant to Public Resolution No. 83, approved April 4, 1938, to make a full and complete investigation of the administration of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933, as amended, be, and is hereby, empowered to procure the printing of 1,000 additional copies of the hearings held before the said committee during its investigation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS ACT

Mr. ELLENDER. I introduce a bill to amend the National Labor Relations Act, which I ask may be appropriately referred and printed in the RECORD, together with a statement relative to the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the bill and statement referred to will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 2123) to amend the National Labor Relations Act was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That paragraph (c) of section 9 of the National Labor Relations Act is amended to read as follows:

"(c) Whenever a question affecting commerce arises concerning the representation of employees, the Board shall investigate such controversy and certify to the parties, in writing, the name or names of the representatives that have been selected. In any such investigation the Board may provide for an appropriate hearing upon due notice, and shall take a secret ballot of employees within 20 days after receipt of a petition for certification from 25 percent of the employees in an appropriate unit. Any such election which results in the selection of representatives shall foreclose further elections in the same unit for 1 year except upon petition of the majority of the employees in the appropriate unit. Certification shall be made or refused, based on the result of the secret ballot, within 10 days after the election. Failure of the Board to act as herein provided shall constitute a denial of certification."

SEC. 2. Section 9 of the National Labor Relations Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(e) No provision of this act shall be so construed or administered as to cause the disestablishment or destruction of a labor organization because it is not affiliated with any national or international organization; nor shall any such local labor organization be denied a place on an election ballot, be denied certification, or be otherwise discriminated against because of its nonaffiliation with an outside group."

SEC. 3. Section 10 of the National Labor Relations Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(j) Any labor organization aggrieved by a certification for collective-bargaining purposes or an order of election or a denial of certification following an election by the Board under section 9 may obtain a review of such certification or order of election or denial of certification in any circuit court of appeals of the United States in the circuit wherein the labor organization thus aggrieved has its principal office or place of business, or in the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, by filing in such court a written petition praying that such certification or order of election of the Board be modified or set aside, or that the Board be ordered to make certification in accordance with the provisions of section 9.

"(k) Any labor organization aggrieved by the failure of the Board to act as provided for in section 9 (c) may petition any district court of the United States in any district wherein a question concerning representation has arisen to issue appropriate writs to compel the Board, or any agency or agent thereof, to perform its functions and duties under section 9 (c)."

The attitude of the National Labor Relations Board toward independent unions, that is, unions unaffiliated with national or international organizations, has been so uncompromisingly hostile that some protection by law must be given these local organizations. Although it has been pointed out by many persons that nothing in the National Labor Relations Act prohibits the existence of local unions, the law has been administered by the Board in such a manner that it is almost impossible for local unions to live. Collective bargaining, which the act was supposed to encourage, has thus been frustrated when the bargaining organization was one which the Board looked upon with disfavor. The Board elected to destroy collective bargaining rather than permit such local unions to live. The Board has not destroyed all local unions, but its record has been very bad. A local union comes before the Board with two strikes on it. The Board views them all with suspicion.

A simple declaration of policy should be enough to guide the Board. Such a declaration and guaranty I have attempted to incorporate in my proposed amendments. The guaranty seeks to eliminate certain frivolous pretexts the Board has used consistently as reasons to destroy local unions. But experience has shown that the Board knows how to interpret the law to its own ends and that it is disposed to do so. "Stalling" action on petitions to certify or petitions for elections by local unions, refusal to include them on the ballot, consolidating their cases with trumped-up complaint cases against the employer in order to delay action have been among their standard tactics. These tactics have been very effective, much too effective, in the absence of duties laid upon the Board to take action within a definite time limit upon representation petitions by unions or employees, and in the absence of any right of appeal to the courts for relief by employees or unions which have been imposed upon by the Board.

Hence the necessity for section 1 of my amendments, rewriting section 9 (c) of the act so as to lay definite duties upon the Board and a time limit in matters of elections and certifications.

Also the further necessity of providing a review by the courts of actions taken by the Board in such matters which a labor organization might consider unfair. This is done in section 3 of my amendments, while section 4 of my amendments furnishes the machinery for forcing the Board to act in accordance with the duties laid upon it in representation matters if it fails to act or tries to destroy or to discourage a union by "stalling."

These four proposed amendments are required to protect by law the rights of unions which the Board might be hostile to, regardless of the nature of the union. The present Board happens to be hostile to local or independent unions. Another Board might be hostile to national unions or those affiliated with national unions. My amendments protect all alike against an arbitrary administrative tribunal.

PROGRAMS OF ADULT CIVIC EDUCATION

Mr. LEE. I introduce a bill to assist the States and Territories in establishing and developing programs in adult civic education, and so forth. I ask that the bill be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor and that a tabular statement relating thereto be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and referred, as requested by the Senator from Oklahoma, and, without objection, the statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 2151) to promote the general welfare through the appropriation of funds to assist the States and Territories in establishing and developing programs in adult civic education providing for (a) removal of illiteracy, (b) naturalization education, and (c) public affairs forums during a 3-year period was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The statement presented by Mr. LEE is as follows:

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED

The following bills were each read twice by their titles and referred as indicated below:

H. R. 3314. An act to provide shorter hours of duty for members of the Fire Department of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia; and

H. R. 5482. An act to increase the authorization for appropriations for the administration of State unemployment compensation laws; to the Committee on Finance.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS AND SOCIAL SECURITY SYSTEM—AMENDMENTS

Mr. MURRAY submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1265) to establish a Department of Public Works, to amend certain sections of the Social Security Act, and for other purposes, which were referred to the Special Committee to Investigate Unemployment and Relief and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 5269, the Agricultural Department appropriation bill, 1940, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

On page 63, line 6, after the words "roads" and comma, insert the following: "including the purchase of necessary materials to be used in conjunction with W. P. A. labor in improving roads in the Wichita Mountains Wildlife Refuge, not exceeding $30,000", and on the same page 63, in line 17, strike out the figures "$600,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$680,000."

PROPOSED AMENDMENTS TO NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS ACT

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, in view of the widespread interest in problems affecting the National Labor Relations Act, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD, as part of my remarks, the text of my statement today, with accompanying tables, before the Committee on Education and Labor.

There being no objection, the statement and the accompanying tables were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY MR. WAGNER ON PROPOSED AMENDMENTS TO THE NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS ACT, BEFORE THE SENATE COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION AND LABOR, APRIL 11, 1939

Mr. Chairman and members of the committee: As I am not the sponsor of any of the bills now before you for consideration, I want to emphasize my thanks to you for allowing me to appear as the first witness in these momentous hearings, and to explain very clearly why I have asked for this opportunity to be heard.

I am not here in response to the pressure and propaganda that have been bearing down upon the National Labor Relations Act. If I had been inclined to yield to pressure, I would never have fought for 2 years for the enactment of this law, in the face of organized opposition and personal vituperation which make the present situation seem mild by comparison. If I had been affected by pressure, I would have made some commitment to propose to amend the National Labor Relations Act during my recent campaign in New York, when most of the powerful interests in the State and most of the press were urging me to take such action. I refrained from doing so, because I believed it important to restate to the American people the fundamental soundness and justice of the National Labor Relations Act, and not important to make the going easier for myself by endangering the act by hurried decisions. I did not respond to pressure under those circumstances, and I certainly do not propose to do so now.

Nor have I asked to appear as the spokesman of any particular group. I do not represent the views, nor have I consulted the wishes, of the National Labor Relations Board, the American Federation of Labor, the Congress of Industrial Organizations, or the National Association of Manufacturers.

I have scrupulously avoided any interference or appearance of interference with the Board administering the act or the parties involved, directly or indirectly, in cases before the Board.

Nor am I here as the spokesman for what may be called the administration's labor policy. I have no authority to speak for the administration. I have no desire to speak for any particular administration, or any particular political group, in discussing a matter that I have always regarded as nonpartisan, and as fundamental to the welfare of the country as a whole.

I come before you today only as the originator of the National Labor Relations Act, more profoundly convinced than ever of its essential wisdom, its essential justice, and its significant accomplishments. I speak as one who not only in heart and mind but in continuous practice has tried to be the friend of every man who works honestly for a living, regardless of what union he belongs to or whether he belongs to any union at all. I come before you as one who earnestly shares the desire of businessmen for industrial peace, who has had considerable experience in conducting agencies established for the maintenance of industrial peace, and who has gained in those agencies the one supreme lesson that the price of industrial peace must be industrial liberty. And I come before you finally as one who believes that the greatest issue confronting the country today is the preservation of political democracy, and that the price of political democracy in the modern world must be industrial freedom.

The tragic prostration of the democratic ideal in some countries in recent years cannot be studied without adding compelling weight to a statement I made for the New York Times on May 9, 1937. There I said:

"The struggle for a voice in industry through the processes of collective bargaining is at the heart of the struggle for the preservation of political as well as economic democracy in America. Let men become the servile pawns of their masters in the factories of the land and there will be destroyed the bone and sinew of resistance to political dictatorship.

"Fascism begins in industry, not in government. The seeds of communism are sown in industry, not in government. But let men know the dignity of freedom and self-expression in their daily lives, and they will never bow to tyranny in any quarter of their national life."

These words are even truer today than when they were written.

My appearance before this committee does not indicate the slightest departure from the position that I have maintained consistently since the statute was enacted in 1935. I have never subscribed to the belief that the volume of criticism or propaganda directed against any statute proves of itself that where there is a lot of smoke there must be some fire. My 30 years of experience with progressive social legislation have taught me that the more clearly and effectively a statute strikes against existing evils and inequalities in our social structure the more likely it is to produce violent opposition preceding its enactment and in the years immediately succeeding its enactment.

To this unvarying rule the Labor Act has been no exception. The barrage of highly organized opposition upon its introduction in Congress probably broke all records for selfish misrepresentation. Some of the charges circulated at that time by antilabor forces seem almost ludicrous today. For example, the Automobile Manufacturers Association said in a circular to the public that the act would "make the American Federation of Labor practically undisputed czar over industrial and clerical workers throughout the United States." Is that true today? The National Association of Manufacturers began a circular to the public by saying that the bill was "in total disregard of every fundamental concept of legal rights and remedies." Can this be true when the United States Supreme Court in 17 cases has never nullified a single line of the statute? The American Iron and Steel Institute said that "the bill is designed to control all labor matters by political rather than economic forces and to destroy the friendly relationship now existing between employers and employees." How does this square with the fact that in 1937 the United States Steel Corporation accepted the act, and that the 1938 report of the corporation said that "the year * * * reflected the continuance of satisfactory employer-employee relations"?

The simple truth, gentlemen, is that it takes not days or weeks or months, but years for fundamental reforms like the Labor Act to become generally accepted. Frequently the realization that they are becoming generally accepted increases the clamor and agitation of the unyielding opposition. Sometimes the opposition succeeds temporarily in biasing the public mind, and then it is the function of the statesman to separate the expediencies of the moment from the needs of the country. The volume of discussion about the National Labor Relations Act therefore does not in itself make out a case for or against changing the act. It merely proves that the act is a living, throbbing issue, affecting so largely the country as a whole that whatever action Congress takes upon it should be based upon the most careful deliberation and the most sensitive perception of our public responsibility.

For the same reasons I have never subscribed to the belief that the wide variety and multiplicity of amendments proposed to the National Labor Relations Act prove in themselves that the act should be changed. The very variety and conflicting character of these proposals at least make it seem likely that some of them must emanate from those who want to destroy the basic purposes of the act, and that none of them should be accepted without a very careful consideration of its consequences in terms of the broadest perspective.

In connection with proposals to change the act it is only proper to weigh heavily the desirability of stability in industrial relations. Every step that the Supreme Court has taken toward clarifying the meaning and defining the scope of the act has made it easier for workers and employers to deal successfully under its provisions. Every change in the act will involve new uncertainty, new litigation, new areas of disagreement and conflict. Of course, the desire for stability is no excuse for perpetuating a revealed wrong. If such wrongs are disclosed, they should be remedied. But it is equally true that light-hearted or experimental tampering with the act will only increase the perplexities of industry, labor, and the public. In short, it seems a wise rule to follow that in the interest of stability, those desirous of change should carry the burden of proof. And this is doubly true because the facts reveal that the basic principles of the act are sound and that it is promoting industrial peace.

At the same time, I have never maintained that the National Labor Relations Act was perfect nor sought to prevent its perfection. I have always maintained that the act could be and should be perfected in the light of sufficient experience, upon the proof of clearly revealed need for specific changes that would advance and not impair its sound objectives. I have always insisted that an appropriate place to weigh this experience and test these proposals was in the same legislative committee where the original act was judged. That is why I am here now, gentlemen, and that is why I heartily commend this inquiry.

In line with my consistent position, I do not propose prior to hearing the testimony now commencing to introduce any amendments to the National Labor Relations Act. When I have heard and studied the testimony to be submitted to this committee, I may desire to introduce some amendments if the need is revealed, and to ask your indulgence that you may consider them along with the other proposals now before you. I can assure you now that no amendments which may be introduced by me will be designed to secure the support of any group, labor or employer, whose interests are narrower than the preservation of industrial peace and the advancement of the legitimate aspirations of industry and labor. I hope that any such amendments as I may introduce, if the need is revealed, will appeal to all those to whom the original National Labor Relations Act appealed, to all those who believe in the simple basic principles of industrial democracy, to all those who want to establish an economic democracy more compatible with our political democracy.

But while I believe that a determination as to the desirability of specific additions to the law should await the outcome of these hearings, I think it would be a serious mistake to commence these hearings as though we were starting out upon an uncharted sea. Our Government has mapped the course of the labor problem for many, many years and gathered up a rich and unanswerable experience. The general direction of sound policy has already been set, and there are innumerable rocks and shoals that we know about and must at all costs avoid.

I shall attempt today to delineate the facts emerging from this experience. Are the fundamental premises of the National Labor Relations Act sound? Has the act contributed to industrial peace? Are its administrative provisions consistent with traditional principles of administrative law under our constitutional system? Is the act helping the worker to be a free man? Has the act been beneficial to the people as a whole? Is any additional governmental machinery or any change in the present law necessary to round out public action in labor relations and to promote still further the dual objective of industrial peace and economic justice?

A generation ago the traditional method of the Government in labor disputes was to appoint distinguished fact-finding commissions after the trouble was over. For example, there was a commission to investigate the Pullman strike in 1894, there was the United States Anthracite Coal Commission of 1902, and the commission to investigate the Colorado coal strike of 1912. While these commissions dealt with different industries, their conclusions were virtually identical. Again and again they found that the denial of labor's right to be heard in the councils of industry was the root cause of the industrial struggle. Again and again they found that the recognition of this right was the only sure basis for industrial peace and rational conduct of business affairs.

It soon became plain that instead of post mortems it was desirable to avert or modulate these bitter controversies by eliminating the practices which brought them about. This in substance was a recommendation of the United States Commission on Industrial Relations a quarter of a century ago. And when the United States entered the World War, President Wilson made sure not to destroy industrial peace by denying in American industry the fundamentals of democracy for which we fought on the battlefield. The war President appointed a National War Labor Board under the chairmanship of ex-President Taft. The cardinal principle of this Board was that the "right of workers to organize in trade-unions and to bargain collectively through chosen representatives is recognized and affirmed. This right shall not be denied, abridged, or interfered with by employers in any manner whatsoever."

By the application of this simple rule of industrial liberty the United States was able to reconcile the vigorous pursuit of the war with the vigorous maintenance of our peacetime liberties.

Exactly the same principle, written into the Railway Labor Act of 1926, successfully ended a 50-year search for economic accord on our great systems of interstate transportation. I know of no other major industrial country in the world where the main arteries of communication have been so free from interruption because of difficulties between those who run the trains and those who own the trains.

In 1933 Congress again resorted to the same principle when it passed the National Industrial Recovery Act. In August of the same year the President appointed the first National Labor Board, as an informal agency, and designated me as chairman. Over a span of 10 months this Board handled more than 4,000 cases involving over 2,000,000 workers. Our experience in this work afforded the fullest opportunity to study at first-hand the causes of industrial strife and to develop the appropriate remedies.

The major issue in over 70 percent of the cases which came before the old Board was that of employee representation and collective bargaining. Operating under a vague mandate, and with uncertain powers, the Board developed step by step every one of the substantive features now embodied in the National Labor Relations Act. The Board ruled that the employer was under a duty to bargain collectively with his workers; that majority rule should govern the choice of employee representatives; that workers discharged because of union activities should be reinstated; and that the company-dominated union was incompatible with the freedom of the worker to organize. In its very first case, involving a controversy over representation, the Board ruled that an election should be conducted by secret ballot. The Board thereafter utilized the election procedure in more than 130 instances, including the famous Captive Mines election where 14,000 workers voted in perfect order and quiet. In all, the Board was able to adjust over 80 percent of the cases coming before it, settling over 1,000 strikes and averting at least 500 more.

The principles evolved in detail by the old National Labor Board represented the united viewpoint of a membership composed of such outstanding labor leaders as William Green, John L. Lewis, and George Berry; such leading industrialists as Walter Teagle, Pierre du Pont, Gerard Swope, Louis Kirstein, Clay Williams, Ernest Draper, and Henry S. Dennison; and such respected representatives of the general public as Monsignor Francis J. Haas, Dr. Leo Wolman, and Dr. Leon C. Marshall. In all the cases which came before the Board there was only one important dissenting opinion. To my mind, the complete agreement by so varied a group of men proves something of vital significance. It proves that no matter what a man's background, once he stops obtaining his information from fragmentary reports or a dilettante interest, and wrestles intimately with the heavy problems of capital and labor, he is forced inescapably to accept the validity of principles enunciated so often by our Government and now embodied in the National Labor Relations Act.

But, despite the unanimity of the old National Labor Board, its effectiveness gradually broke down because of the violent opposition of a relatively few powerful organizations who would not accept the principles of industrial democracy. They would not bargain; they would not talk; they would not even sit in the same room with the representatives of their workers. Strife grew because there was no other way out.

To remedy these deficiencies, and to establish permanent machinery for dealing with the mounting industrial warfare, I introduced the first national labor relations bill in the spring of 1934. The bill was not rushed through Congress. Very extensive hearings were held before this committee over a period of 4 weeks, and more than 1,000 pages of testimony were taken. The bill did not pass that year, but instead the life of the old National Labor Board was prolonged, with some slight variations in its set-up. Again the authority of this Board was widely flouted, and in 1935, with the industrial front aflame with strikes and threats of strikes, I reintroduced an improved draft of the national labor-relations bill. Hearings were held for several weeks before this committee and the House Labor Committee. With the active cooperation of the American Federation of Labor throughout, the measure was finally approved by an overwhelming vote and signed by the President.

The present law as adopted by Congress was simple in outline and sound in conception. It did not propose to establish compulsory arbitration, to fix hours, wages, or working conditions. It did not displace the conciliation functions of the Department of Labor. It did not interfere with the normal exercise of the employer's rights to hire or fire, or to operate his business in his own way. All it did was to codify and clarify the age-old bill of industrial rights, and to prohibit the specific practices that were antagonistic to the realization of these rights. The discriminatory discharge, the "yellow dog" contract, and the company-dominated union were proscribed. The law required the employer to bargain collectively with representatives chosen by a majority of the employees in the appropriate unit, and authorized the holding of elections to determine employee representation. By these means the act was designed to mitigate bitter industrial strife over employee organization and representation, and to encourage the voluntary settlement of controversies over wages, hours, and working conditions around the conference table. The administrative provisions of the law followed the Interstate Commerce Act, the Federal Trade Commission Act, and other accepted statutes. There was created a quasi-judicial agency known as the National Labor Relations Board to hold hearings, to certify representatives, and to issue orders subject to appropriate judicial review before they became effective.

Under the most favorable circumstances it would have been difficult in 1935 to launch the administration of a new law so widespread in its application and so far reaching in its purposes. But the ink was hardly dry upon the President's signature when the law's effectiveness was destroyed by a carefully guided attack, led by the same narrow interests that had misrepresented its provisions and fought its enactment.

Even before the Labor Board had issued its rules and regulations, the notorious Liberty League brief was issued by 58 lawyers of a self-constituted supreme court. This brief, copies of which were circulated by the thousands throughout the country, solemnly pronounced the law unconstitutional on almost every count. There was widespread noncompliance; and in the district courts throughout the land about 100 injunction suits were filed to resist even the holding of hearings. Behind this screen of injunction suits and widely publicized claims of unconstitutionality, a new trade flourished, thriving on industrial munitions, guards, and spies. I need not recall to this committee the result of the exhaustive and brilliant investigation made by your own subcommittee, which exposed widespread violation of the rights of labor and shocking denial of common civil liberties.

The purveyors of guns, bullets, and scabs were not concerned with improving the administration of the law. They had a golden interest in strikes and violence, and their motivation was expressed by one munition salesman when he wrote:

"I think someone should get out a restraining order on the President of the United States to prevent him from stopping all those strikes. It seems to me that his actions are absolutely in restraint of trade—that is, as far as we are concerned."

What was the outcome? Workers who had placed faith in the power of their Government to vindicate the law were victimized by the thousands. Only by brute economic force could they defend the rights which the law recognized but did not enforce. Their force was met with counterforce. Consequently there descended upon the country almost an unprecedented reign of industrial terror and terrorism.

At the peak of this development came the five Supreme Court decisions of April 12, 1937, upholding the Labor Act in full, and giving the Board the power to seek its enforcement through the Circuit Courts of Appeals. That marked the real birth of the National Labor Relations Act, the real date from which its functioning must be conscientiously appraised.

In order to show the driving force of the Labor Act in the direction of industrial peace, I have had prepared a number of charts, indicating in graphic detail the tremendous decline in strikes since the law has been in effective operation.

Chart No. 1 shows the number of strikes, the workers involved, and the working time lost throughout the country over a period of years. This chart shows that in 1938, the first full year of operation under the Supreme Court's mandate, there were only about half as many strikes, one-third as many workers involved, and less than one-third as much working time lost as in the year 1937.

Not only does 1938 show a tremendous improvement over 1937, but it represents the best record in recent years:

The steady upward trend in the number of strikes over a period of 8 successive years was definitely reversed.

Fewer workers were involved in strikes during 1938 than in any year since 1932.

Less aggregate working time was lost through strikes in 1938 than in any year since 1931.

The precipitate decline in industrial strife during 1938 cannot be explained away on the ground of diminished business activity in the early part of the year. The national income produced during 1938—the best index of general business activity—while lower than in 1936 and 1937, was higher than in 1932, 1933, 1934, and 1935; and yet less working time was lost through strikes in 1938 than in any of these years. Moreover, the rapid stepping-up of business activity in the second half of 1938 was not accompanied by a corresponding increase in labor strife, and no such increase is on the horizon at the present time.

There is ample evidence that this solid improvement in labor relations is due largely to the operation of the Labor Act. Let me demonstrate this first by reference to charts analyzing the data on industrial strife according to the major issues involved.

Chart No. 2 shows a drop during 1938 in the proportion of "organization" strikes—i. e., disputes involving the major issues, in whole or in part, of union recognition, discrimination, closed shop, or other organization matters. More significant still, the proportion of workers involved in such strikes declined from about 60 percent in 1937 to 33 percent in 1938, a level far lower than the average for the past 10 years.

Chart No. 3 shows that the proportion of working time lost through "organization" strikes declined from 76 percent in 1937 to 44 percent in 1938, a level lower than in any year since 1932.

And these are figures for all strikes in the United States, not simply those which occur in interstate industry or are involved in cases before the Labor Board.

The Labor Act was designed to eliminate the causes of "organization" strikes, and it is rapidly accomplishing that result. Chart No. 4 shows very clearly just how industrial strife is giving way to the orderly processes of law. For each month between the appointment of the Labor Board in October 1935, and the end of the last fiscal year, the chart indicates the number of new strikes and the number of new cases filed with the Board. Notice how significantly the trend is disclosed. In the first few months of the Board's operation there were more cases filed with the Board than strikes called. But as resistance to the law stiffened and injunction suits multiplied, this proportion shifted. All during 1936 and through March 1937 there were more strikes called than cases filed. The turning point came in April 1937 with the Supreme Court decisions upholding the law. Beginning in May 1937, and in every month since, the number of cases filed with the Board has averaged three and one-half times the number of strikes.

The contrast is even more significant when limited—as it should be—to "organization" strikes. Since May 1937 the number of new Board cases each month has ranged from 3½ to 10 times the number of "organization" strikes.

Substantially the same story is told by chart No. 5, comparing the number of workers involved in new Board cases with those involved in new strikes. Since May 1937 the number of workers involved in Board cases has ranged from 1½ to 18 times the number of workers involved in "organization" strikes.

I sincerely hope that the committee will keep these charts available throughout the hearing, to confront those who may be inclined to repeat the misstatements that the Labor Act has increased rather than diminished the incidence of labor strife.

Finally, let us look at the record on sit-down strikes. The Supreme Court put the final stamp of illegality on sit-down strikes in its very recent decision in the Fansteel case, which embodied views I have expressed from the beginning. But let it be noted that it was not the Fansteel case that stopped sit-downs. The sit-down flared in the early months of 1937 preceding the Supreme Court decisions upholding the Labor Act, and as promptly declined in the months following these decisions in 1937. This is demonstrated graphically by chart No. 6, showing the number of sit-down strikes and workers involved since January 1937. At the peak, in March 1937, there were 170 sit-downs involving 167,210 workers. The chart shows the very steep decline during the ensuing months, so that all through 1938 both the number of sit-down strikes and the number of workers involved hugged the zero base line.

In brief, once workers were afforded a peaceful, valid remedy for eliminating the grievances at the root of the sit-down strikes, the sit-downs virtually disappeared from the American scene.

I am personally gratified to see fulfilled a prediction which I ventured in the Senate at the height of the sit down strike wave early in 1937, just prior to the Supreme Court decisions upholding the act:

"The industrial warfare of today is the result of a long course of conduct in the history of American industrial enterprise. Two wrongs never make a right. But all wise government consists in determining which evil is the underlying cause and which the effect. Deal only with the effect, attempt to force the effect underground, and the underlying causes are fertilized and multiplied. Deal with the underlying causes, and the evil effects disappear. The National Labor Relations Act is directed against the proved causes of Nation-wide industrial conflict. Let the Federal Government have the power and the determination to enforce that law on a national scale, and the Nation-wide conflict will subside."

Two years ago this was a prediction. Today it is a fact.

Statistics of declining labor disputes are only a partial reflection of the better industrial order which is gradually emerging. This change cannot be traced through the comparatively few cases which are litigated in the courts. It is to be traced in the day-to-day life of industry which does not lend itself to spectacular newspaper headlines.

In the last 2 years alone several thousand new labor agreements have been signed. Almost entirely through the informal method of achieving compliance, the law has provided a peaceful forum for about 20,200 cases, involving more than 4,500,000 workers. Ninety-four percent of the cases under the act have been adjusted without issuing a complaint or holding a formal hearing. More than 227,000 workers have been restored to their jobs after strikes or lockouts and over 15,000 after discriminatory discharges.

It is especially gratifying to observe the effective operation of the machinery established to hold employee elections whenever a question concerning representation arises. Over 589,000 workers have participated in 1,863 elections conducted under the law, and over 2,000,000 workers have joined in petitions for elections or certifications of representatives. Here, as in other phases of the law, the go-ahead signal was given by the Supreme Court decisions in April 1937. In the 18 months preceding that date only 76 elections were held; in the 18 months following the decisions 1,448 elections were conducted. So widespread has been the resort to election machinery since the Supreme Court decisions that in the last fiscal year such cases involved a majority of the workers who invoked the machinery of the act. In other words, charges of violations of the law are decreasing, and the law is being invoked more and more for the purpose of determining which labor organization is the choice of the employees for purposes of collective bargaining.

The National Labor Relations Act has thus played a notable constructive role in our national life. To millions of workers, it has brought a better understanding of their employer's problems, and the material and spiritual value of participating in a free organization of their fellows for mutual aid and protection. To most employers who have given the principles of the act a fair trial, it has brought labor peace and, beyond that, a more human relationship with workers based on the mutual respect and understanding that grows out of free bargaining between free men. These employers—and they now represent the overwhelming majority—are among the chief beneficiaries of the Labor Act.

This historical account supplies the frame of reference that is indispensable to any judicially minded deliberations upon the future of the Labor Act. In evaluating the various proposals now before this committee, we must start with the demonstrated proposition that the basic objectives and philosophy of the act have been so thoroughly justified that no responsible person now openly denies their validity. For this reason the ultimate test of whether any particular amendment is sound or unsound is whether it advances the main purposes of the act and conforms to its essential philosophy.

I believe that some of the amendments now proposed are demonstrably unsound on the basis of sufficient knowledge and experience already available. But in discussing some of them I do not mean to imply that my views are unalterably fixed, no matter what these hearings may reveal.

For example, the amendments proposed by Senator BURKE would have the effect, among other things, of placing restraints upon the right to strike. No such proposal can strengthen or improve the Labor Act because it is antagonistic to the whole spirit and purpose of the law. The spirit and purpose of the law is to create a free and dignified workingman who has the economic strength to bargain collectively with a free and dignified employer in accordance with the methods of democracy. The abolition or curtailment of the right to strike is a denial of the principles of democracy and a substitution of the methods of the authoritarian state. The design of the Labor Relations Act is to reduce the number of strikes by eliminating the main wrongs and injustices that cause strikes. The imposition of legal restrictions upon the right to strike, instead of removing these wrongs, would merely deprive the worker of his inalienable right to protest against them.

The various arguments for limiting the right to strike generally rest upon the claim that the English law has been successful in this direction. The British Trade Disputes Act of 1927 placed restrictions only upon sympathetic strikes which are outside the trade or industry originally affected and are designed to coerce the Government. But as a matter of policy in England, this prohibition has never been invoked, while strikes within this category are frequently illegal here. In addition, an infinite variety of strikes which are entirely permissible in Great Britain are unlawful in a majority of American jurisdictions. Many of our States prohibit strikes for the closed shop, in violation of contract, and to induce breach of contract. Our whole elaboration of the doctrine of conspiracies in restraint of interstate commerce under the antitrust laws, and the application of these laws to labor controversies, are outstanding examples of the far greater severity of American law.

The only thing that English and American experience proves, as the brilliant report of the committee sent by the President to Great Britain last year reveals, is that branding strikes as legal or illegal does nothing to decrease their frequency or intensity. England is free from industrial violence not because of English law but rather because British industrial life does not countenance the feudalistic practices which breed violence. When the fundamental right to organize and bargain collectively is as well recognized here as it is in England, there will still be some strikes here just as there are some strikes in that country. But they will be conducted peacefully in an atmosphere of mutual respect among free men. Every employer is free to refuse to sell his goods. I feel confident that this committee will reject as unwise and reactionary any proposal to limit the rights of free men to sell their labor on terms that are repugnant to their sense of justice.

Another class of amendments, also sponsored by Senator BURKE, would impose restraints of various kinds upon employees. These proposals, such as the now famous proposal to prevent interference "from any source," are put forward on the broad ground that the law as now written is "one-sided" and "unfair."

The frequently heard charge that the Labor Relations Act is "unfair" results from the device of looking at the act in an intellectual vacuum, instead of placing it in the context of our whole industrial life. In this intellectual vacuum, since the law confers direct protection upon employees alone, it is "one-sided" in the same sense that a workmen's compensation law is "one-sided" because it pays compensation to employees alone. It is "one-sided" to the same degree that the law of domestic relations imposes obligations upon the parent toward the child which it does not impose upon the child toward the parent. It is "one-sided" in the same way that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation law is "one-sided" in that it provides big loans to business and not small loans to laborers.

But when we take the Labor Relations Act out of this intellectual vacuum, and place it in the living context of our whole social system, the criticism that the act is "one-sided" or "unfair" is stripped of its improper setting and shown in its true light. For laws are not sterile propositions of logic, but instruments of human adjustment among the various individuals and groups in a real world. The test of whether a law is fair, is whether in conjunction with the other laws and facts of society, it establishes a fair relationship among the people and groups with which it deals. By this test, the labor act is eminently fair.

No just regard for the facts can possibly lead to the conclusion that the National Labor Relations Act creates an unfair relationship between the rights of the employer and the rights of the worker. Certainly the employer has the right to bargain collectively through the corporation and through Nation-wide trade associations. Certainly in dealing with labor and in all other business affairs, he has the privilege of selecting his own spokesman by majority rule. No working group has ever challenged the employer's right to use the collective-bargaining procedure in dealing with his employees, his competitors, and the general public. The simple truth of the matter is that all of the industrial rights which labor is accorded under the act have been enjoyed by industry for a century or more.

The Supreme Court of the United States has recognized that the act is not "one-sided." As Chief Justice Hughes in the Jones & Laughlin case said for the Court:

"In its present application the statute goes no further than to safeguard the right of employees to self-organization and to select representatives of their own choosing, for collective bargaining or other mutual protection without restraint or coercion by their employer. That is a fundamental right. Employees have as clear a right to organize and select their representatives for lawful purposes as the respondent has to organize its business and to select its own officers and agents."

At the present time there are about 6,000 State and local trade associations, 2,300 chambers of commerce, and about 2,000 interstate and national trade associations embracing every line of industry. The National Association of Manufacturers, when it came before Congress in opposition to the Labor Act, spoke for 50 trade associations, covering about 70,000 corporations employing over 2,000,000 workers. I do not need to go into the commonplace figures concerning aggregates of capital, interlocking directorates, superholding companies, and financial empires, to prove that the simple right to organize afforded labor under the labor act has been and is being enjoyed in greater measure by industry without challenge of any kind.

Nor is it true that the labor act affords legal remedies to the worker in the economic struggle that are "unfair" in comparison with the legal remedies afforded to the employer. So far as violence in industrial disputes is concerned, the laws of the States and municipalities affording protection against violence apply to the worker as well as to the employer, and the employer because of his superior economic strength and political position can invoke these laws much more easily in his behalf. The use of the injunction in labor disputes in many State courts is another powerful weapon which the employer has at his disposal in the labor struggle.

On April 3 of this year, in a Federal district court, the Apex Hosiery Co. of Philadelphia secured a judgment in treble damages of $711,000 under the antitrust laws against the American Federation of Hosiery Workers, as a result of a sit-down strike in 1937. I am unable to recall any final treble-damage judgment against any industry in recent years comparable to the Apex Hosiery judgment. In any event, it is an historic commonplace that the antitrust laws have been used more drastically against labor than against the monopolies they were designed to eliminate.

In addition to a legal system weighted heavily in his favor, the employer has at his disposal superior economic staying power, more money, better legal counsel, and better access to the instruments of public opinion. Against all this, the labor act gives the worker nothing but the right to institute a lengthy legal proceeding to protect his right to organize and bargain collectively, a right theoretically recognized by our law for a hundred years. To call this act "unfair" is to my mind to evince a case of economic astigmatism.

This charge that the Labor Act is "unfair" or "one-sided" is not new. It was considered carefully by this committee before the Labor Act was passed, and your report clearly revealed the animus behind all proposals based upon this claim. This committee recognized that the result of incorporating such proposals in the law "would be to overwhelm the Board in every case with countercharges and recriminations that would prevent it from doing the task that needs to be done." You further recognized that such proposals would nullify the sound purposes of the Norris-LaGuardia Act, and would reestablish all the abuses of the unfair labor injunction, abuses which it took 7 years to have removed from the Federal courts by congressional action.

Therefore, I say that the proposals to make the Labor Act less "one-sided," to "equalize" it, to prevent coercion from any source, are based upon the reactionary view that the worker should not have the right to organize, or upon the false view that today the worker has become a privileged character, receiving more than the just fruits of his labor. Such proposals are designed to destroy the equality of bargaining power that the Labor Act strives to make possible, and to restore the gross inequality of bargaining power that existed before the act was passed—the inequality that existed when the isolated worker stacked his pitiful weakness against the gigantic strength of consolidated capital. Such proposals are a threat not only to every worker in America but to every person in America who believes that the legitimate organization of labor represents a sound democratic principle in a modern industrial state.

Fair-minded and far-sighted employers realize that while the Labor Act is limited in its scope, it is not "one-sided," since it confers benefits upon employers who are wise enough to appreciate its value. By way of illustration, let me contrast how three great corporations of industrial enterprise have met their labor problems since the passage of the National Labor Relations Act.

The Remington Rand Co. is one of the great manufacturing enterprises in the United States, with consolidated assets of almost $50,000,000. Its properties are distributed in seven States of the Nation and four foreign countries, and its sales offices span the globe. Soon after the enactment of the Labor Act, the A. F. of L. unions, representing a great majority of the workers in six of the company's plants in New York, Connecticut, and Ohio, attempted to negotiate with the management on several important questions. In May 1936, after 5 months of unsuccessful effort to reach Mr. Rand, the responsible head of the company, for the purpose of discussing their grievances, more than 5,000 workers went on strike. Thereafter the company again and again refused to confer with the union officials, and nullified the efforts at mediation by the New York State Department of Labor, the mayors of several cities, the Connecticut State Board of Mediation, and the Governor of Connecticut.

Instead, the company set about to undermine and destroy the union by discharging all its leaders and expending at least $85,000 for the services of notorious strikebreakers and provocateurs, including Pearl L. Bergoff, "king of strikebreakers." Hundreds of guards, strikebreakers, and spies, many with criminal records, were turned loose on defenseless communities to ferret out the union's activities, stir up dissension, provoke violence, and foster "back to work" movements among the employees. This noble work was invested with the grandiose title of the Mohawk Valley Formula.

It took almost 3 years to bring the company to book under the Labor Act. Charges were filed with the Board, and a complaint was issued in July 1936. Thereupon the company brought an injunction suit in the Federal courts, which postponed the hearings for some months. In March 1937, after taking more than 5,000 pages of testimony, the Board rendered a decision finding the company guilty of violating almost every provision of the act. About 1 year later the United States Circuit Court of Appeals substantially affirmed the Board's order, and directed the company to bargain collectively with the union, to reinstate 28 employees who had been discriminatorily discharged, to restore the strikers to their jobs, and to refrain from dominating or interfering with the organization of its employees. The order became final when in May of the same year the Supreme Court denied the petitions of certiorari filed by the company and the company unions involved.

Substantial compliance with the order has been obtained with great difficulty, and then only under a threat of contempt proceedings.

Now let us turn to the bitter controversy in certain sections of the steel industry during the same period of time. The full details of this story were disclosed in the hearings before the Civil Liberties Committee, on the so-called "little steel strike" of 1937. At a meeting of the directors of the Iron and Steel Institute in New York, certain of the "independent" companies virtually agreed not to sign any agreement with the union, regardless of its terms, and regardless of the representation of the union in their respective plants. The result was the never-to-be-forgotten strike of 1937, during which the companies refused even to sit around a table with the union representatives at the request of the Mediation Board appointed by the President of the United States.

In this strike, as the committee disclosed, there occurred a mobilization of men, money, and munitions, which had not been approached in the recent history of labor disputes in America. Incomplete data assembled by the committee shows that 7,000 men were directly employed as guards, patrolmen, and deputy sheriffs, National Guard men, and company police. The Republic Steel Corporation alone spent $50,000 for munitions, or almost five times the expenditure of the Ohio National Guard for the same purpose. The total cost of the strike to the Republic Steel Corporation was $1,950,000 and to the Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co., $1,593,000. The total cost to these two corporations alone exceeded $3,500,000.

In the course of the strike, riot and bloodshed were common occurrences over a front of industrial warfare covering three States. Vigilante terror flared in many communities. Ugly tales of browbeating and influencing public officials were spread upon the record. Over 300 persons, chiefly workers, were injured and 18 workers were killed.

Decisions under the Labor Act have been issued in the cases of several of these companies, finding sundry violations of law. These cases are pending in the courts. Compliance with the spirit and the policy of the Labor Act would have averted all this bloodshed, misery, and economic loss.

Let us contrast these two sordid stories with the happier results of a more enlightened policy. In 1937, even prior to the Supreme Court decisions upholding the Labor Act, the United States Steel Corporation voluntarily disbanded the employee representation plan which had been the subject of a complaint. For the first time since 1909 its subsidiary corporations entered into collective-bargaining agreements with representatives of their employees organized in trade-unions.

This action was rightly hailed as an outstanding demonstration of industrial statesmanship. A year later the chairman of the board of directors of United States Steel reported to the stockholders that—

"The union has scrupulously followed the terms of its agreement and, insofar as I know, has made no unfair effort to bring other employees into its ranks, while the corporation's subsidiaries, during a very difficult period, have been entirely free of labor disturbance of any kind. The cost of a strike—to the corporation, to the public, and to the men—would have been incalculable."

The next and most recent report of United States Steel carried the same encouraging tidings of felicitous labor relations.

In short, gentlemen, the Labor Act could only be termed "one-sided" in its application to those employers who resist its fundamentally fair principles. Those employers who are desirous of substituting the enlightened methods of collective bargaining for the primitive methods of industrial strife find the principles of the Labor Act a suitable vehicle for advancing their interests and improving their industrial relations.

Just as I warn against affirmative amendments placing dangerous new obstacles in the way of the worker's right to organize, so I do not favor negative amendments reducing the scope of the fair rights accorded to workers under the present act. Thus I oppose Senator BURKE'S amendment to destroy majority rule, a rule which simply applies to our economic life the honored principles of our political system. Likewise, while I appreciate the good spirit in which it is offered, I do not agree with the amendment of Senator WALSH removing the present provision that employers shall not "interfere" with the self-organization of their workers. This amendment would remove a form of protection afforded not only under the Labor Act but also recognized by the principles of the War Labor Board and section 7 (a) of the N. I. R. A., and which labor now enjoys also under the Railway Labor Act, the Bankruptcy Act, the act to create the Coordinator of Transportation, the Norris-LaGuardia Act, and the various State anti-injunction and labor relations laws.

The ban against "interference" has been of central importance in protecting the right to organize under all these statutes, since it embraces a multitude of activities which would not be reached by specific prohibitions written into law, and would not be included within the range of such narrower concepts as "restraint" or "coercion." The amendment removing the prohibition against "interference" would cast doubt on hundreds of decisions issued under the Labor Relations Act, many affecting A. F. of L. unions, and put in question many victories in the courts, under this act as well as under the Railway Labor Act. The amendment allowing "interference" would, therefore, have serious consequences not only under the National Labor Relations Act, but might well serve as a dangerous precedent for amendments to other statutes won by labor only after hard-fought battles in State and Nation.

I should now like to discuss some of the procedural amendments which seem to me to threaten the effective administration of the National Labor Relations Act.

The amendment of Senator HOLMAN would separate the investigatory from the fact-finding functions under the act, a novel suggestion for this type of agency. One of the proposals of Senator BURKE would authorize the reviewing courts to set aside findings of fact, if in their judgment they were unsupported by the weight of the evidence. This would enable a court in every instance to substitute completely its judgment as to the facts for that of the administrative body, another novel procedure. Another of Senator BURKE'S amendments would permit any employer to transfer his case to the district courts at the start, thus completely avoiding recourse to the administrative tribunal. One of Senator WALSH'S amendments would authorize the district courts to issue proper writs at any time to compel the Board to perform its functions and duties. This would enable a party to shuffle every point in a case back and forth continually between district court and Labor Board, to the eternal delay of the workers seeking to vindicate their rights.

All of the above-mentioned procedural amendments would result in abandoning or seriously impairing the principles of administrative law that have evolved gradually since the pioneer establishment of the Interstate Commerce Commission in 1887. The concept of the administrative agency, growing up in necessary response to the manifold complexities of modern government, has been championed by Charles Evans Hughes, and by countless other luminaries of bench and bar. In a very vital sense, these administrative agencies have come to be regarded as the people's instruments of government, created to effectuate a particular policy more expertly, more sympathetically, and more efficiently than was possible under the rigid formalism of court procedure. Above all, these agencies give the worker a fairer chance, because he cannot afford to plunge into the costly arena of Federal court litigation. For these reasons, the people of my State resented and overwhelmingly repudiated the attempt made last year by a majority of our Constitutional Convention to destroy the traditional balance between the administrative agencies and the courts.

The National Labor Relations Act was established in accordance with the well-established concepts of administrative procedure. The present arrangements under the National Labor Relations Act are the accepted ones, the arrangements tested by 50 years of American experience. It is, of course, possible that special factors involved in labor relations make this traditional method unsatisfactory and require the substitution of a new and untried procedure. If this is the case, the Supreme Court of the United States has given us no indication to that effect. Chief Justice Hughes, writing for the Court after the first five cases involving the Labor Act were heard, said:

"The act establishes standards to which the Board must conform. There must be complaint, notice, and hearing. The Board must receive evidence and make findings. The findings as to the facts are to be conclusive, but only if supported by evidence. The order of the Board is subject to review by the designated court, and only when sustained by the court may the order be enforced. Upon that review all questions of the jurisdiction of the Board and the regularity of its proceedings, all questions of constitutional right or statutory authority, are open to examination by the court. We construe the procedural provisions as affording adequate opportunity to secure judicial protection against arbitrary action in accordance with the well-settled rules applicable to administrative agencies set up by Congress to aid in the enforcement of valid legislation."

The subsequent decisions of the Supreme Court in Labor Board cases have not only failed to modify this statement of the Chief Justice, but have demonstrated also that under the present act the Court can and will check what it regards to be any false step by the Labor Board.

While these proposals that I have been discussing are, in my opinion, detrimental to the objectives of the act, there are some others that merit the most careful study. Merely as an example, there is wide support for an amendment which would permit employers to petition for elections. As I have always said, there is nothing in the present act which denies this privilege to employers. The prohibition rests upon a ruling of the Labor Board. This ruling evolved before the current labor split, to meet the situation where an employer might attempt prematurely to "freeze" a situation produced by a long tradition of opposition to unionism. While there should still be safeguards against this situation, the labor split has introduced a novel situation where a well-intentioned employer is caught between the competition of rival groups. In such cases, under appropriate safeguards which these hearings should develop, I feel that the employer certainly should have the right to petition for an election. It would seem that the Board could accomplish this under its rule-making power. But if not, there should be legislation toward that end, unless these hearings develop compelling reasons, which I do not now see, why such a change would impair the objectives of the act.

I come finally to the portion of the amendments proposed by Senator WALSH which deal with the thorny questions of the appropriate bargaining unit and the validity of contracts.

The unfortunate division which now exists in the ranks of labor—a division which I profoundly hope will soon be ended—was not created by the Labor Act, but its repercussions have greatly complicated all problems of administration. The act itself did not put the stamp of approval or favor upon any particular type of union—outside or inside, craft or industrial. It only outlawed the dummy union set up by the company. Its only concern was to foster and protect the free choice of representation by the employees themselves. There is no claim to the contrary by any of those now sponsoring any amendments; but there is the claim that in its application to situations nonexistent when the act was written, certain inequities have grown up. It will be entirely possible and desirable during these hearings to develop a detailed examination of the facts and the issues in all the disputed cases, comparatively few in number, where this question is the critical one.

In conclusion, while I am, of course, entirely open-minded in regard to anything that these hearings may reveal, I submit that the following main truths, demonstrated by long experience, may guide the way to a wise and just solution of all the problems now confronting this committee:

First, the proof is overwhelming that the Labor Act, in its broad outlines, has proved an effective instrument for economic peace and industrial justice. It has vastly benefited workers, employers, and the public at large. No one challenges its objectives; no responsible party openly advocates its repeal. Any diminution of its effectiveness would be a national evil; its mutilation would be a national calamity.

Second, it is an established phenomenon of American economic life that a very small but amazingly compact and powerful minority has fought the main objectives of the Labor Act tooth and nail at every turn, in Congress and in courts, day and night. These groups are perfectly within their rights as free citizens in believing sincerely that the act is unsound and in trying consistently to destroy it. I respect their right to do so and do not question their motives. But the fact must be faced squarely that they are trying to destroy rather than to perfect the act; and those who want to preserve the act must of necessity deal with them accordingly.

Third, the amendments to the act proposed by labor groups and by labor's friends deserve the most careful consideration. At the same time, every worker in America should realize that while the friends of the Labor Act's main objectives are weakened by factional strife, the opponents of labor are strong and united. For this reason every worker who wants to remain free should look long and searchingly at each proposal designed to change the act that has helped so much to make him free.

Fourth, the amendments pretending to make the act "fair" by placing new restraints on labor would in true effect upset labor's new equality of bargaining power and resign labor to its earlier status of the economic underling.

Fifth, the amendments proposing drastically to change the administrative provisions of the act would, I believe, weaken the traditional type of informal tribunals where the average man has a better chance to be heard. Without having that intent, they would in my judgment tend to have the result of forcing labor to seek its rights through methods which are too expensive and time consuming for the poor man to afford.

Sixth, reckless tampering with the act will substitute uncertainty for certainty in the law, will start a long new train of test suits and interpretations, and will shake the stability and the surer blessings of industrial peace that thousands of employers enjoy under the present act as interpreted by the courts.

Seventh, within a comparatively narrow field there may be some changes in the act which the hearings before this committee will reveal to be sound in principle and practical in operation. If the need for these changes emerges as a product of this full and open-minded inquiry, I shall feel it my duty to introduce or support the substance of such amendments and to help enact them into law.

Before these hearings have proceeded far, it will become apparent that, while labor has some complaints to make against the Labor Act, and they may indeed be just ones, many of those who will gather here to indict the Labor Act can lay no claims to having ever been friends of labor. I therefore appeal to all those in America who are sympathetic to the just aspirations of the average man, who do believe in economic democracy, who do recognize that liberty and peace are inseparable, to rally to the defense of what the National Labor Relations Act stands for, to make sure that whatever may be done to the act is done in furtherance of its noble objectives.

In closing let me say that there is no short cut or alternative solution to that afforded by the principles of the National Labor Relations Act. In the words of the United States Commission on Industrial Relations, created by act of Congress 27 years ago:

"The struggle of labor for organization is not merely an attempt to secure an increased measure of the material comforts of life, but is a part of the age-long struggle for liberty; this struggle is sharpened by the pinch of hunger and the exhaustion of body and mind by long hours and improper working conditions; but even if men were well fed, they would still struggle to be free."

Strikes in the United States from 1927 to 1938, inclusive (to accompany chart 1)

Year	Number of strikes	Number of workers involved	Number of man-days idle

CALL OF CALENDAR DISPENSED WITH

The VICE PRESIDENT. The routine morning business is concluded. The consideration of bills on the calendar under rule VIII is in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the call of the calendar be dispensed with.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had accepted the invitation of the Senate to attend the funeral services of Hon. James Hamilton Lewis, late a Senator from the State of Illinois, to be held in the Senate Chamber on Wednesday, the 12th instant, at 2:30 p. m., and that the Speaker had appointed a committee of 27 Representatives to attend the funeral of the deceased Senator and to act in conjunction with the committee of the Senate to make the necessary arrangements in connection therewith.

ADDITIONAL APPROPRIATION FOR WORK RELIEF AND RELIEF

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate resume the consideration of House Joint Resolution 246.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 246) making a further additional appropriation for work relief and relief for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER].

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, when the Senate took a recess on Saturday a unanimous-consent agreement had been entered into to vote on the pending amendment, and all amendments thereto, not later than 2:30 o'clock p. m. on yesterday. Inasmuch as the Senate did not hold a session yesterday for the transaction of business, that agreement lapsed, and is not now in effect.

I wish to say, for the benefit of Senators, that I hope we can get a vote today on the amendment, but at this time I have no request to make to fix any hour for a vote on the amendment. I think, for the time being, the debate may run on for a while, and we shall see how matters look a little later in the day.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, for days I have listened to the arguments pro and con for this additional $50,000,000. I have listened to calm and reasoning statements, and I have listened to rabble-rousing statements. I have listened to a statement of heart throbs from the distinguished Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]; and when he turns on the emotional valve one almost forgets that there are other equations in this picture. And yet we are the greatest deliberative body in the world!

Mr. President, I have heard the statement of many Members of the Senate that they would be glad to vote for one hundred or one hundred and fifty million dollars in addition to what we are going to vote for in the next day or two. I wonder if the Senators know that that is just what they are doing. Let me make this statement concretely. Do Senators know that besides the $725,000,000 the Government will also be paying out $100,000,000 or $150,000,000 in addition to the $100,000,000 or $150,000,000 we are talking about here today?

What do I mean by one hundred million or one hundred and fifty million dollars additional? It has not been discussed in the debates on the floor of the Senate; yet I heard a member of the Cabinet say, within the past few days, that anywhere from one hundred to one hundred and fifty million dollars of surplus commodities will be distributed free to the needy people of this country within the next 12 months. From July last to July of this year approximately $66,000,000 in surplus commodities will be distributed, in addition to what we vote here now.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] says we do not want people to starve. Of course, we do not want them to starve. We do not want anyone in this country to go hungry. No one will go hungry with surplus commodities being distributed as they are. Neither do we want this country to go on the rocks. Neither do we want it to keep on the way it has been going—down the highway toward financial ruin. It is strange that in the discussion of this spending of the people's money—and I repeat the phrase "the people's money"—it is so easy for some persons to talk in terms of $50,000,000 and $100,000,000 as if it were nothing, yet, if the same persons were asked to donate $50 or $100 of their salaries toward this very problem, which is their problem and the problem of their children, we should find that they would "squawk," as we say in my part of the country, "like a stuck pig."

In the city of Washington we may keep on raising salaries, if we wish; and it would be an interesting thing to have an investigation to find out how much the salaries of the employees of the Government have been raised since we came to Washington on January 3. Nothing has been said to the people in the course of this debate to let them know that if we appropriate this $150,000,000, we shall spend virtually $1,000,000,000 for W. P. A., not for 1939 but just for the first 6 months of 1939. I wonder if, with that thought in mind, it would not be well to restate the position of some of us in this matter.

I say that advisedly because in this very Chamber it has been suggested, in good senatorial form, that we who do not see the advisability of reaching out and disposing of more and more money just have not a heart; that we are not considerate; that we are not thoughtful; so it may be well to restate the position of some of us in relation to this proposed appropriation. I say to you, Mr. President, that there is not a county or a municipality in this Nation which, if efficiently governed—and most of them are—if it received the amount of money that was spent on W. P. A. in that community for the same purpose, could not do a better job, a more efficient job, a job that would not be breaking down—and I say this with emphasis—the morale, not only of many of the W. P. A. workers but of others, who see how easy it is, if one is a "political pet," to get the "mazuma."

I say again that the big problem, Mr. President, is the question of maintaining the morale of these people.

Yesterday a letter came to me from a farmer saying that in my own State, because it is so easy for folks to obtain W. P. A. employment and get $50 or $60 a month—and the farmer is not making that much—the farmer cannot get the necessary help.

Mr. President, I repeat, there is one way, temporarily at least, of handling this situation so that we shall have some concrete evidence of whether or not W. P. A. are doing the job they claim to be doing. You and I know that instead of 3½ percent, as their figures show, for administration overhead, if we were to include in the 3½ percent the salary of every man who gets over $50 or $60, which is the amount the common workman gets, the average would go up to 20 or 25 percent for administration costs. The one way I am talking about is to limit the amount of pay that anyone, high or low, on W. P. A., shall receive from W. P. A. funds. There are loyal, honest, sincere, hard-working folks who would be glad to devote their time, services, and energy in every State in this Nation to take over the so-called administrative or executive jobs of W. P. A. for the same salary paid the average workman on W. P. A.

They would take over the jobs for one reason only; they are patriotic and unselfish, and they know that the disease which is afflicting this country is likely to have serious results. They would do it because they know the seriousness of the situation. Then the savings made would go to the needy. We would get results, and we would find that there was not the dissipation of money in the amount we know is spent in every State of the Union.

We are not unaware that in some of the large cities and other places the situation is critical, so far as the lack of work and jobs is concerned. We want the people's money to meet that situation, but we want the people's money to meet the situation head-on, so that both the money and the morale of the people will not be dissipated.

Mr. President, for days we have been talking about a cancer in our body politic, and all we have been talking about is feeding that cancer. We have not been talking about the real issue; that is, how to cure the cancer. How is it to be cured? There is the rub. I have an idea that if the Government would first follow the suggestions I have made heretofore, to wit, limit the expenditures to any one person who is in the employ of W. P. A. to the amount paid to the workman, and thus make a start, and, secondly, turn the relief problem back to the States and let the States or municipalities handle the money on the basis I have suggested. If the municipalities would handle the matter, there would not be a further dissipation of the most important thing in our national life, that is, the morale of our people.

Mr. President, I heard during the argument a few days ago a statement by a distinguished Senator to the effect that the Republicans wanted to turn the money back to the States for administration so they could build Republican machines. Is that not what is called in law a plea in confession and avoidance, an admission that those in control of spending have used the money for that purpose? Is it not also an admission by the distinguished Senators that they know that the people of this country are waking up to the significant fact that the job they were hired to do has not been done by the party in power?

Let me relate an incident that occurred in my own State in the recent campaign. After speaking in a certain community from my little loud speaker, a German, a man possibly 75 years of age, came up to me and said, "Mr. WILEY, that was a pretty good speech you made, but you took 20 minutes. I think I can make a better one in 20 seconds." I said, "All right, Brother," looking into those deep, serious eyes of this man, recognizing that he had something "on the ball," and realizing what my father had said many years ago, "Son, remember no matter whom you meet—the highest and the lowest, the richest and the poorest, the humblest—each has a pearl for you if you are smart enough to reach out and get it." So I said to this man, "If you have such a speech, give it to me, and I will deliver it every place I go in the State of Wisconsin." He gave me the speech, in broken English, he said: "Mr. WILEY, we Germans have a saying that you cannot dig yourself out of a hole by digging deeper."

Who was this man? A philosopher? No; he had been a hard-working farmer, one who came here in his youth, who dug his farm out of the land—a man who raised a family; one who had seen life and read its lessons; and he said me, "You can't dig yourself out of a hole by digging deeper."

That is correct. If you are deep in the clutches of sin you cannot dig yourself out of it by indulgence. If you are deep in the cups you cannot keep on drinking and drinking and get sober. If you are in a business that is continually losing money you cannot keep on losing money and eventually balance your budget. And if you are in a government which thinks entirely of spending, whose ideology—and I do not like that word any better than does the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], because it is a misnamed word to fit the situation for which it is now used—if you are in a government which continually thinks of spending and never doing anything else to solve the problem, you will never get out of the hole either. In fact, you will dig yourself in deeper.

You cannot dig yourself out of a hole by digging deeper. I apply that concretely to the present situation, and, irrespective of all the emotionalism in the world, I say that we cannot keep on digging into the morale of the people and breaking their morale and expect the people to get themselves out. You cannot pull yourself out by your own bootstraps, either.

Mr. President, I remember another incident also along this line, to which I will refer a little later. Pretty soon, if you keep on digging yourself in, you will find that the hole will cave in after you. I know what some of my colleagues are saying. They are saying that we cannot crucify human life, that we cannot forget the needy and the suffering, the widows and the children.

No; and we will not forget them. Yet for many years now we have reared a generation of young people who have sensed, not the obligation of our fathers, that people have to depend on themselves, but rather we have inculcated in them the thought that there is something to lean on, and we have begotten and created literally a Nation of "leaners" and chiselers, dependents. It is time we woke up to the real issue, the fact that you cannot keep on digging yourself in deeper and get out of the hole.

We will not forget those who have been suffering, we have not forgotten the poor and the needy and the unemployed, but if we spend the resources of this Nation—and I repeat, I am not merely talking in terms of money, I am talking in terms of character, in terms of morale—it will not be long before by spending and spending we will show that we have forgotten them, because we will be unable to do to them and for them what we should. The Nation will find itself in the throes of some such condition as that in which the great peoples of Italy and Germany find themselves. They are not in their present condition because, as some people say, they chose that way. They chose that way, if they did choose it, because it was the only alternative. The economic situation in both countries became so terrible that groups were crashing against groups, and every semblance of law and order was about to disappear, just as it did during the French Revolution. Then a strong man appeared. That has been and will be history. Pray God, it will not happen here.

Mr. President, I have seriously considered voting for this additional $50,000,000, not as a confession, as someone has said, that in the first instance we were wrong, but, as some of the Senators must have realized, we intended somehow to vote for it because those things which we had anticipated would come to pass did not come to pass. What do I mean by that? I mean the farmer getting into action. I had expected that this great Congress would get back of the farmer and get into action. But what have we done? We have neglected him. We have not done anything for him up to date.

We had expected that the large amount of money that was appropriated for preparedness would lend stimulus and courage to business so that it would reemploy workmen. We had also thought that other agencies would come into being which would take up the slack. We had thought that from the head of the Government would come courage and vision to industry, would come that something which would start this great economic machine out of the mud. But it has not come. So, as I have said, I had intended to vote for the increase, but when I found from government itself that, in addition to the amount we had appropriated or would appropriate, anywhere from a hundred to a hundred and fifty million dollars worth of surplus commodities would be thrown into the stream to take care of the needy, I said "no," and I felt that I was acting in accordance with the best judgment I could summon to my aid.

Where is the leadership in this Nation? Where are the brains that were always America's in times of great crises? Where are they? They are lost in an emotional jag. We have the men; we have the greatest industrial plants in the world. We have the money. We have in this country the greatest demand in the world. Why in heaven's name do we not go? Let me tell why we do not go. The people of Wisconsin recognized in the last election why we did not go; and they spoke with no unmistakable voice.

Let me relate another incident. When I was traveling in one of the little towns of my State I saw there a Scandinavian; and I am proud to say I stem from that race. This man was a small contractor. I said to him, "Hans, how are you voting this year?" "Well," he said, "I'm voting Republican." Two years before, when I had had the honor to run for Governor of the State, I had seen Hans, and he had said, "Oh, my, no! I'm voting Democratic." I said, "Why, Hans, are you now voting Republican?" "Well," he said, "I'll tell you, Alex. You know I'm a little contractor. If you were to give me $5,000 to build a house for you, and you were to give me the materials, and you were to go away, and then you were to come back after 2 months, and I'd been out on a hell of a jag and spent the money, and hadn't even dug the basement, what would you do to me?" I said, "Why, Hans, I'd fire you and get someone who could do it." "Well," he said, "that's just what we are going to do to these fellows who are making so many big promises. They are big on the promise, but they are short on the fulfillment."

What does that mean? It means that down among the common people they have recognized that the leadership that was called upon to do the job and has not done the job. I am not saying that some other leadership would have delivered. I am saying that the present leadership has not built the house they were hired to build. That is the situation we are facing today in connection with the pending measure. We are talking now in terms of not simply feeding the hungry, but of rebuilding the morale of the people, rebuilding a situation in this country so that business can take up the unemployed; so that the unemployed will get jobs.

I know that many of my friends of the opposition feel that they are going strong "on fulfillment" in voting some of this money. The people of America are not blind to that sort of political shenanigan. The people are thinking. They are thinking more seriously and clearly than they have thought for a good many years. They are saying now, "Are there no problems for the Senate of the United States except W. P. A.? They have been spending days on this subject. Why have they not taken care of the other issues? Why have they not looked after the farmers' interests? Why have they not undertaken to start the great, industrial, latent powers of this country? Where is the vision of leadership?"

Mr. President, Congress is not thinking constructively in terms of producing jobs. If it were, it would turn its ideas a little more toward encouraging business to take up the slack.

Instead of spending our time in this kind of a political maneuver, if we had 2 weeks ago caught the vision that was contained in the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] wherein he suggested that all the money, to wit, $725,000,000, should be made available for expenditure up to June 7—and which would give the Congress of the United States sufficient time to consider the question—if we had given consideration to that proposal, we would not have spent time in discussing increased appropriations for W. P. A. which we could possibly have used in considering other subjects. But, instead, we had to go on our way—talking, talking, and trying to spend more of the people's money.

Mr. President, is it not significant that some persons who are so solicitous about the unemployed could not give consideration to the suggestion that came from the Senator from Michigan? Is it possible that their filibuster of the last 3 days has made some Senators so blind that they think the people do not have the power to reason? Is it possible that Senators again have become creatures of the "cracked whip"? Talk about propaganda; talk about political manipulation! Mr. President, you know and I know it is going on. You and I know, from the telegrams which we receive from the mayors of our cities, men who are worried about the condition, men who have had it thrown at them that this money is being held up by obstructionists, that those men are fearful, they are mentally stampeded to a point where they say, "Vote money; vote money; vote money." They do not realize that the present Congress will have voted now practically $900,000,000 to $1,000,000,000 for the first 6 months of 1939 for W. P. A.

What about the next 6 months after that? Are there any Senators who believe in the philosophy, "After us the deluge"—after us the storm? We are acting as if we believed in that philosophy. We are not seeing the situation. Are we letting our emotions, or are we letting something which is worse, an attempt to influence the votes of the unemployed, direct our path? Are we even now the creatures of a concerted, psychological attack by master psychologists who, blindly or otherwise, have no real sense of whither they are going or whither they are taking our Government?

Mr. President, I have spoken seriously. I know that the easy way, the popular way, would be to vote for the additional $50,000,000. It is so easy, when you handle other people's money, just to let it slip through your fingers. But, Senators, I have been a small country lawyer, and I have been taught that to handle other people's money, and especially the money of my Government, is a sacred trust, and as a trustee I must see that that money is handled and disbursed in accordance with the highest standard. I challenge any Senator, if he is so anxious to do what he thinks would be done by the proposed increase, to dig down into his own pocket and thus prove the steel that is supposed to be in him!

Mr. President, I heard a statement in the Senate the other day—I believe it was made by the distinguished junior Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY]—which I cannot let go unchallenged. He inferred that the next President would meet an insolvable situation. To that I answer that the next incumbent will solve the problem. If—and I say to the Senate that this country is "rarin' to go"—the next President of these United States has the vision and has the dynamic quality that is necessary, the engine will start up and we will leave the economic detour and get back on the highways where we belong. I prophesy to the Senate that, under a change of leadership—a leadership that is progressive, a leadership that will not try to turn the hands of the clock back, a leadership that will not sell out this land to foreign lands, a leadership that will realize the farmer's rights and needs, the workman's rights and needs, and the rights and needs of business—we will "go to town." We need a leadership, Mr. President, that will have courage to admit that the present form of social security is not social security, that is only a term, that there is no such thing, that the money which the people have paid into it has been used up in Government overhead. We need an administration with the courage to say, "We have been out on a spree; we have got to pay for it. We must get under way. We have to consider again the ancient landmarks of honesty and integrity and morality in government. We must acknowledge that government itself costs too much; that we have builded a dangerous and top-heavy bureaucracy. We have to recognize that government is and should be the servant instead of the master. I repeat that last statement, Mr. President, because to me it is very significant, that we have to recognize that government is and should be the servant instead of the master. I repeat that statement because every psychologist in the land knows that one of the great brakes upon our recovery today is the fear of government in the hearts of the people, the fear of the Government and the fear of its servants. In addition thereto we have the uncertainty of governmental policies.

Mr. President, I have nearly concluded. I believe that I have strayed away from the subject of W. P. A. But have I strayed? When 10,000,000 people are unemployed in this country it is evidence of a serious disease.

Many of us are thinking merely of spending money as a solution. Many Senators, like many of the people back home, have gotten to depend upon the White House for direction.

I am grateful to find, however, that an awakening is going on, a realization that we in the Senate and those in the other House must refind the intiative that belongs to the legislature of the Nation. Senators, I repeat that when June 30 arrives we shall again have to face the problem of W. P. A. for another 6 months. W. P. A. is a result, even as our "licked business" is a result, and our "licked farmer" is a result, and as our exorbitant Government overhead is a result. A result or an effect of what? The answer must be the result of that philosophy which we have heard discussed here and the uncertainty that obtains—an uncertainty in the minds of the people who feel that they know not whither government is taking them.

I believe the people of this country are almost ready now to realize that sooner or later they must cease to depend on Washington for continual subsidies. I believe they are also awakening to the conclusion that because of fallacious policies they have become weakened in initiative, in dependence on self. I believe, also, the people are beginning to realize that in all the Government agencies which we have built we have grown also a fungus of self-perpetuating bureaucrats, each looking upon his particular activity almost with a fanatical regard as a saving agency of government, to the end that their jobs may be perpetuated and that the people will become more and more enmeshed in bureaucracy.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER].

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, in view of the fact that this matter now comes before the Senate upon the recommendation which came from the President first in his message of January 5, which was communicated to the Senate, at which time the President recommended an appropriation of $875,000,000 and stated that, as the result of his investigation carefully made, it was his conviction that that amount was absolutely necessary; in view of the fact that subsequent to that message of January 5 to the Congress the President, on February 7, 1939, again transmitted to the Congress his recommendation that there be a supplemental appropriation of $150,000,000 in addition to the $725,000,000 voted by the Congress, and in the message of February 7, 1939, he set out his finding that an emergency existed which required a supplemental appropriation of $150,000,000; in view of the additional fact that on March 14, 1939, the President again communicated to the Congress his very earnest recommendation that there be provided this supplemental appropriation of $150,000,000, setting out that April 1 was approaching and that within about 3 weeks the reduction of Works Progress Administration employment must begin, in order that the remainder of the appropriation might be apportioned over the months of April, May, and June; in view of the fact that the President emphasized the necessity for immediate action in the Congress to grant the $150,000,000 appropriation unless there were to be widespread dismissals from the W. P. A. rolls; and in view of the fact that this matter has only in the last few days come before the Senate for final determination, it was naturally a point of curiosity in the minds of many of us as to whether the President felt that the situation had changed in any way so as to obviate the necessity of the Congress complying with the recommendation he made to grant a supplemental appropriation of $150,000,000.

I have seen references in the press to certain communications from the President, as to the authenticity of which, of course, I have no personal knowledge. I have heard reference on the floor to a communication said to have been addressed to a third party by the President. Out of my sense of earnest inquiry as to whether or not the executive branch of the Government had come to the conclusion that the recommendations previously made were not now desirable or imperative, I took the liberty of making a call at the White House. In response to the inquiry I made as to whether or not the recommendations of the President had changed, whether or not the need had changed, and whether or not the imperative necessity of the $150,000,000 supplemental appropriation had disappeared, the President has addressed a communication to me. I ask, Mr. President, that the clerk read that communication, and that it be incorporated in my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HILL in the chair). Without objection, the clerk will read the letter.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, April 11, 1939.

Hon. CLAUDE PEPPER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR PEPPER: In reply to your inquiry, I think there is nothing for me to add or to subtract from what I have made so clear on so many occasions since last January.

The sole question of continuing relief to July 1 is one of arithmetic.

If $100,000,000 is voted, between three and four hundred thousand fewer people can be given work relief than if $150,000,000 is voted—and in addition practically none of the seven or eight hundred thousand people on the waiting list can be given employment.

It seems to me that that is the long and the short of it.

Very sincerely yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, I do not intend to consume the time of the Senate by a lengthy statement. However, I feel that I should say something in support of the Pepper amendment.

I have listened with much interest to the speech just made by the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY], in which he seems to take the view that if we should discontinue making appropriations to support the W. P. A. program the country would soon right itself, and that unemployment conditions would soon be corrected. He says that business is "rarin' to go," and that all it needs is the encouragement of the Congress starting a program of balancing the Budget and discontinuing or reducing relief expenditures.

We heard similar arguments in 1936; and unfortunately we listened to them. At that time, feeling that we were making rapid progress in bringing the country back out of the distressful economic condition into which it had been plunged, we started a program of retrenchment. What was the result? Within a very short period, instead of business and industry taking hold of the situation and putting men back to work, we found the contrary to be true. In a very short period we found the country again in a downward trend.

I feel that we are in no better situation today. In fact, if anything, we are in a worse position today than we were at that time to undertake a program of balancing the Budget, or radical reduction in work-relief expenditures. Every day we read in the newspapers stories with reference to the effect which war conditions in Europe, rumors of wars, rumors of invasions, and so forth, are having upon the economic conditions of the entire world. The whole international economic system has broken down. The effect of this in our own country is very serious.

I happened to read in the New York Times yesterday a statement showing the effect of these conditions in our own country. In the financial section of the New York Times for Monday, April 10, under the head of The Financial Week, we find, in glaring headlines, the following statement:

American markets decline on Europe's political uncertainties and on Italy's attack upon Albania.

In another column of the same issue we find the following headlines: "Leveling off seen in steel industry. Depletion of backlogs and paucity of new business cuts mills' output. Auto lag adverse factor. General orders, too, that appear are small—production down to 54.5 percent."

The body of the article goes on to state:

Gradual depletion of steel backlogs and the failure of new business to make up the deficiency will result in all probability in a slow leveling off in the Nation's steel ingot operating rate in the coming weeks, according to the consensus of the trade.

Even though fresh orders in some cases are expanding mildly, it is thought that the completion of some rail, structural, and auto-body-sheet orders on the books will force curtailment of steel-making operations unless semifinished steel is placed in inventory.

In the same issue we notice the following statement with reference to the stock markets:

Stocks dropped to lowest levels since last June in heavy trading.

In every newspaper of the country we find statements showing that at this time the country is in no position to undertake a program of balancing the Budget, because it is obvious that if we attempted any such move we should soon find the country again in a tailspin such as overtook us in 1936.

In my own State of Montana I find that there has been a 10-percent curtailment in the production of copper, which is our chief industry. That means that thousands of miners are thrown out of employment in the city of Butte, where there is no other industry or business to which these men can turn for employment. As a result of the curtailment in copper production the operations of the smelters have slowed down and the railroads have laid off men. We also find distressful conditions in the agricultural areas. So, in my State, industrial and agricultural conditions are such that not only should we have the benefit of the full appropriation recommended by the President and by the Public Works Administration but, in fact, we should have an additional sum adequately to take care of the unusual situation which has developed. At any rate, we certainly should have the full amount which was estimated by the administration to be essential to carry out an adequate program. Therefore, it is my intention to vote for the Pepper amendment. I feel that it would be a great mistake for us at this time to attempt to retrench. As I say, the only effect of a retrenchment would be to bring about a situation in business in the country which might have serious results. That condition was brought about in 1936; and I am convinced that it would happen again.

Aside from the business effects of the curtailment, it seems to me that we owe it to the unemployed citizens of this country, who are suffering from no fault of their own, to afford them relief until business and industry are in a position to furnish them employment.

I do not think any argument can be advanced to justify such curtailment as is proposed by the committee.

I have just received a letter from the Silver Bow Trades and Labor Council, of Butte, Mont., which represents all the trade and labor organizations of Silver Bow County. The letter says:

If Congress does not grant the request of President Roosevelt and appropriate additional money for W. P. A. it will mean that some 1,500 of those who are fortunate enough to be working on W. P. A. at present, in this county, will be laid off. From official sources here I have learned that in this zone, comprising the 5 counties adjacent to Silver Bow, there are already 3,000 cases which are awaiting assignment to W. P. A. Since the recent session of the legislature, the relief officials here have announced that drastic cuts will be made in the meager allotments that have been given these people in the past. In plain language this means that these unfortunate people are being told to starve.

It is easy enough for those in authority to say that the fault lies with our legislature for not providing the money for relief, but that is not the fault of these unfortunate people who are the ones to suffer. If an additional appropriation can be secured for W. P. A., sufficient to take up some of the slack, then what relief funds the State has provided can possibly be stretched to take care of those unemployables whose sole hope of existence depends on the funds available for direct relief.

This morning I received a telegram from a distant point in my State, the coal section at Bear Creek. It reads as follows:

BEAR CREEK, MONT., April 10, 1939.

Senator JAMES E. MURRAY,
Washington, D. C.:

Unemployment committee of coal miners of Carbon County are asking you to support the President's plan for W. P. A. increase. There are 335 men working on projects sponsored and there are 315 men ready to be certified who have only worked from 19 to 50 days since 1 year ago last January. Something must be done to feed and clothe these men, their wives, and families.

JOHN BONE,
Chairman, Unemployment Committee.

I have received numerous letters and telegrams on this subject, but I do not wish to burden the Senate at this time by reading them, in corroboration of my statements. It seems to me that no legitimate excuse has been or can be made on the part of the Congress for failing to uphold the W. P. A. program. The amount asked for is the amount which has been agreed to and decided upon by the administration after a most careful and exhaustive study of the national unemployment situation. Curtailments have already been made, but we can go no further in denying men work. We have pared the appropriation down to such an extent that it is essential that we have the additional sum sought if we are to carry out a decent program, one which will accomplish a reasonable measure of relief for the unemployment conditions of the country.

Therefore, Mr. President, it is my intention to support the Pepper amendment.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, I have just returned from my State of New Jersey. I know from personal contact and observation that the lay-offs that have taken place there in the W. P. A. during the last 2 or 3 weeks and the lay-offs contemplated during the next month are disturbing the people of New Jersey from one end of the State to the other.

All the mayors of the large cities of the State of New Jersey, representing 80 percent of the population of that State, have telegraphed me and requested that I urge the Members of this body to vote the full amount recommended and requested by the W. P. A. to carry the relief burden until July.

Mr. President, only last week thousands of relief recipients in my State were laid off, separated from their jobs, separated from the opportunity of earning food and shelter. Where are they going? There is no expansion of employment in my State. If dismissals from the rolls shall continue, those who are deprived of work will be forced, perhaps, to steal in order to obtain food to keep themselves alive. I submit to the Members of the Senate that it is an unwise and unsound policy to attempt to economize on human misery and human welfare.

We have no sugar-beet problem in New Jersey; we have no cotton problem, no wheat problem, no corn problem, no flood problem; but, Members of the Senate, we do have a serious relief problem. I submit to the Members of this body that we are engaged in small business when we attempt to economize at the expense of the human misery that we will bring about if we continue to force the head of the W. P. A. organization to lay off thousands and tens of thousands and hundreds of thousands of men and women who today are existing solely because of W. P. A. projects; and there is no possibility now for them to go elsewhere and get a job.

So I say without hesitation, Mr. President, that I shall vote for the amendment to restore the full amount of money, and for any additional sums that may be necessary to carry the relief burden in this great country of ours.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I am thoroughly aware of the need for public work administered in a businesslike and nonpolitical manner. There is less excuse for work relief to be used as the cat's-paw of political partisanship than any other work of the Federal Government, and yet it has suffered more than any other in this way. W. P. A. would not now be under attack had it not been for the partisanship with which it has been administered.

Mr. President, this has been made very clear to me through a questionnaire I have recently submitted to 700 interviewers who conducted the investigation of W. P. A. in Pennsylvania in the last few weeks. In reply to four questions that I submitted to these interviewers I have received hundreds of replies, many of which show the pitiful inadequacy of the review of relief needs that has just been concluded. The interviewers, without being asked to do so, have in scores of instances called my attention to the hasty procedure that has been employed. Not one good word was said of the interviewing done by the interviewers themselves. The consensus of opinion, insofar as I have been able to discover, is that the interviewing was done without any actual investigation of the financial needs and conditions of the certified relief persons on W. P. A. This was quite contrary to the instructions given by Col. F. C. Harrington, who specifically stated:

> The review will consist of the filling out and signing by the worker of a statement concerning his or her family resources and a verification by the Works Progress Administration of the information contained in the worker's statement.

Mr. President, this verification was not made. The review was conducted so hastily as to be a travesty on justice. Thousands of persons have been separated from the W. P. A. rolls because of this review, but Congress has no reason to believe that those who remain on the rolls are any more worthy of public aid than those who were discharged. This must appear unfair to every unbiased observer; and the seeds of civil discord are thus sown through political and governmental failure.

Mr. President, I have never once asked for an investigation of the W. P. A. worker in the lower brackets. I take for granted that when a man wants work and is unemployed he is in need. I do not approve of the means test, and I do not expect to sanction it by asking for a continuation of the sort of interviewing that has been going on in W. P. A. in Pennsylvania during the last few weeks.

Consistently I have asked for an investigation of the administrative personnel of W. P. A. This has consistently been refused and denied. I am still asking for it. These are the people who should have been investigated the last few weeks in Pennsylvania. Their names, addresses, positions, and salaries should be made public as in the case of all other public employees. I am not asking that the names and salaries of the low-salaried workers should be publicized; indeed, I should be much opposed to it.

Mr. President, I hope that the investigation which has been voted by the House will be thoroughgoing and nonpartisan. It is time to get the attention of the public away from the man who needs a work-relief check in order to feed his family and to give the spotlight of public attention to the man who has been politically appointed to a fat salary that he does not need and does not deserve. I shall not think we have done our full duty by the American people until these facts are fully known. Self investigations and reviews of W. P. A. are not enough.

Mr. President, I should have voted for the full $150,000,000 requested by the President when this deficiency appropriation was first before the Senate if provision had been made for a thoroughgoing nonpartisan investigation of W. P. A., such as was set forth in my amendment. My vote for this appropriation has been throughout contingent on a congressional investigation. The House has now voted that such investigation shall be made. That is the only basis on which I would be willing to vote for this appropriation.

Mr. President, without any solicitation on my part, other than the 4 questions I submitted in a questionnaire to 700 interviewers who recently completed a review of eligibility on all projects in Pennsylvania, I have received from large numbers of them statements which I ask to be included in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the statements referred to by the Senator from Pennsylvania will be printed in the RECORD.

The statements referred to are as follows:

COMMENTS OF INTERVIEWERS

To Whom It May Concern:

Lewisburg: In the field I made two observations that may be of value. (1) We interviewed only about 80 percent of the W. P. A. workers on the respective projects. (2) An interview without some investigation establishes questionable results.

Greensburg: Sorry I cannot give more definite information, but the whole thing was rather mysterious.

Shenandoah: Those persons receiving more than subsistence wage on W. P. A. were indicated as N. R. N. No review necessary. It seems to me the administrative personnel should receive a very thorough revamping because here we have so much that is unsavory, political, and inefficient.

Erie: Just a few facts about the survey or check-up of W. P. A. workers in area 12, Pennsylvania, and which was closed last Friday, March 31, as far as the field work was concerned. It was a whitewash if ever there was one. It covered only the laborers, straw bosses, and a few timekeepers. Did not include supervision or administration. Some of the field investigators through dumbness or design did not get full reports or answers to half the questions. Straw bosses receive $71.50 monthly; timekeepers, $85. They are the only ones receiving that salary who must come from the relief rolls. Hundreds of the reports (605's, I believe they are) were put back in the active files without being checked by the two office investigators appointed to that duty. I say that the W. P. A., if honestly purged, can fire 25,000 in Pennsylvania who have other sources of income and get along on their own. * * * Cut out the politics, cut the salaries to where they belong, lop off the drones and those who have some other source of income and the farmers who made a good living before there was any W. P. A., and every last one of the really needy reliefers can be taken care of for a lot less than the $725,000,000 voted a short time ago. Stick to your guns and stop the wild bulls in our china shop, the United States Treasury. Chase them out. I am an old-line Democrat, and, along with thousands of others of the same, I voted a straight Republican ticket for the first time last November.

Mount Oliver Boro: During the investigation of W. P. A. employees some interviewers completed as many as 150 to 200 interviews a day. This included the time elapsed in traveling to and from the projects. To thoroughly interview this number in 1 day was impossible. Foreign-born citizens were not required to present their citizenship papers to the notaries. This should have been compulsory. Some employees on the supervisory or administrative pay rolls had received leave of absence from State jobs.

Grove City: I suggest that a thorough investigation of the W. P. A. be made from top to bottom. We were asked to rush our interviews so as to complete 40 per day, which meant that most of the time of interview was consumed in getting the names and ages of the members of the family.

Beaver: The nonrelief persons on projects should by all means be interviewed in Beaver County. I have good reasons to believe favoritism is shown to nonrelief foremen who are not qualified and who do not have need for jobs they are holding. Poor management of projects in Beaver County have cost a lot of money and bad public opinion.

Allentown: I secured this position because of my past experience with the department of public assistance, where I worked for a period of 3½ years. It is my opinion that more satisfactory results would have been obtained if the cases had been more thoroughly investigated, according to the department of public assistance policies.

New Enterprise: There is a lot of complaint on the salaries of the foremen and the labor in this district. The foremen in Bedford County receive $140 and up. That is too much difference in wage scale for all they do. The majority of the foremen have property, farms, or some other source of income and I think that men on relief could do their jobs just as well if not better than they do. On one project that I interviewed the men, the foreman had been a taxicab driver, another a hotel keeper, another a politician, others farmers with large farms, milk checks, etc., coming in. Every project had two or more subforemen who did the overseeing of the work while the foreman rode around or "shot the bull."

Aliquippa: My sincere belief is that the W. P. A. needs further investigation even down to the common labor. My reason for stating this is because I recommended further investigation of different persons employed on the W. P. A. and as yet no action has been taken.

North Catasauqua: I have been in relief work practically since its inception in 1933, under the county relief set-up, the S. E. R. B., S. E. R. A., and D. P. A. Surveys and investigations are frequently made of either the W. P. A. or the State relief system to gather information for the Federal or State Governments. Why such investigations give unsatisfactory results is readily understood by field experienced people, but they are never consulted or perhaps such investigations are merely a sham.

Ulysses: In connection with this work let me say I think that when such work is done there should be adequate money appropriated for the work and someone who knows something about the cost and handling same put in charge of arrangements, so that the result is obtainable through competent men, who know investigation work, and compensation is adequate. In this investigation I was paid for 3 weeks work exactly $80.50, and out of that I used my car 1,538 miles at 4 cents per mile, or $61.52 worth of mileage, leaving me $18.98 for my work, out of which I spent $1.90 for telephone calls, or a net of about 75 cents per day for work that should pay not less than $10 per day.

Swissvale: While working as an interviewer, we were asked to work overtime, including evenings, Saturdays, and Sundays. We were told that we would be paid for this time or else counted as being present where we had been laid off. After we completed our work our superiors told us that a ruling was changed in Harrisburg and we could not be paid for this time. I had about 32 hours of this, while some coworkers had as many as 80 hours overtime. All of which is very unfair to the worker, as we not only lost in time but also had extra expenses.

Johnstown: I wish to advise you that should the previous interviewing really been done for the purpose of determining the eligibility of W. P. A. workers, I must admit truthfully that such a procedure did not, cannot, and will not, produce and show the proper results. In my 5½ years of experience in civil, criminal, and commercial investigations, and upon being appointed and fulfilling my duties as an interviewer for the W. P. A., I have for the first time in my life found myself limited insofar as not being able to produce the proper results. Due to the fact that the 605 financial-status sheets were required to be filled in through the questioning of each individual W. P. A. worker, therefore giving such individuals all the opportunity in the world to withhold the true facts concerning their financial status, I dare say that such a procedure has been useless and a waste of time and money.

Eighteenth District, nineteenth ward, Pittsburgh: On February 24 some 60 men were instructed as to the duties we were to perform. It was suggested that each interviewer should be capable of completing 16 to 20 interviews per day. We were further advised that the work would last approximately until the 25th of March. We began work February 27 and completed on the average of 3,000 per day. On the 9th of March the majority of the people employed on the W. P. A. had been interviewed. The speed and haste that these interviews were made, sometimes in groups of 5 interviewers with 10 to 12 W. P. A. employees coralled in 1 office, made it impossible for the interviewers successfully to obtain any pertinent information for which the investigation was proposed.

Wilkinsburg: There were 2 distinct types of interviews of W. P. A. workers. The first interviews were made mostly on the projects where each interviewer was asked the questions of W. P. A. for No. 605. We were to make our recommendations and turn these forms over to our supervisors. Those who were not on the projects were sent letters to come into the office and be interviewed. No questions answered on these interviews were verified. When all of these forms were completed, 1,000 of these forms were pulled from the files according to W. P. A. district distribution. Of these 1,000 people we were required to make home visits and see documents, tax statements, rent receipts, former employment identification numbers, etc. Later we were to verify all information pertaining to expenses and employment. We either sent forms to former employers or visited the former employers of all members of the family to verify unemployment. We made our recommendations and turned our reports over to the supervisors. We were instructed not to interview people making $100 or over per month.

Hillsville: It was generally accepted that this investigation did not amount to very much for the following reasons: (1) You may recall after the November election there was a period into December when W. P. A. discharges totaled into the 40,000's per week. The W. P. A. house was pretty well cleaned by February 1939. (2) The greatest complaint is against the nonrelief worker on W. P. A., who makes the most money and usually has other income of considerable amount in his family group. This group was not interviewed. (3) The repeated investigations that W. P. A. workers have had to go through since first applying for assistance is not conducive to truthfulness. Their biggest job is to keep their story consistent. There is a tendency to value a dollar in the hand a great deal higher than truthfulness if a fabrication will get them more dollars.

Altoona: This investigation was a whitewash. Mr. ——— insinuated that we interviewers were not to poke into anyone's business, and even if we knew things were not true, we should accept the statements made in completing the W. P. A. form 605.

Bethlehem: I interviewed 2½ years in the Pennsylvania State Employment Service. Never in that time did I see or hear of anything so ridiculous. We defeated the purpose of this investigation.

Tyrone: I hope that you will pardon my expressing my views on the subject, but I feel the work I did was worthless and a waste of money and time. I feel that we did not get the true facts, because they were not desired. I protest that I was not given time to make a complete interview and that in many cases true facts were being withheld. We were told that "their statements as to resources are sufficient." Many men whom I interviewed have income other than W. P. A. earnings. A thorough check-up would have revealed some startling facts.

Bradford: This investigation was conducted so hastily and sketchily that I doubt if it has much value.

Glassport: I have been personally connected with the W. P. A. ever since its inception, working as general foreman, superintendent, and project supervising engineer. Beginning with the primary election last spring, politics became the dominating force of W. P. A. in Allegheny County, and between this time and the general election in November it was disgracefully deplorable. Every project pay roll was loaded up with more than three times the supervision actually needed. Pay-roll macing was terrible. My superior was dismissed, because he opposed this. I was dismissed also, because I did not take any active part in their dirty politics, administrative waste, or ticket selling to the workers. I am so opposed to the policies of the administration for the past year I am actually ashamed to admit I am a Democrat. I would suggest a thorough investigation of the financial resources, past experience, and qualifications of the administrative personnel and project supervisors making $100 and over per month. Politics is supposed to be out of W. P. A. now, and the officials back up this claim by forcing party chairmen, committeemen, etc., to give up these offices or resign from W. P. A. If they are sincere regarding politics, why not issue the same orders to persons elected to offices such as councilmen, commissioners, etc., who are working on W. P. A. and are the real politicians?

Sharon: I have checked over cases where the incomes, exclusive of W. P. A. wages, has been as high in some cases as $321 a month, $260 a month, and so on.

Butler: When I received the appointment to serve as an interviewer on W. P. A. employees I was very much pleased, as I had not had any work since September 1937, and as I had served in this same capacity during the early part of 1937 I was very familiar with the work. * * * The only fault I had then as recently was that very few of the so-called nonrelief workers were interviewed, and if the job was done properly there should not be this elimination of interviewing nonrelief, as there are as many, if not more, of them with other sources of income than among the relief workers.

Norristown: I found that the W. P. A. department was quite inefficient and that the employment division has been making no effort to verify the workers' financial status.

York: The entire survey was most unsatisfactory. I suggest a close reading of all records taken during interviewing.

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to his colleague?

Mr. DAVIS. I yield.

Mr. GUFFEY. Can the senior Senator from Pennsylvania tell us whether he offered an amendment for an investigation, and, if so, where it may be found, when the Senate had under discussion the relief appropriation measure? When the Senator voted to reduce the appropriation from $875,000,000 to $725,000,000 did he offer an amendment for an investigation at that time?

Mr. DAVIS. I did.

Mr. GUFFEY. Where in the RECORD is the amendment the Senator offered at that time?

Mr. DAVIS. If my colleague will look in the RECORD—I have forgotten the page, but it was some time last January—he will find the amendment there.

Mr. GUFFEY. It was not offered on the floor, was it?

Mr. DAVIS. I will locate the amendment in the RECORD, and ask unanimous consent now to have it placed in the RECORD.

Mr. GUFFEY. If the Senator offered an amendment, it should be in the RECORD.

Mr. DAVIS. In order that my colleague may be informed, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection the amendment will be printed in the RECORD.

The amendment is as follows:

[From CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Jan. 28, 1939, p. 945]

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment, which I ask to have stated.

* * * * * * *

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. At the end of the joint resolution it is proposed to insert the following new section:

"SEC. 8. That there is hereby appropriated to the Works Progress Administration, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and in addition to any other sum appropriated in this joint resolution, the sum of $150,000,000, but such sum of $150,000,000 shall not be paid out of the Treasury unless and until there is filed with the Secretary of the Treasury, by the special committee hereinafter provided for, a certificate certifying that in the opinion of the committee (1) a full and complete investigation has been made, under the supervision of such committee, of the abuses which have occurred at any time in the administration of the Works Progress Administration; (2) there have been removed from the rolls of the Works Progress Administration the names of all persons who are not eligible for, and entitled to, employment by the Works Progress Administration; and (3) the expenditure of such additional sum is necessary in order to provide adequate work relief and relief: Provided further, That such investigation shall include, but shall not be limited to, an investigation of any alleged instances of (1) pernicious political activity by any person whose compensation or any part thereof has been paid from funds appropriated or allocated to the Works Progress Administration; (2) granting employment with such funds to persons who were not eligible for and entitled thereto; (3) refusal, because of any partisan political or any personal reasons, to grant employment with such funds to persons who were eligible for and entitled thereto; and (4) padding of the relief rolls with the names of relatives, personal friends, or political allies of any employee of the Works Progress Administration or any other person: Provided further, That the President is hereby authorized to appoint, with the advice and consent of the Senate, five persons (not more than three of whom shall be members of the same political party), who shall compose the membership of the special committee heretofore referred to and who shall serve without compensation, other than reimbusement for necessary traveling expenses incurred by them in the performance of their duties as members of such committee: Provided further, That for the purpose of conducting such investigation the special committee is authorized to expend not in excess of $250,000 of the sum of $725,000,000 appropriated by this joint resolution, and for the purpose of conducting such investigation may employ and fix the compensation of such persons as it may deem necessary, and may accept, from States and political subdivisions thereof and from private individuals, contributions of funds and uncompensated services: Provided further, That the investigation in each State shall be carried on under the supervision of a board to be composed of five nonpartisan residents of such State, and the investigation to be carried on in any political subdivision of such State which the committee may designate as a unit for the purposes of such investigation shall be carried on under the supervision of a board to be composed of five nonpartisan residents of such political subdivision: Provided further, That the members of any such board for any State or political subdivision thereof shall be appointed by the committee from two lists of 10 eligible persons, one of which shall be submitted to such committee by each of the Members of the Senate from such State, but not more than 3 persons shall be selected from the list submitted by any such Senator: Provided further, That no officer or employee of the United States, a State, or a political subdivision of a State shall be appointed to, or serve on, any such board: Provided further, That the members of such boards shall receive no compensation for their services other than reimbursement for traveling expenses incurred by them in the performance of their duties as members of such boards: Provided further, That the special committee shall make a report to Congress not later than January 1, 1940, with respect to the investigation herein provided for."

The vote rejecting this amendment appears on page 948 of the RECORD of January 28, 1939.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, I shall not at this late date take much of the Senate's time on the pending measure. I speak in behalf of the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER]. The distinguished minority leader [Mr. MCNARY] the other day, in his anxiety to get an early vote—which we all desire—said that everything had been said that could be said upon this subject. It reminded me of an observation made by a man by the name of Solomon some four or five thousand years ago that there was nothing new under the sun. So it may be that the few remarks I will make today will not add anything new, but it will at least afford me satisfaction—and I hope satisfaction to the people who sent me here—for me to give some reasons why I am supporting the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida. It happens that in the State of Wyoming, as I said the other day, we are more fortunate than are the people of some other States. We have a total of only about 4,500 persons on the W. P. A. rolls in that great State, and we have only about five or six thousand on the waiting list. Of course, we have a larger number of unemployed who, by reason of their unemployment, have not yet been reduced to the state of poverty which requires them to go on the relief rolls.

I want to say by way of preliminary, Mr. President, that under the Constitution it is the duty of the President of the United States to make recommendations, and under that instrument it is the duty of the Congress to pass upon the recommendations of the President. I take the position that in acting on this matter today each individual Senator is proceeding according to his best lights.

The President, in performing his function, and Colonel Harrington, who was particularly charged with ascertaining and knowing the facts that are material to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida, have stated that $150,000,000 is necessary, and they have submitted the facts upon which that statement is predicated. The testimony of Colonel Harrington and the question itself came before the Committee on Appropriations, and they gave the matter earnest consideration, and up and down through the membership they came to different conclusions; so finally, as a sort of a balancing average, they said they would accept a certain amount, and they would recommend that amount to the Senate.

As to the testimony of Colonel Harrington and as to the position of the President, I desire to say that at least after mature consideration they are agreed upon what is necessary. On the other hand, apparently the Senate Committee on Appropriations was never able to agree what, in the judgment of individual Senators on the committee, was necessary. On the other hand, I further concede that they did the best they could. Some of them, though desiring not to do anything, agreed to an amount less than $150,000,000. Some of them who wished to appropriate $100,000,000 voted for $100,000,000. Some of them who thought $150,000,000 was necessary permitted their lances to trail in the dust and abandoned their position and, out of expediency, agreed to the smaller amount.

Another thing that we have been informed of is that one of the reasons which induced Members to support the smaller amount, although they believed that $150,000,000 was necessary, was that some "Caesar" over in the House had been feeding on the kind of meat which enabled him to say to the Senate of the United States, "If you do not accept $100,000,000 we will give you less, and if you put in the amount of $150,000,000, we will never agree to it." As one Senator, I should like to have $150,000,000 appropriated, first because it is necessary and for other reasons, and finally because I should like to see the joint resolution go back to the House carrying $150,000,000 under such circumstances—and that would be the case—that a roll call would be necessary; and I should like to see the persons smoked out who want to tell the Senate what to do, and let them declare whether or not they are going to vote for what they believe their constituents, who sent them here, think is necessary.

That is one of the reasons why I should like to see $150,000,000 appropriated.

We on each side of this question are in general agreement on some matters. We are in general agreement as to how many unemployed there are in the United States, namely, from 10,000,000 to 12,000,000. We are in approximate agreement as to the number who are now on W. P. A., and we are in general agreement as to the number who are certified and eligible to go on relief. I think those of us who have given any thought to the question are in agreement on how many young people, the youth of America, will come out of the high schools and the colleges this year and look for jobs. They will come out of these institutions filled with high hopes because of what they have been told about this glorious country of ours, and about the Bill of Rights, and about the right to seek for happiness. Some of them will get jobs; some of them will not. We ought also to be in some measurable agreement on the number of unemployed who are not yet either on relief or on the eligible list.

This is not a political question. It does not depend upon what the Republicans did when they were in power, nor does it depend upon what we do now and what we have done since the Democrats came into power; but the list of unemployed is increasing. I can give you an example that I know about in my own city, a case in which in 1935 a man with a wife and two children had about $1,000 in the bank and $2,500 of life insurance and a substantial equity in a home. Little by little, in order to take care of the man's family, the $1,000 vanished; and then he was unable to pay the premiums on his life insurance, and that vanished; and then he lost his home. The final tragedy is that this man is 45 years of age and thereby barred from a new job.

The Washington Post the other day said that those who are unemployed should make more strenuous efforts to find jobs.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President——

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. I should like for just a moment to recur to a remark which was made by the distinguished Senator from Wyoming when he said that one of his compelling reasons for favoring an appropriation of $150,000,000 was to send the joint resolution back to the House for the purpose of "smoking out" the Members over there and compelling them to get "on the line" so far as a record vote is concerned. I should like to inquire of the able Senator if that is the primary reason why the Senator from Wyoming would like to see the amendment adopted?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. No; I want to get the Members of the other House "on the line," because then, and by that process, we shall get the $150,000,000 which is necessary.

Mr. LUCAS. I desire in conclusion to say that I have just graduated from the House of Representatives and am now serving my first term in the Senate.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I appreciate how unwise it is to attack an organization to any member of that organization, because he must come to its defense.

Mr. LUCAS. And I cannot let the opportunity pass without saying to the Senator that I think the Members of the House are just as courageous as are the Members of the Senate.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. In time, when we have further exhibitions of the sort of thing that has recently taken place, I hope the Senator may change his mind. I am not criticizing the House. I am just taking the position that quite often men in Congress vote one way on a particular question, and if perchance it comes up again, and there is a roll call, they vote the other way.

Mr. LUCAS. I presume that is true; I have no doubt the Senator is correct; but I think human nature is just about the same whether an individual serves in the Senate or whether he serves in the House of Representatives. As a Member of the House of Representatives for two terms, I rise in defense of the House, and say that as a Member of that body I have met some of the most intelligent, some of the most courageous, and some of the most patriotic individuals who are serving in either body of the Congress at the present time.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I agree with the Senator. Some of them are over there yet. Most of them have been sent over here. [Laughter.]

My position on this matter is not taken merely out of a desire to have the House have a roll call to find out what is really needed. I hope also that the Senate will have a roll call on this amendment, and thereby we shall find out what our respective Senators believe that our people want.

Mr. LUCAS. I appreciate the interest the Senator from Wyoming has in this particular problem, which is a vital one to the country; but since I have been a Member of the Senate I have observed that at times bills are gaveled through here without a roll call, including some important ones. I thing it unfair for a Member of the Senate to challenge or impugn the motives of the other legislative body.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. That is because of the perfection with which our committees do their work before the bills come to the Senate; and quite often there is no necessity for a roll call.

A moment ago, when I was interrupted, I was saying that the other day the Washington Post, than whom there is no "than-whomer" when it comes to being critical of this administration and of the W. P. A., said that it was the duty of members of the W. P. A. to be more diligent in seeking employment.

Mr. President, in the first place the law provides that if employment is available and is offered to a W. P. A. worker, and he does not accept it, he thereby goes off the W. P. A. rolls. Furthermore, there are ten or twelve million people out of employment; and it will not do any good for anyone to point a finger of scorn at them, because they are the ordinary, everyday brand of American citizens. They have their ambitions. They have their families. Some of them did have some little property. They are really seeking work. If anybody thinks those employed on the W. P. A. are shirking, and he has ten or twelve million jobs in his pocket, I should be glad to have him come forward, and I assure him that I will see that he will get ten or twelve million men to go and take those particular jobs. We are up against a condition and not a theory, and it takes two persons to create a job. There has to be one who wants to hire someone else, and one who wants to work.

A moment ago I said that one of the reasons why I was talking now was because I wanted to let my people know why I shall vote for this additional appropriation; and that is peculiarly appropriate to me, because in my State there is not the pressing need for W. P. A. employment that there is nationally. On that basis I say now that, in my opinion, this is a national problem. Our labor today, largely for great corporations and other industries, even our agriculture, is Nation-wide. It has no relation to State lines, and it is well and meet, to my mind, that the National Government, to the extent that is necessary, supply the funds to carry on relief work for the unemployed.

I have noticed, not in the Senate but in the newspapers and in other places, that there are a great many people who give much lip service to the unemployed and to W. P. A., but they always have a "but"; and some of them are largely "but."

Mr. President, one of the things that is said is that the administration of relief is very expensive. No one has come forward with any proof except with the bare assertion, unsupported by any testimony, that the administrative expenses of this great relief program amount to more than 3½ percent of the appropriation. If there is any other organization in the United States which approximates an efficient method of cooperation comparable with the relief-work organization, which can show less than 3½ percent of expenditures in carrying on its work, I should like to have it pointed out to me.

We also hear much about politics in relief, and some Senators whose States were unfortunate enough to elect Republican Governors in 1938 have suddenly found a new enthusiasm to have the work turned over to State administrations, the Government, of course, supplying most of the money. I think that anyone who has had any relationship with politics or knows anything about politics is aware of the fact that if we want to get politics into W. P. A. we should turn it over to the States, and if we want to get more politics in W. P. A. we should turn it over to the counties, to the county commissioners, to an organization where every man knows every other man, and where the politicians in the county know who is who and who has the votes. At least under the national organization there is not that personal contact down the line. So I wish to repudiate and deny the statement that politics is more prevalent in the W. P. A. than it is in any other of our political or economic organizations.

There are many men in the W. P. A., there are thousands in the administrative part of it, and I venture to say that not as many W. P. A. men, in proportion, have been indicted, much less convicted—with one or two exceptions of men charged with minor offenses—not as many in proportion as the number of Federal judges in the United States, or of any other class of citizens in the United States indicted or convicted of fraud or other crime. So I have little sympathy for men who try to justify their opposition to W. P. A. upon the ground that there is a great deal of politics or corruption in that organization.

Of course, we must have economy, we all agree as to that; but it is not economy, in my opinion, to cut down an appropriation and to increase the number of those on the rolls of the unemployed and the uncared for.

Some newspapers say that we must of necessity reduce the number on relief. We must thereby increase the number of those unemployed throughout the United States. I am not at all deceived by the attitude of at least some of the great dailies. Apparently they want to see the number of unemployed increased at this time, because if a sufficient number of them are put on the rolls of the idle, if a sufficient number are allowed to go hungry, if a sufficient number of them and their wives and children are ill-clothed, ill-housed, and ill-fed, it will be possible to break down the wage scale in the United States, and there are many economists and near economists who hope that that will happen, because they think that the way to recovery is to cut down the wage scale of the United States. That is one of the things I hope will not happen, and that is one of the reasons why I should like to see the $150,000,000 amendment agreed to.

Mr. President, I had intended to quote a letter I read a few days ago—and I think possibly every other Member of the Senate has read it—but I will not quote it in full. It was written by a man by the name of Matthew, and it came to my mind in view of the fact that just 2 days ago we were commemorating throughout the United States the risen Christ. This man Matthew, in his letter—and it will be found in the twenty-fifth chapter of his letters, beginning with verse 31—quotes verbatim that which he heard from the lips of the Master. That was at a time when all the nations of the earth had been gathered together in the final judgment, and the King in His glory separated them, some on the right and some on the left, and to those on the right He said:

> I was an hungered, and ye gave Me meat: I was thirsty and ye gave Me drink: I was a stranger, and ye took Me in: Naked, and ye clothed Me: I was sick, and ye visited Me: I was in prison, and ye came unto Me.
> Then shall the righteous answer him, saying, Lord, when saw we Thee an hungered, and fed Thee? or thirsty, and gave Thee drink? When saw we Thee a stranger, and took Thee in? or naked, and clothed Thee? Or when saw we Thee sick, or in prison, and came unto Thee? And the King shall answer and say unto them, Verily I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these My brethren, you have done it unto me.

Then He passed judgment on those on the left, but I will pass that. Unto them He said:

> I was an hungered and ye gave Me no meat: I was thirsty and ye gave Me no drink: I was a stranger, and ye took Me not in: naked, and ye clothed Me not: sick, and in prison, and ye visited Me not. Then shall they also answer Him, saying, Lord, when saw we Thee an hungered, or athirst, or a stranger, or naked, or sick, or in prison, and did not minister unto Thee? Then shall He answer them, saying, Verily I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to Me.

So He passed judgment on them. Although we listen daily to prayers, and though we bow our heads in our faith, and though we go to our respective churches and listen to fine sermons, where the light comes in through colored glass, and all is peace and quiet, and there is the peal of the organ, I dare say I will not be out of order in reminding my colleagues of what Matthew tells us he heard the Lord Himself say.

On that basis, finally, I say, let us feed the hungry, clothe the naked, take care of those who are sick.

Mr. President, I desire to present a few telegrams for the RECORD. One is from the vice president of Labor's Non-Partisan League. One is from the secretary of the Congress of Industrial Organizations. One is from the Board of County Commissioners of Natrona County, Wyo., which happens to be the largest county in my State. One is from the Organized Laborers Central Legislative Committee of Central Wyoming, by Verne Mason, secretary, which organization comprises members of both the C. I. O. and the American Federation of Labor. One is from the local union of the American Federation of Musicians of Casper, Wyo., which organization is an affiliate of the American Federation of Labor. One is from another similar organization. All these are in favor of the pending amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wyoming that the telegrams to which he has referred be printed in the RECORD?

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 6, 1939.

Senator HARRY H. SCHWARTZ,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

Proposal to reduce President's recommendation to W. P. A. to $100,000,000 must cause tragic increases in sufferings to American unemployed. This question is far above partisan politics or factional deals. Entire amount requested by President will at best be inadequate. Labor's Nonpartisan League urges that you support movement to authorize $150,000,000 appropriation.

ELI L. OLIVER,
Executive Vice President, Labor's Nonpartisan League.

CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS,
1196 CONNECTICUT AVENUE NW.,
Washington, D. C., March 20, 1939.

DEAR SIR: As chairman of the committee on unemployment of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, I would like to convey to you the C. I. O.'s conviction that it is of great importance to the Nation that at least $150,000,000 additional be appropriated for the W. P. A. for the current fiscal year.

It is hard to conceive of the cutting of such an amount from any other of the nonadministrative Federal expenditures which would wreak so much havoc on the country. No other cut in such expenditures, we believe, would damage so many people, adversely affect so many businesses, and cause such a blow to the morale of our people.

Sincerely yours,

JAMES B. CAREY,
Secretary, Congress of Industrial Organizations.

Resolution

Whereas because of the unprecedented unemployment existing in the United States and the absolute necessity of the Government to make some suitable provision to adequately take care of the unemployed: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Board of the County Commissioners of Natrona County, Wyo., That the Congress of the United States appropriate a sufficient sum of money to continue the operation of W. P. A. until June 30, 1939; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the Wyoming congressional delegation and to the Governor of the State of Wyoming.

Dated at Casper, Natrona County, Wyo., this 3d day of January 1939.

CASPER, WYO., January 20, 1939.

Hon. HARRY H. SCHWARTZ,
Senate Building, Washington, D. C:

Our committee in regular session unanimously approve and urge the passage of the President's W. P. A. program of $875,000,000. This committee represents approximately 5,000 organized workers, central Wyoming.

ORGANIZED LABORERS CENTRAL LEGISLATIVE

Senator H. H. SCHWARTZ,
Washington, D. C.:

Inasmuch as the musical profession has been greatly crippled by mechanization, and musicians, by nature of their profession, have great difficulty in finding work in other fields, this local urges you to vote against a reduction in the appropriations for the unemployed. Our members over the United States have been greatly benefited by W. P. A., and we hope this means of relief will not be denied them.

Hon. HARRY H. SCHWARTZ,
United States Senate Building:

At regular meeting of Local Union No. 2174, United Mine Workers of America, a membership of 300, urging you to support relief bill asked by President Roosevelt.

ROY SATHER, President.
MARTIN J. STRUMAN, Secretary, 1305 Lowell Street.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The queston is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER].

Mr. McNARY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Clark, Idaho	Holman	Overton	Wheeler
Clark, Mo.	Holt	Pepper	White
Connally	Hughes	Pittman	Wiley

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER].

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, this subject suggests first to me the question of the Senate's support and the Senate's approval of the unanimous report of its Committee on Appropriations. The Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, made up of men from both parties, containing men of differing views, has studied the problem submitted to it with care, the committee has had the benefit of the hearings in the House, of the decision in the House, and the committee came to a conclusion which it thinks is for the welfare and the benefit of the country.

The members of the committee are criticized because their differing views have not been held to stubbornly, and because we did not bring in 24 separate reports, as no 2 men agree absolutely; but men interested in relief, interested in their country, after conference, after discussion, differing as they do, have agreed upon this matter, and it seems to me that that agreement is entitled to more than consideration—I think it is entitled to the support of the Senate.

Senators upon the Appropriations Committee are criticized by some directly and by others indirectly for lack of sympathy for the unfortunate, for lack of consideration for the needy. I say to those who make such criticism or infer it that the members of the Committee on Appropriations are no less interested in the unfortunate of this land than are those who criticize them. As a matter of fact, in my judgment, the action of the Committee on Appropriations has its impulse more closely to the heartbeats of citizens interested in the unfortunate than is the case, perhaps, of some others who criticize. I am not going to argue that point.

I ask, Mr. President, that the report of the committee be placed in the RECORD as part of my remarks at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The report (No. 250) is as follows:

The Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 246) entitled "Joint resolution making a further additional appropriation for work relief and relief for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939," report the measure with a favorable recommendation for its early consideration and passage by the Senate.

This resolution grows out of the President's message of March 4, 1939 (H. Doc. 205), wherein he urges the appropriation of the sum of $150,000,000 in addition to the sum of $725,000,000 appropriated by House Joint Resolution 83 of February 4, 1939, in order to provide the sum of $875,000,000 in the aggregate in addition to the sum appropriated in the preceding Congress.

The original recommendation contemplated providing work relief for the 5-month period February 1 to June 30, 1939, by months, as follows:

February	$3,000,000
March	3,000,000
April	2,875,000
May	2,775,000
June	2,700,000

The committee recommends an additional appropriation of $100,000,000, instead of $150,000,000, and believes that such lesser additional amount will be adequate to provide work relief for the numbers embraced by the original recommendation except as they have been reduced since such original recommendation was made in consequence of law.

Public Resolution No. 1, approved February 4, 1939, contains among others, the following two provisions:

(a) That the Administrator shall immediately cause to be made an investigation of the rolls of relief employees on work projects and eliminate from such rolls those not in actual need.

(b) No alien shall be given employment or continued in employment on any project prosecuted under the appropriations contained in the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938 or this joint resolution.

Under the first of those two provisions, the investigation ordered to be made was launched upon on February 10, 1939, and was scheduled for completion on March 25, 1939. As it has progressed, persons on the rolls found not to be in actual need have been removed.

Under subdivision (a) there have been already removed from the rolls 36,840 names and it is estimated that the aggregate number to be removed under this provision will not be less than 60,000.

Under subdivision (b) there have been removed from the rolls aliens to the number of 45,259.

The total already removed under these two provisions is, therefore, 82,099.

The original recommendation of the President for an appropriation of $875,000,000 did not contemplate these removals.

The number already removed from the rolls represents a saving at an average per capita cost of each W. P. A. worker of $61 per month of $5,007,939 per month, or a total from April 1 to June 30, 1939, of $15,023,817.

When the full number of 60,000 are dropped from the rolls as not in actual need, the monthly saving will be $6,420,799.

The following is a tabulation of the number proposed to be on the relief rolls and the cost in accordance with figures given the House Committee on Appropriations and computed at the monthly cost of $61 per person.

	Average employment	Cost
April	2,875,000	$175,375,000
May	2,775,000	169,275,000
June	2,700,000	164,700,000
Apr. 1 to June 30, 1939, total cost		509,350,000
Mar. 20 to Apr. 1	3,000,000	61,000,000
Total cost		570,350,000

The last above figure represents the total amount necessary to carry all expenses of the W. P. A. administration from March 20 to April 1. Colonel Harrington testified before the Senate committee that on March 20 the unexpended balance of the W. P. A. was approximately $583,000,000. He further testified that on March 20 the unobligated balance of the W. P. A. was $476,344,724. This leaves obligated an amount of $111,655,276. It is estimated by Colonel Harrington that at least one-half of this obligated amount will be applied to the payment of wages, materials, and overhead to be earned or consumed subsequent to March 20. Adding one-half of this obligated amount to the unobligated balance leaves available for the payment of W. P. A. costs, from March 20 to June 30, 1939, $532,172,412. This would leave the amount of the additional appropriation necessary to carry the total W. P. A. cost up to June 30, 1939, as $38,177,588.

The figures of the Treasury Department show the unexpended balance of W. P. A. funds on March 20, 1939, to be $572,795,186.65. But if the figures for obligated and unobligated funds as given by Colonel Harrington are not changed the amount required to be appropriated to carry forth the program originally outlined under the $875,000,000 appropriation would not be altered by this change in the estimate of unexpended balance.

Colonel Harrington has stated that his estimates for the necessity of the $875,000,000 included an allowance of approximately $45,000,000 for the purpose of paying for services rendered, material consumed, and overhead after the end of the fiscal year on June 30, 1939; he insists that such a provision is necessary to insure orderly continuity of the W. P. A. program. While the committee does not concede this a necessity, in view of the fact that relief appropriations for the next fiscal year will be made before June 30, 1939, nevertheless acquiesced in this desire. The committee, therefore, is not only providing the amount necessary to pay for all work and materials to be rendered and consumed prior to June 30, 1939, according to the program submitted with the original request for $875,000,000 but is adding thereto the sum of approximately $55,000,000, which it is intended and expected will not be spent until the beginning of the next fiscal year and then only for materials consumed and labor rendered during such fiscal year.

The report of the Appropriations Committee of the House contains information and computations which are interesting and which support the position taken in the report.

Mr. ADAMS. The report gives a summarized statement of facts.

I have spoken so far briefly as a representative of the Committee on Appropriations. I now wish to say a few words on my own responsibility. The Committee on Appropriations is not responsible for what I am about to say. I will state that a very great majority of the members of the committee agree with what I am about to say, but the things I have to say are said on my own account. I think no Senator has given more time and more thought to the relief problems than have I. My conclusions may be wrong, my reasoning may have been wrong, but I am bringing to the Senate, as I have in the past, an honest, genuine judgment, uninfluenced by personal consequences.

It was my judgment when the relief measure was before the Senate in February that the $725,000,000 then appropriated would be adequate to meet the deserved needs of the country. The Senate by a narrow margin and the House by a larger margin concurred. I thought that, with efficient administration, with administration cooperative with the Congress, $725,000,000 would have been adequate. I now think that by reason of an administration not cooperative with the Congress it is advisable to appropriate more money.

Colonel Harrington, the Administrator, is a gentleman; he is a good soldier. I am inclined to think that he has added to the old maxim that "All is fair in love and war" the word "relief." But Colonel Harrington has a rather poor opinion of Congress. I have a better opinion, perhaps, of Colonel Harrington than he has of the Congress. The Congress when it appropriated the $725,000,000 said that it believed economy should be practiced so far as is consistent with due consideration for the unfortunate and the needy.

We were told that if only the $725,000,000 was appropriated we would have tragically drastic cuts in the rolls. In the wintertime we were asked to look out of the windows and see the snow; picture thousands and hundreds of thousands thrown out into the snow. The Senate guarded against that by saying, "You shall not reduce the rolls more than 5 percent during the wintertime." We did anticipate that normal reductions from voluntary withdrawals would continue. We had reason to expect that there would be some reductions in the rolls. Politely, but definitely, the good colonel has defied Congress. The colonel knows the purpose of the Congress, but he has declined to follow the will of Congress expressed in its appropriation measure.

I do not mean to say that there is anything unusual in the head of a department having a poor opinion of Congress. Most Senators know that it is a bureaucratic tendency when a bureau has been created and money has been appropriated to operate the bureau, that the Congress no longer is regarded with any particular esteem by the man at the head of the bureau. One of the finest Senators who ever sat in this body, who departed the world some years ago, said to me: "I have been here many years. I am just learning when I get down to the sixteenth assistant secretary of some department to take off my shoes and kowtow at the entrance and ask if I may not submit to him something on behalf of my constituents." So I am not surprised at Colonel Harrington having a poor regard for Congress, and I do not criticize him for it. It is the custom of the place.

What are the facts with respect to the situation? In order to assure that there would be a reduction in the rolls to protect the country, its taxpayers, and those who bear the burdens, we put in the bill that all aliens should be taken off of the rolls by the 5th of March. There was nothing new in that. The bill we passed the previous year and last June all provided for an order of preference. In order to get on the relief rolls the ex-service men had the first preference, next citizens of the United States, and, third, aliens lawfully in the United States who had first papers in good standing.

We are told that there has always been a waiting list of some 750,000, largely composed of citizens. Therefore, there has never been a day when the Works Progress Administration was justified in putting a single alien on the rolls. Under the provision to which I have referred 45,500 aliens have been dropped from the rolls. They had been on the rolls for Lord knows how long. In addition, we provided that there should be an investigation of the eligibility of those on the rolls, and that those not in actual need should be dropped. That was nothing new. The W. P. A. has no right to use money appropriated for relief for those not in need; and the statutes have so declared; but the Senate put those amendments in so as to make clear the policy of Congress. Under the provision referred to 36,840 were taken off the rolls at the time of our hearings, because they were on the rolls without any right or eligibility to be there, upon the ground of need. Colonel Harrington said to us that at least 60,000, in the aggregate, would be dropped because they were not in need.

In other words, aliens and those not in need to the number of 105,000 have been on the rolls for a long time. What has that situation cost the taxpayers? What has it taken from the relief funds? It has taken more than $6,000,000 a month, or more than $78,000,000 a year. We have been spending more than $78,000,000 a year for two classes who had no right to be on the rolls. So I say that a more efficient and more cooperative administration would have conducted the affairs of the W. P. A. in such a way that smaller appropriations would have been required.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWELLENBACH in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. In spite of the fact that 100,000 aliens and those not qualified to be on the rolls have been dropped, has the Senator any proof that the work along that line has been completed? Does he have assurance that those now on the rolls are entitled to be there?

Mr. ADAMS. I accept the statements of the W. P. A. as accurate. The argument I am seeking to make is based upon the testimony of Colonel Harrington. I am not going beyond that. Accepting his own facts, I reach a different conclusion. I do not myself accept him as an authority. I am accepting him as a premise for my argument. When we passed the $725,000,000 appropriation, there were fewer than 3,000,000 on the rolls. We passed the bill on the 4th of February, and it was approved by the President. On that date there were on the rolls 2,965,000 individuals. In view of the apprehension expressed some of us thought that if we did not vote the larger sum we had every reason to expect that at least voluntary withdrawals would stand without replacement, and the rolls would gradually go down.

What happened? Between the 11th of February and the 25th of February, a period of just 2 weeks, the rolls were increased by 78,000. In my judgment that is not evidence of a cooperative administration. Mind you, there had been taken off the rolls 82,000, consisting of aliens and those not in need; and in spite of taking off 82,000, the rolls were increased 78,000 above where they were on the 11th of February.

Mr. LUCAS and Mr. MINTON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I should like to know whether or not there was an increase in the W. P. A. rolls during that time in the State of Illinois.

Mr. ADAMS. I cannot answer that question. I have only the figures which were given to us by Colonel Harrington, which are the national figures. I do not have the figures as to the States, broken down by periods.

Mr. LUCAS. I am very much interested in the total number placed on the rolls. I presume that the increase was general throughout the country.

Will the Senator yield for another question, or an observation?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. LUCAS. In line with what the Senator was discussing a few moments ago, with respect to aliens, I should like to call to the attention of the Senate an article in the Chicago Daily Times, printed about March 6, in which, among other things, we find the following:

Charles E. Miner, State W. P. A. administrator, today announced he had dropped 3,755 from the W. P. A. rolls in Chicago because of expenditure restrictions by Congress.

That article appeared in the Chicago Daily Times and was distributed, of course, throughout the State of Illinois and the surrounding States where that newspaper has circulation. It is my understanding that in the State of Illinois during that time the rolls were increased rather than decreased. Mr. President, when my attention was directed to the article in the Chicago Times I took it upon myself to communicate with Mr. Miner concerning this very important question, because I did not believe the article stated the facts. In reply to the letter I wrote to Mr. Miner he had this to say:

The newspaper item which quoted me in reference to the elimination of aliens did not give an accurate statement.

It will be noted that the original article, which was circulated throughout that section of the United States, had nothing to say about aliens. The article specifically referred to the fact that certain persons had been released from W. P. A. because of the legislation which had been passed, without giving any reference to the fact that aliens were involved.

Mr. Miner continues:

I have checked clippings from many of our newspapers and find that in nearly every instance the facts were given without the distortion which was indicated by the item to which you referred in your inquiry.

Mr. Miner sent me the press release. I want to read that press release into the RECORD, with the permission of the Senator from Colorado:

CHICAGO, March 6.—Mandatory at midnight the last of the 6,115 aliens on W. P. A. in Illinois will be severed from the rolls under the provision by Congress that "no alien shall be given employment or continued in employment on any project prosecuted under the appropriations contained in the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938," Charles E. Miner, State administrator, said today.

"In Chicago 3,755 aliens were affected and 2,360 in the rest of the State," Mr. Miner said.

This part of the article standing alone is in accord with legislative action. Had Mr. Miner stopped at this juncture no one could utter a word of criticism, but I seriously object and charge the administrator without any right or authority to qualify or add to what the Congress has decreed to be the law. I direct particular attention to the wording of the remainder of the press release:

"These foreign born on W. P. A.," Mr. Miner continues, "were all in the process of becoming citizens. This does not mean that they had merely filed a declaration of intention, but means that they had valid first papers as required under the previous act of Congress. Many of them have sons and daughters who are citizens and some indication of the interest the foreign-born parents were taking to obtain full citizenship is contained in the report of citizenship classes of the adult education program of the Women's and Professional Division of the Works Progress Administration.

During the 15-month period ending November 30, 1938, 18,157 aliens had enrolled for the citizenship courses throughout the State.

What has this to do, I humbly ask, with the law we passed? Quoting further:

Of this number, 4,376 during the period became eligible for, and took the examination, with 3,959 being admitted, while approximately 10 percent failed.

Mr. President, what I criticize and condemn is the making of this unnecessary statement as the director of the Illinois W. P. A. I ask what right has he under such legislation to defend the alien. That was not necessary at all in my opinion. In other words, Mr. Miner, who is delegated to administer the affairs of the W. P. A. in the State of Illinois, and who is paid by the Federal Government alone, as I see it, felt it necessary to interpret the action of Congress to the newspapers as cruel and heartless, because of taking aliens off the W. P. A. rolls. God knows, I have the utmost sympathy for those people, and I know personally of circumstances where grave injustices have been committed, but if Congress determines that aliens should not be kept on W. P. A. rolls while American citizens and war veterans in the State of Illinois are now being discriminated against—and I know whereof I speak—I insist that an interpretation of this action does not properly come within the functions of one appointed solely to administer the act.

When he gave out that press release he went beyond the authority given to him as administrator or as an executive officer administering W. P. A. in the State of Illinois.

This is just one instance of what has been done with respect to what the Senator from Colorado has been discussing. The Congress says that aliens must be discharged from W. P. A. rolls.

Mr. Miner, through his press release, says by implication that Congress made a great mistake and tells the aliens that as administrator he is for them.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, to follow what the Senator from Illinois has said, I will make merely one suggestion as to something which has recently happened in my State and in the State of Wyoming. Word went out officially as to the number to be dropped from the relief rolls in each of those States and subsequently notice was issued reducing the number by one-half. In the State of Wyoming notification was given that something over 600 were to go off the rolls, while the last notice is that some 300 or so would go off. In Colorado it was stated that 5,000 must go off, even though Congress passed the $100,000,000 appropriation, when the tabulation furnished us by Colonel Harrington shows that only 2,400 are going off the relief rolls. The country has been flooded, Senators, with misleading statements as to the disaster that would come from the administration of this act under the appropriations we made. There has been a deliberate, determined effort to build up a false impression in the country as to what was being done in Congress so as to put pressure upon Senators and Members of the House.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President——

Mr. ADAMS. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. MINTON. I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado if the 76,000 or 78,000 who were put on the rolls in a few weeks during February were, to his knowledge, unworthy or ineligible for relief?

Mr. ADAMS. I am glad the Senator has asked that question because it has been stated at times that those of us who favored the lesser appropriation took the position that some on relief were unworthy. I have yet to hear a statement made by anybody on that ground. I have yet to say that. Of course, they were not unworthy, and I take it for granted that the administrators putting them on were not putting unworthy people on the rolls. I have no more personal information than has the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. MINTON. Then I should like to ask the Senator if that is not evidence of further need for greater appropriations than for a reduction in the appropriations?

Mr. ADAMS. Not necessarily, and I will tell the Senator why. The men who were laid off as aliens and as not in need were largely replaced by people who were being taken care of by the cities and counties. They simply unloaded the burden onto the Federal Government which prior to that time was being cared for by the localities.

Mr. MINTON. I was referring to the 78,000 who were put on the rolls.

Mr. ADAMS. I am talking about aliens and those who were not in need. Instead of reducing the rolls, as we asked, they really when they took one off put two on.

Mr. MINTON. As I understood the Senator's statement, the 78,000 did not have anything to do with the aliens who went off the rolls or the unworthy ones who went off the rolls, but there was a 78,000 increase.

Mr. ADAMS. That is correct.

Mr. MINTON. And the Senator says they were worthy and were eligible?

Mr. ADAMS. I have made no classification of them.

Mr. MINTON. The Senator has no reason to believe that they were unworthy or ineligible, and, therefore, it seems to me, if the administration found it necessary to put on the rolls, in a few days in February, 78,000 who were worthy and eligible in every respect, that is evidence that we need more money instead of less.

Mr. ADAMS. I call the Senator's attention to certain chronological facts. We passed the bill appropriating $725,000,000 on the 4th of February. Looking into the future, not knowing what might happen, we put into the bill a provision that if an emergency should arise the President could recommend an additional appropriation. On the 7th of February, 3 days after the bill was signed, a message came from the President insisting on an additional appropriation of $150,000,000. Then on the 11th of February, 1 week after the bill passed, an increase in the number of persons on the rolls commenced, in spite of the fact that 82,000 had gone off or were going off the rolls because of being aliens and not in need. There was a variation from the practice going back to October, November, December, and January. Most of the time there had been a decrease in the rolls. I have no way of challenging the eligibility of any of these men. I merely say to the Senator it suggests that this action was being taken in order to put pressure upon the Congress.

I want to make clear that I think the President has acted in absolute good faith in his messages. I think he believes the larger appropriation is necessary, but, to be perfectly frank, the President has relied upon the facts and statements of Colonel Harrington, and I do not think that Colonel Harrington's facts are to be relied upon to that extent.

Mr. GLASS and Mr. MINTON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield; and, if so, to whom?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield to the Senator from Virginia who has been standing for some time.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, if there were 105,000 people on the rolls who ought not to have been on the rolls and were not properly eligible to be on the rolls, what special reason have we to believe that the 78,000 that Colonel Harrington put on the rolls deserved to be put on the rolls?

Mr. ADAMS. I do not know of any special reason, I will say to the Senator from Virginia. I merely decline to classify them at all. I have merely recited the facts as they appear from Colonel Harrington's testimony.

Mr. GLASS. The outstanding fact is that 105,000 people were on the rolls who ought not to have been there, and God knows how long they had been on the rolls. That being so, what confidence can we place in the fact that the 78,000 who were put on the rolls between the 11th and 24th of February were eligible to be placed there? They were put on the rolls simply to influence the appropriation by Congress.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. I wonder if the Senator, when he makes that statement, had in mind the testimony of Colonel Harrington which was given before the House Appropriations Committee at a hearing upon the resolution that is now before the Senate. On page 2, Colonel Harrington testified as follows:

> The Department of Labor report as to the number of people who lost their jobs between December 15 and January 15 showed 886,000 nonagricultural workers as having lost their jobs during that period, which is not remarkable, because the stores lay off many workers at the end of the Christmas season, and there is a slackening in outdoor operations during that period.
> It is estimated that in addition to the 886,000 nonagricultural workers, approximately 500,000 in agriculture lost their employment during that same period.
> Mr. CANNON. How many?
> Colonel HARRINGTON. Approximately half a million. The effect of this, which was predicted, and seasonal, on the number of persons certified to the W. P. A. as in need and awaiting assignment, was to increase the number to approximately 850,000.

So I wondered if the Senator from Colorado had in mind that it was just barely possible that Colonel Harrington was trying to be an honest and an efficient administrator and that the putting of additional people on the rolls to which he has referred is attributable to the fact that 886,000 people lost their jobs in nonagricultural enterprises and another half million lost their jobs in agricultural enterprises and increased the number of certified eligible workers who were pressing at the gates of W. P. A. to 886,000 workers?

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I will yield in a second, after I have given some consideration to what has been said by the Senator from Florida.

The fact should be taken into consideration that there appears on page 4 of the same hearing a statement as to the number of accessions to and separations from the W. P. A. rolls at that time.

It appears that in July 163,000 persons were separated from the rolls and 311,000 were put on. I am giving the thousands and leaving out the hundreds.

In August 191,000 persons were separated and 308,000 were put on.

In September there were separations of 227,000 and accessions of 276,000.

In October there were 212,000 separations and 327,000 accessions.

In November the tide changed, and there were 237,000 separations and 164,000 accessions.

In December there were 294,000 separations and 97,000 accessions.

In January there were 214,000 separations and 109,000 accessions.

Mind you, in January, before the joint resolution passed, 214,000 persons were separated from the rolls and only 109,000 were put on.

In February, after the joint resolution had passed, 176,000 were separated from the rolls and 238,000 were put on.

That is, there is no substantial difference between January and February, both winter months; but the policy apparently changed contemporaneously with the passage of the relief measure in a form not entirely acceptable to the administration.

I now yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, the Senator has stated that several thousand aliens and several thousand ineligibles were removed from the rolls. For my information and for the benefit of the RECORD, will the Senator tell me what is an ineligible? Why were those to whom he refers as ineligibles removed from the rolls?

Mr. ADAMS. They were removed, I assume, in accordance with the provisions of the statute passed by the Congress, which simply provided that there should be taken off the rolls those who were not in actual need. I think that is the phrasing of the measure.

Mr. SMATHERS. Does the Senator know whether that included single men without dependents?

Mr. ADAMS. I assume that if a single man was not in actual need, he should go off the rolls just the same as a married man. If there is to be any discrimination, I should think it would be the other way about. The term "actual need" was to be determined by the W. P. A. Administrator. That is, the very persons who put the man on the rolls were the persons who put him off, under our direction. We were told that there was a waiting list of persons who wanted to get on the rolls, and the places of persons in need should not be taken by those who were not in need. The Senator certainly does not disagree with that statement.

Mr. SMATHERS. But I desire to know from the Senator if the number he says have been laid off as ineligibles comprise single men without dependents.

Mr. ADAMS. I assume that if a single man without dependents was not in need, he should be laid off.

Mr. SMATHERS. The reason why I ask the Senator that question is that quite a number of men were laid off in my home city of Atlantic City last week because they were single and had no dependents. Are they a part of the list of those to whom the Senator has referred as ineligibles?

Mr. ADAMS. I will say to the Senator from New Jersey that last week there were more persons on the rolls than on the day when the $725,000,000 measure passed. There has been no requirement other than the laying-off of aliens, and so forth, because the rolls had increased in number. There were 3,007,000 or 3,009,000 persons on the rolls last week, whereas there were 2,965,000 persons on the rolls on the 11th of February.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President——

Mr. ADAMS. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. PEPPER. I desire to be sure that I understand the position of the Senator from Colorado. I understand him to intimate, if not to say, that the administration has been responsible for adding new persons to the rolls in an effort to coerce the Congress into making a larger supplemental appropriation. I desire to ask the Senator——

Mr. ADAMS. Let me interrupt by saying that, of course, I do not know what was in the mind of the Administrator. I say that these are the facts, and I can see that a wayfaring man might draw that inference, in view of the controversy.

Mr. PEPPER. I desire to ask a question about the facts. Let me call the Senator's attention to the President's message of January 5, and ask the Senator if that message was delivered prior to the action of the Senate in passing the $725,000,000 appropriation measure.

Mr. ADAMS. Yes. We passed the joint resolution on the last of January, and the President signed it on the 4th of February.

Mr. PEPPER. So the message of the President to the Congress was prior to the passage of the $725,000,000 appropriation measure.

Mr. ADAMS. Yes; and his next message was 3 days afterward.

Mr. PEPPER. I want the Senator to remember that the message of the President on January 5 was prior to the passage by the Congress of the joint resolution providing the $725,000,000 appropriation.

I wonder if the Senator recalls that on page 2 of House Document 87, carrying the W. P. A. message of the President of January 5, the President said as follows:

> It is believed that sufficient funds should now be appropriated to the Works Progress Administration for the balance of the current fiscal year to employ an average of 3,000,000 workers in February and March, and a diminishing number beginning in April which would reach a figure of 2,700,000 in June.

I wonder if the Senator also recalls that the President sent to the Congress on the 7th of February another message; and in that message, subsequent to the January 5 message, and subsequent to the appropriation of $725,000,000, the President said, as shown on the first page of House Document No. 152:

> In my message to the Congress on January 5, 1939, I recommended a supplementary appropriation of $875,000,000. This was based on a program to give employment to 3,000,000 workers during February and March and to reduce this employment to an average of 2,700,000 workers in June.

Then I wonder if the Senator has had access to a letter dated April 7, from Administrator Harrington to the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD], which reads as follows:

> So far as the matter of reducing the rolls after April 1, 1939, is concerned, the original program based upon the President's recommendation for an appropriation of $875,000,000, was to maintain an average employment of 3,000,000 persons during February and March, 2,900,000 in April, 2,800,000 in May, and 2,700,000 in June. The contemplated average of 3,000,000 persons was maintained through February and March.

Mr. President, if on the 5th of January the President said, in substance, "I have outlined a program that contemplates an average of 3,000,000 workers on the rolls in February and March," and if then the appropriation is made, and the President comes back on February 7 and says, "On January 5 I recommended a program which would carry 3,000,000 workers through February and March," and then if in April the Administrator comes back and says, "The contemplated average of 3,000,000 persons was maintained through February and March," I ask if the President's course has not been consistent, and if there has not been an absence of coercion of the Congress by putting additional persons on the rolls during the interim.

Mr. ADAMS. I will say to the Senator that maintaining the rolls has two interpretations. He did not go below that number, but he went well above it. He went up to 3,043,000 under an appropriation which he said would not be adequate for the other number.

Mr. PEPPER. He did not exceed it on the average, though; did he?

Mr. ADAMS. I cannot answer that question. I have not attempted to average the figures. I have taken the figures which Colonel Harrington gives us. He ran up on the 25th of February to 3,043,000; and he is now carrying, or he was carrying when we discussed the matter, over 3,000,000.

Here is the situation, however: The committee report is based upon the President's desire. We have not challenged the fact of his maintaining 3,000,000 persons on the rolls. The figures submitted by the committee contain a provision that the average of 3,000,000 shall be maintained, which the Senator states was maintained during those months, and that the reduction shall be in accordance with Colonel Harrington's figures. Our judgment is that $100,000,000, added to what is now available, will be more than adequate to continue employment at the President's figures, at Colonel Harrington's figures, and leave $55,000,000 over for expenditure after the end of the fiscal year, for labor and materials to be furnished and consumed after the 30th of June.

Mr. President, I have rather felt that there are certain principles on which we should be able to agree. First, that no American citizen, without fault on his own part, shall starve. I stand by that principle just as firmly as do those who ask for the larger amount. It is, as has been stated, a matter of arithmetic. That is what we are dealing with. The question is whether or not we wish to appropriate more than is needed or appropriate what is needed, whether we want to increase the power in the hands of those who obviously, visibly, have abused it, or whether we want to give them all they need to see that no man shall starve.

Second. I think we should provide—and we all ought to agree on this point—what is needed, and no more. I am sure Senators do not want to provide more than is needed.

Third. That there shall not be extravagance or waste. I think we all agree on that.

Fourth. That the absorption into private industry of the idle ten or eleven million is the primary problem of the United States.

Fifth. That business and industry should be stimulated and encouraged in order that this may be done.

Sixth. That, as stated by a gentleman who has recently moved to the State of Iowa, a former resident, we should now seek recovery rather than reform.

Mr. President, those are simple, categorical statements, with which I think there will be no disagreement, with the exception of the last.

The question, then, is, What amount is necessary to care for the deserving needy of this country?

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWARTZ in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. PEPPER. Does the Senator construe the diminution of this appropriation as in the direction of recovery?

Mr. ADAMS. I do. As I have stated, the most vital thing is the stimulation of industry in order that the unemployed may be absorbed by private industry, that they may be put to work in their regular vocations, producing things for consumption by other men also employed in their regular vocations; and industry is not going to absorb the unemployed if every time it looks to Congress it is discouraged and disappointed.

If we pursue the course we have pursued, with deficits of $4,000,000,000 a year, with the Federal debt over $40,000,000,000, with the distance between income and outgo increasing, we are discouraging industry. Men with capital which they have or which they can borrow will not invest; they will not go into manufacture; they will not go into industry until Congress gives the signal that investment in this land may be safe and may be profitable if intelligently conducted.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. PEPPER. Let us suppose that a businessman had to view a horizon and decide which condition of affairs was the more conducive to his entering into business or expanding his business. Suppose he had on the one hand a budget no more out of balance than our Government's, and a national debt no larger than ours in relation to our national worth and income; and suppose he had on the other hand unemployment of ten or eleven million people, without any public effort being made to diminish the number of these unemployed. If the supposed businessman had to make a choice between a diminution of the debt and a diminution in the number of unemployed, which does the Senator think would be the more attractive to him?

Mr. ADAMS. That situation could not be presented, because, as a matter of fact, what I am interested in is public action by the Congress which will stimulate employment, not public action which will discourage employment; and I think increase of the debt, and increase and continuation of the deficit, is a definite discouragement to industry and to business.

I know what is said in the cloakrooms of this body as to the future, and as to what may happen; I know what is said upon the streets of this land. I know that apprehension and fear have gripped our people because of the apparently unrestrained expenditures of which we are guilty. What I am interested in is giving business a signal.

The Senator and other Senators have said that there is more involved in this matter than $50,000,000. There is indeed more involved in it. The question is whether or not we are going to stop in our present course toward national bankruptcy, and make a turn toward stability and soundness.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator what he had in mind as an alternative or substitute for the aid to employment that is given by the Works Progress Administration, which will help general business conditions.

Mr. ADAMS. It is not a simple situation. The Senator having asked me, I will say to him that, of course, the first thing is to give evidence of consideration for industry. We have not given a sign of that. We have not given encouragement. We have sat by with a shotgun across our knees, and any time a man showed up with a profit, we wanted to shoot him and take it. That is, we have refused to stimulate. We have regarded building up a profitable industry as in some way a crime.

We have spent regardless, as I have said, on the W. P. A. Go through the land, gather up the opinions as to whether or not W. P. A. has been economicaly and efficiently administered. I have my own judgment as to the soundness of the plan, but I am not now arguing that question. I do not want to argue it here. That is not the issue. We are assuming the W. P. A. plan to exist. In other words, I am not going back into the philosophy of these things.

I have on my desk at home a volume some 70 years old entitled "Extraordinary Popular Delusions." I think that in the last 10 years we have furnished material for some new chapters.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. The Senator stated that we had been sitting around with a shotgun across our knees.

Mr. ADAMS. It may have been a rifle.

Mr. MINTON. It may have been a rifle; it may have been a bludgeon of some kind or other; and that whenever anyone showed up with a profit, we immediately shot him, or applied the bludgeon, or whatever the weapon was, and took his profit away from him. Is it not a fact that in 1936 and 1937 business in this country enjoyed better profits than they had received in any year, except in 1929, in all the history of the country?

Mr. ADAMS. And what did we do?

Mr. MINTON. And we had spent a great deal of money helping to bring that condition about.

Mr. ADAMS. We put on the law books an undistributed-profits tax, and we said to the man who made a profit, "If you use your profits to pay your debts, if you use your profits to build a factory and employ more men, if you use your profits to replace a burned or destroyed factory, the Government will penalize you for doing so." And business went back into its shell. We did that.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I do not want to interrupt the Senator's statement——

Mr. ADAMS. I am glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. PEPPER. Was the Senator one of those who thought that if we should merely remove from business the burden of the undistributed profits it would blossom like a rose, and that there would come beautiful prosperity to the country; and have those ideas been justified?

Mr. ADAMS. I hope the Senator does not really think I am quite as simple as that. I thought that the undistributed-profits tax was an impediment, that it tended to thwart business, to interfere with its progress, that something else than that was necessary to make it go.

While I appreciate the Senator's facetiousness——

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, the Senator from Florida certainly did not intend to be facetious, even if he looked that way. What I meant to ask the Senator was whether or not this is another one of those instances in which, by the alleviation of some burden business is supposed to bear, it may be expected that it will spring up like a rubber ball, as it were, when relieved from pressure, and be buoyant again, and I wondered whether the Senator had found that there had been the business improvement following in the wake of the partial elimination of the undistributed-profits tax which he and others anticipated there would be.

Mr. ADAMS. I think my views on that I have stated.

We were discussing Colonel Harrington. I wish to read a few quotations from the statement of Colonel Harrington before our committee to show the attitude the colonel takes toward the Congress and toward the problem now before us.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. It may be that the Senator is now about to take up the subject which I have in mind; but the Senator stated a few moments ago that the sole question really was as to how much money is necessary in order to keep the unemployed from suffering.

Mr. ADAMS. I think that is perhaps a strong statement. I think it should go somewhat beyond that; but that is the primary question.

Mr. BORAH. That is the primary question.

Mr. ADAMS. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. Is the Senator about to give us the facts and figures upon which the committee reached the conclusion that the appropriation asked for is sufficient?

Mr. ADAMS. I shall do that as best I can. The Senator will have to bear with me, because when someone suggests a sidetrack for me to follow, I cannot resist.

Mr. BORAH. I will bear with the Senator, because what he is about to state is what I want to know.

Mr. ADAMS. I asked this question of Colonel Harrington:

Senator ADAMS. Then we have this situation—that approximately 45,500 were taken off the rolls because they were aliens?

Colonel HARRINGTON. Yes, sir.

Senator ADAMS. And 36,840 have already been taken off because they were not in need—not qualified to be on the rolls?

Colonel HARRINGTON. Yes, sir.

Senator ADAMS. In other words, 82,000 have gone off the rolls under these two categories?

But you have maintained the total rolls not only up to where they were, but I gathered from the House figures that between February 4 and February 25 the rolls increased 78,000.

I am sorry that this is a duplication, but I want to put in the RECORD the words of Colonel Harrington. I continue to read:

Senator ADAMS. Then take the figures for February 11. You had 2,965,000.

Colonel HARRINGTON. Yes, sir.

Senator ADAMS. So that between February 11 and February 25 you had an increase of 78,000 in your rolls?

Colonel HARRINGTON. Yes, sir.

Senator ADAMS. That in the face of the fact that Congress had indicated that it felt that the expenditures should be at a reduced rate?

Then later in the hearings Senator BYRNES asked:

Senator BYRNES. You construed Congress meant there would be no reduction?

Colonel HARRINGTON. No, Senator; I construed that Congress meant that it should not exceed 5 percent.

Senator BYRNES. Instead of reducing it 5 percent, you increased it?

Colonel HARRINGTON. Well, we held it at 3,000,000.

Senator BYRNES. Did you ever reduce it 1 percent?

Colonel HARRINGTON. No, sir.

Senator BYRNES. You did not reduce it 1 percent, much less 5 percent.

Colonel HARRINGTON. That is right.

Senator BYRNES. Colonel Harrington, when the President approved the bill a statement was issued and a message sent to the Congress asking for $150,000,000. That was not appropriated. That is correct?

Colonel HARRINGTON. Yes, sir.

Senator BYRNES. That was 3 days afterward.

Colonel HARRINGTON. On the 7th of February; yes, sir.

Senator BYRNES. And the bill was signed on the 4th?

Colonel HARRINGTON. That is right.

Senator BYRNES. And from that time, instead of reducing it even 5 percent, you increased it?

Colonel HARRINGTON. We held it at 3,000,000.

Senator BYRNES. Well, you did not make any deductions. I am looking at the dates. You had on January 28, about the time the bill was being considered, 2,985,000, and you go up to 3,043,000; 3,032,000; you have not reduced it 1 percent in that time.

Colonel HARRINGTON. That is right.

Senator BYRNES. Did you make any effort to reduce the rolls?

Colonel HARRINGTON. No, sir.

Senator BYRNES. You did not care what the Congress said?

Colonel HARRINGTON. We cared very much what the Congress said; but we made no effort.

Senator BYRNES. Well, you cared about it, but you were not going to do anything to reduce the rolls.

Colonel HARRINGTON. We did not reduce the rolls.

Then at a later period in the hearings:

Senator BYRNES. * * * the record shows on a table at the bottom of page 4, if I may call your attention to it, that you separated from the service during the month of January this year 214,492.

Colonel HARRINGTON. Yes, sir.

Senator BYRNES. And took on only 109,000, or only one-half. Therefore, you reduced by 100,000 during the month of January?

Colonel HARRINGTON. Yes, sir.

Senator BYRNES. After the bill was passed and signed on February 4?

Colonel HARRINGTON. Yes, sir.

Senator BYRNES. How many were separated from the service and how many accessions were there?

Colonel HARRINGTON. The last month that I have is February; total separations were 176,735. The total accessions were 238,707.

Senator BYRNES. So that while in the month of January, before Congress sought to try to reduce the appropriation, you separated 214,000 and only took on 100,000, or one-half as many?

Colonel HARRINGTON. Yes, sir.

Senator BYRNES. But after the appropriation was passed you took on 238,000 as against 176,000 who were separated?

Colonel HARRINGTON. That is correct; yes, sir.

Senator BYRNES. You decided that the evident intent of Congress in refusing to give you $150,000,000 was that instead of taking off any, you would take on 50,000 more than were separated?

Colonel HARRINGTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, the Senator is not——

Mr. ADAMS. May I proceed? I am not declining to yield——

Mr. PEPPER. I will just ask one question, Mr. President. Some of the Senators were not on the floor when attention was called to this matter. The Senator is not ignoring the statement of Colonel Harrington in his letter of April 7 to the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD], a copy of which I have before me, in which he states that an average of 3,000,000 persons were maintained during the months of February and March, and that the average was not exceeded. And also the statement of Colonel Harrington that was referred to before the House Appropriations Committee pointing out that during the time between December 15 and January 15, 886,000 workers lost their jobs in nonagricultural occupations, and during the same time 500,000 workers lost their jobs in agricultural activities. So that the need that Congress was always trying to fill had become greater than before that time.

Mr. ADAMS. That is a repetition of what the Senator has said.

Mr. President, every month voluntary separations from the W. P. A. average about 150,000. The separations have run as high as 172,000. So that any program involves replacement of those retiring if there is sufficient money. In connection with the W. P. A.—and we have the tabulations here—there is the voluntary retirement and enforced retirement.

We are told that 750,000 or 850,000 persons have been certified. In the first place, these persons are not certified by the W. P. A. They have never been certified by the W. P. A. They are applicants to get on W. P. A. who have passed the scrutiny of the rather lenient and liberal local boards of one kind or another. But of those 750,000 or 850,000 there has been a continual shift since the original bill, the $725,000,000 bill, was passed. Over 360,000 were taken onto the W. P. A. rolls. In other words, it is not a standing army that is waiting. Persons get on and go off the list. A man gets a job. He goes off the list and another man comes on the list. So that practically on the list about which we hear so much today are only those who have been on it a short time.

As I have said to the Senate, the changes from voluntary withdrawals average 150,000 a month. So there is not an army of people starting out on the sidewalk. There is a continual shifting. Those 750,000 persons are the latest recruits into the army of the needy—that is, those who most recently lost their employment. They are continually going on that list and getting into employment.

Now to come back to the figures on this situation.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask a question there?

Mr. ADAMS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator says that Colonel Harrington put on 350,000 persons coming from those eight-hundred-odd-thousand persons which had been certified by the States, and so forth.

Mr. ADAMS. Yes; Mr. President. It depends on how far back you go. There is an average of better than 150,000 getting off this list every month.

Mr. BORAH. Is there any question raised about the justification of Colonel Harrington's putting these 350,000 on the rolls? Did they not need the work? Was the need justified in putting them on the rolls?

Mr. ADAMS. I cannot answer for any individual case, I will say to the Senator. I have merely pointed out the unusual circumstance that in a particular time the normal trend was departed from. There had been an increase in the departures as compared with the accessions. Then when the bill was passed on the 4th of February there was a change in the trend.

Colonel Harrington put on more than he took off. Between October and January he had taken off 350,000 more than he put on. Then the trend started the other way. I am not in a position to say that every one of the cases may not have been justified. I merely argue that it looks to me as if there were a lack of cooperation, and it is open to the interpretation that when they take persons off the rolls and replace them with persons who were then being taken care of by the city of New York, or some other community, and they were not then actually in need, that pressure is sought to be put on Congress.

Mr. BORAH. If these men were in need, if Colonel Harrington was justified in putting them on, the mere fact that it occurred after the passage of the bill in the Senate would not be any justification for criticizing Colonel Harrington, would it?

Mr. ADAMS. In one sense, no; that is, assuming that it was done in the utmost good faith, and because of their need, and not that he had proceeded in an undertaking to coerce the Congress. I will say to the Senator that Colonel Harrington, or those acting for him, put out over the land statements of the number of dismissals that must follow the action of Congress. Those figures cannot be justified. They have not been carried out. They will not be carried out. In other words, that is not the only instance, the only evidence of the effort to coerce Congress and to defy Congress.

Mr. BORAH. In the play of coercing Congress or not coercing Congress, the real question was whether there were hungry men who ought to be taken care of.

Mr. ADAMS. I will say to the Senator that I think all of the hungry men entitled to be taken care of were taken care of. Adequate funds have been provided for them. And if the $100,000,000 be provided, that will continue to be the case down until the 30th of June.

Mr. GLASS. Let me repeat my inquiry to the Senator. If there were 45,000 aliens on the rolls who ought not to have been there, and if, according to Colonel Harrington's own figures, 61,000 persons were on the rolls who ought not to have been there because they were not in need, what evidence have we that they would not have stayed on the rolls indefinitely if Congress had not directed that they be taken off?

Mr. BORAH. What I am trying to find is evidence on the question of the good faith of Colonel Harrington.

Mr. GLASS. That is what I am trying to find. The 45,000 aliens ought not to have been on the rolls. They were on the rolls in direct contravention of the action of Congress. Apparently there had never been any investigation of the need of the 61,000 who were on the rolls who were not in need, who were not hungry, and who could have provided their own food and clothing. So why should we have such great confidence in the suggestion that the 78,000 who have been put on the rolls since the passage of the bill ought to be on the rolls?

Mr. BORAH. I give Colonel Harrington no more than I give to any public officer, and that is the presumption that he acted in good faith and discharged his duties accordingly, as he understood the law. What I think we need is some evidence that he did not act in good faith.

Mr. GLASS. We have no evidence which may be relied on as to the number of unemployed in this country.

Mr. BORAH. I know that.

Mr. GLASS. There has been no effort to find out. There is no desire to find out. The desire is to obtain all the money possible out of the Treasury.

Mr. BORAH. I venture to say that every Senator knows of numerous instances in which persons who have not been put on the rolls are suffering. The question is, Have those on the rolls been taken care of by Colonel Harrington in good faith and in the belief that they were in need?

Mr. ADAMS. The argument which comes from me and from most of the committee at this time concedes that every person on the rolls was put there through the good-faith action of Colonel Harrington. According to his own figures he intended to keep 3,000,000 on the rolls in February and March, 2,875,000 in April, 2,775,000 in May, and an average of 2,700,000 in June. Those were the figures which he said would be adequate to meet the situation. Conceding the correctness of Colonel Harrington's figures, the appropriation recommended by the committee will accommodate and adequately care for the entire number at the rate now being paid, and leave over between $45,000,000 and $55,000,000 to pay men employed and to pay for materials consumed after the 1st of July.

Colonel Harrington tells us that on the 20th of March the unexpended balance available for relief purposes was $588,000,000. At the same time the Treasury Department said the unexpended balance was $572,795,000. That does not include the $28,000,000 set aside to take care of W. P. A. workers assigned to Federal projects. So, adding that, the Federal figures for the unexpended balance would be $600,795,000.

Colonel Harrington told us on the 20th of March that the unobligated balance was $476,344,000; and that there had been obligated $111,695,000, at least half of which would go to pay for services rendered and material consumed after the 20th of March. In other words, there was $532,172,000 to take care of the group which the colonel says he wants to take care of.

The cost of taking care of the group is set out in the committee report. For taking care of 2,875,000 in April, the cost will be $175,375,000; for taking care of 2,775,000 in May, the cost will be $169,275,000; for taking care of 2,700,000 in June, the cost will be $164,700,000, or a total cost of $509,350,000. Then we add $61,000,000 to care for those between the 20th of March and the 1st of April, or a total cost of $570,000,000.

So, taking Colonel Harrington's figures to carry him to the 1st of July, he needs $38,177,000. That is what is needed, under his figures, to carry the program until that time. We have added to that $45,000,000, which he said he needed and should have to maintain the continuity of his program and to pay for materials consumed and labor furnished the first week of the fiscal year; and we have added, as a leeway, $17,000,000 above that figure.

In other words, in the honest judgment of the committee, the sums which have been appropriated, on the figures which the committee considered, and which were before us, are adequate to meet the situation without excluding any man who was intended to be included in the original program of Colonel Harrington.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. Would not the Senator say that the amount appropriated for this fiscal year, after the $100,000,000 is made available, will be greatly in excess of the amount made available in any previous year for a W. P. A. program?

Mr. ADAMS. I will say to the Senator that, as he knows, the expenditures for the fiscal year, with the $100,000,000, will be nearly two and a half billion dollars. In other words, we will have spent more than one-half the total income of the United States Government for the W. P. A.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. As I understand from the W. P. A. figures, there are certified 600,000, or thereabouts, who never got on the rolls. With respect to unemployment figures I have before me the latest figures on unemployment for February 1939, from the American Federation of Labor. Those figures show 11,470,000 unemployed. The Alexander Hamilton Institute of New York gives a figure of 12,882,000. Our own census, the Biggers census, gave a figure of nearly 11,000,000.

Mr. ADAMS. I am obliged to the Senator for calling my attention to that information and also for reminding me of a tabulation which the Senator put in the RECORD within the last day or two, with regard to unemployment in the world. The Senator put into the RECORD a tabulation of unemployment in all the important countries in the world. That tabulation showed that in the United States the percentage of unemployment is far greater than in any other land on this shining globe.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President——

Mr. ADAMS. That is the thing which bothers some of us. We have spent $11,000,000,000 on relief. We have spent other billions on a recovery program. We wonder whether or not we may be in error somewhere along the line. I am concerned, as the Senator is. I want to put men back to work, whether the number be 10,000,000, 11,000,000, 12,000,000, or more. If we are on the wrong track, the Senator and I both want to get on the right track. All I am asking of the Senator or anyone else is that we sit down and discard our preconceived notions and try to work out a sound judgment for the benefit of our country. [Manifestations of applause from the galleries.]

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President——

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. I want to congratulate the Senator on the fervor he has aroused in the galleries.

Does the Senator think that the effort which the Government has made in the past 6 years to improve conditions in this country and the improvement which actually has been experienced are responsible for the present large number of unemployed.

Mr. ADAMS. I will say to the Senator that I do not intend to discuss my judgment as to the efficacy of the program. I hope the Senator will not ask me to do that. He and I sit on the same side of the Chamber. Generally speaking, we have been supporting the same measures. This is not the time to discuss my judgment of the efficacy of the program. I might say that one measure was good and another was bad. I think the Senator would probably agree with me that some things have worked well and some have not. I hope the Senator will spare me from going into a discussion as to my judgment about those things, because my judgment is fallible. However, I have the feeling that something is wrong. I am interested in trying to work out a solution. It seems to me that we ought to do a better job than we have done. Does not the Senator think so?

Mr. PEPPER. I am glad the Senator asked me that question. The other day I stated that one of the principal reasons which impelled me to offer the amendment and insist upon its consideration was the fact that I hoped it would provoke fundamental discussion on the floor of the Senate, where I thought fundamental discussion should be carried on, and where proposals which may lead us out of the wilderness in which we find ourselves wandering can be made by men of intelligence and integrity.

The difference between the point of view of my friend, the eminent Senator from Colorado, and that of myself and others who have the same view, is that I do not see the Senator from Colorado and the Appropriations Committee offering any alternative. All they offer is a reduction in what we are doing. However, I have not heard any affirmative suggestion. I am of the opinion that the Senator would do his country a vast service if he could find some way to solve the problem by some method entirely dissociated from the present method. But meanwhile I think that this method has accomplished good. I think it has given us the progress that we have been able to enjoy, and I am not willing to discard it. I am not even willing to hamstring it with limitations that should not be imposed until the Senator from Colorado and other men of ability and experience and perhaps genius have been able to offer an alternative that would provide a solution or at least a betterment of the situation.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator knows that the Appropriations Committee is not a legislative committee; it is not a committee that formulates policies. I will say that, in my minor way, I have tried to put the brakes on what I thought were unjustified expenditures which were advocated and urged by men just as earnest as I, and I have felt that the floor of the Senate and the committee was the place to discuss these matters.

My judgment is sincerely that the extent of our expenditures is one of the things that are responsible for the great army of unemployed. I sincerely believe that if we will reduce Government expenditures we will increase private employment. I think that we are overlooking the 43,000,000 men and women employed in gainful occupations upon whose backs fall the expenditures which we make. We are thinking too much at times of our generosity and our liberality, and we are not thinking of those from whom we must take the money with which to pay the bill.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator made a statement that is capable of being construed in another way. Did the spending program which the present administration is now carrying on give us the 6,000,000 unemployed in 1932?

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator does not expect me, does he, to say that the Roosevelt administration is responsible for what was done under the Hoover administration? That is his question.

Mr. PEPPER. I understood the Senator to say that the spending program was responsible for that large number of unemployed.

Mr. ADAMS. I said it was a contributing factor. I do not like to go back and quote anybody but one of the most distinguished men in this country early in 1933 made a declaration which I think was absolutely sound on that question. The gentleman to whom I refer said:

> Upon the unimpaired credit of the United States Government rests the safety of deposits, the security of insurance policies, the activity of industrial enterprises, the value of our agricultural products, and the availability of employment. The credit of the United States Government definitely affects these fundamental human values. It, therefore, becomes our first concern to make secure the foundation. National recovery depends upon it.
> Too often in recent history liberal governments have been wrecked on rocks of loose fiscal policy. We must avoid this danger.

The gentleman who said that may have changed his views, but the statement he made then is eternally true.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator if he thinks the credit of the United States or of the banks of the United States or of the insurance companies of the United States is in any worse condition now than it was in 1932?

Mr. ADAMS. I will say to the Senator that great credit will be written upon the pages of history for the present administration for what it did in weeding out unsound banking institutions and bringing sound banking conditions. There could not be a restoration of prosperity without sound banks; the present administration did that; and it is a great credit mark upon its record. So there is no question as to what I think about the efforts of the present administration in doing that.

Mr. PEPPER. Now, Mr. President, a last question. I wonder if in disparaging the achievements of the administration——

Mr. ADAMS. Wait a moment; I have not disparaged the achievements of the administration.

Mr. PEPPER. Let me complete the sentence.

Mr. ADAMS. Not with that premise.

Mr. PEPPER. Well, I withdraw that. I wonder if the Senator from Colorado, in thinking that the efforts of the present administration have not been successful in solving and eliminating the problem of unemployment, has given proper consideration to the fact that the statisticians tell us that about 600,000 new workers come every year into the worker's field in excess of the number that are retired from it; in addition to that, that approximately 500,000 workers are thrown into a state of unemployment every year because of technological improvements, and therefore during the last 6 years six times 1,100,000 people have come into and added their own weight to the number of unemployed in this country? So, if we have not diminished the number that we found in 1932, it cannot fairly be said that we have not made a tremendous contribution toward the alleviation of the problem.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator overlooks a very obvious thing. It is true that 600,000 new workers come into the field every year, but there are three times that many new consumers every year; every new worker is a consumer, and then there are others who are not workers who are consumers. In other words, there is not merely an accumulation of idle people but there is an accumulation of work for them to do; mouths to feed, bodies to clothe, houses to build. I have no doubt that in this great, rich land, if we somehow can use our minds intelligently, we will solve the problem so that no longer on the streets of America will the barefooted boy walk alongside the idle shoemaker.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Pardon me for saying it, but I think we are talking over the heads of those whom we are here to serve; that is, those who are out of jobs would be delighted to have this question solved so that they could have jobs instead of living on charity. However, the question which confronts us here is, Is this money necessary to take care of the people who are without jobs and who will be hungry and unclothed if they do not have help? That is all there is to it.

It is probable that Mr. Hoover's administration made mistakes, because when the Roosevelt administration came into power a large degree of unemployment was upon us, and it is probable that the present administration has made mistakes; but the man who is now out of a job was not the man who authorized those mistakes to be made; he had no opportunity to offer anything in their place. These systems were adopted, these schemes were put forward and carried out, and here he is in need. We may talk about the basis of security, security for the banks and of our republican system, but the basis of that security is the citizen, and, if we do not take care of him, then we may have little hope for the other things about which we have talked.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator is entirely correct in saying that the basis is the citizen. When we, without warrant, increase our expenditures, increase our taxes, increase our debts, and increase our deficits, we are damaging the citizen. The Hoover administration appropriated no money for direct relief; it appropriated a relatively small sum to go to the States. We are now, on the first of this month, taking care of 3,009,000 citizens who each represents three or four other individuals. We are being liberal beyond anything in the history of any country that has ever existed.

My judgment, after studying it, concurs with that of the other House. I grant to every other Member of the Senate and of the House an equal desire to further the ends which animate the question and the statement of the Senator from Idaho, that a man should not be penalized for things which are not his own fault. If he is hungry, without his own fault, we have taken on and should take on the obligation to see that he should not starve.

The Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives studied this matter. They decided, after extensive hearings, that $100,000,000 was more than adequate, and the House of Representatives, after consideration, confirmed that judgment. The Appropriations Committee of the Senate agreed with the House. It is not their purpose that any man should be hungry or cold or lack shelter but that adequate funds should be provided, yet that there should not be, so far as they could prevent it, unnecessary appropriations, unnecessary debt, unnecessary deficits, waste, or extravagance

Mr. BORAH. We all agree with that. However, we come back to the question, the sole, simple question, of whether or not $100,000,000 would take care of those who are in need.

Mr. ADAMS. In my judgment, that amount is entirely adequate.

Mr. BORAH. Very well; I have profound respect for the judgment of the Senator from Colorado and for that of the committee; but, for what it is worth, in my opinion hundreds of thousands of people are hungry and will go hungry until the 1st of July; it does not make any difference if we do appropriate the $100,000,000.

Mr. ADAMS. If people shall go hungry, it will be the fault of the administration of the fund.

Mr. BORAH. That may be; it may be that it is being administered crookedly.

Mr. ADAMS. No; I did not say that.

Mr. BORAH. I do not know what the Senator calls it, but I call it "crooked," because if a man willfully wastes public funds which are intended for those who are in need he is guilty of about the lowest crime of which a public servant can be guilty. However, I have not seen as yet any evidence that Colonel Harrington has wasted any money.

Mr. ADAMS. If the Senator pins me down to the point, I will have to say to him that in the House hearings there is shown considerable liberality. The Works Progress Administration spent in 1 year $1,800,000 for communications, consisting of telegrams and telephone calls; they spent $6,000,000 for travel. In other words, they must have had the whole Administration on the rolls. I did not want to discuss such things.

Mr. BORAH. I want the Senator to do so.

Mr. ADAMS. But I think there has been a disregard of economy. They have had so many excess employees that they loaned 96 salaried employees to another Government organization.

These things are in Colonel Harrington's testimony. They are not figments of anybody's imagination. The W. P. A. has built at the New York Fair a building to cost $250,000 or $300,000 in which to exhibit their wares at a time when the Senator says men are hungry. I am sorry the Senator asked me that question. I did not want to say those things; but when the Senator said there was no evidence of waste, while I do not say that it is waste, the Senator knows that in the matter of communications they have the privilege of the frank, and yet $1,800,000 in a year was required to pay for their long-distance telephone and telegraph messages and communications and $6,000,000 for travel expense.

Mr. BORAH. Was there any investigation as to the necessity for these things?

Mr. ADAMS. When we asked Colonel Harrington about the matter of communications, he said, "My face is very red about that."

Mr. BORAH. And the committee stopped at that?

Mr. ADAMS. I thought that was enough. I should add that Colonel Harrington said:

> We are setting about the adoption of machinery in order that that shall not be continued.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President——

Mr. ADAMS. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The Senator will remember that before various interruptions occurred, he was giving an analysis of the effect of the appropriation of $100,000,000. The Senator also will remember that one day last week, as a result of a colloquy between the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], I construed the remarks of the Senator from Colorado to mean that under the $100,000,000 appropriation there would be a sufficient amount so that we might be assured that every person now on the rolls who is in need, and who cannot secure work in private employment, will stay on the rolls during the remainder of this fiscal year; and I then read to the Senator two little amendments.

After our remarks, I concluded that I had misconstrued the remarks of the Senator. Listening to the Senator again this afternoon, I came back to the former conclusion that the Senator does contend that $100,000,000 is sufficient——

Mr. ADAMS. I do.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. And that no one in need will be taken off the rolls. If I have correctly construed the Senator's remarks——

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator has.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. In view of that fact, why would there be any objection to putting into the joint resolution a provision that no person in need who cannot secure work in private employment will be removed from the rolls between now and the end of the fiscal year—the amendment which I read the other day?

Mr. ADAMS. I have not studied the Senator's amendment; but, in the first place, the Senator will concede that if I am correct, the amendment is not necessary. In the next place, some of us have been eager to get this money out. We have been anxious to have the joint resolution passed and not have to go to conference, so that the $100,000,000 will be immediately available. Any amendment involves going to conference and involves delay.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. But if the Senator's conclusion in reference to the figures is correct, the inclusion of this amendment, which the Senator says is unnecessary, would give to the persons who are on the rolls a feeling that they are not going to be kicked off next week or next month. I think one of the most serious mistakes of the W. P. A.—and I am just as critical of W. P. A. as anybody is—is this business of laying off persons and then taking on a great number of others. I think we owe to the persons who are entitled to the assistance of the W. P. A. at least 2 or 3 months of feeling that if they cannot get work in private employment, they will get this small amount of money from W. P. A. for their work. I see a real value in that.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator realizes that the passage of the joint resolution in the form he suggests will not increase the amount of money available.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I realize that.

Mr. ADAMS. The result is that if we assume that the Administration is going to do the best it can, the Senator will not add anything to the measure by adding the amendment. He will not appropriate any additional amount of money.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. But it would be an assurance to those who are on the rolls, and who cannot secure work in private employment, that they will not be removed from the rolls between now and the end of the fiscal year.

Mr. ADAMS. I do not know about that. We found 105,000 persons who were on the rolls contrary to law, and who had been on the rolls contrary to law for we do not know how long.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. This amendment does not include anyone who is illegally or improperly on the rolls.

Mr. ADAMS. I am talking about administration.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. But, to get back, may I now assume that the Senator is not quite sure that the figures Colonel Harrington has presented, and upon which the Senator is basing his argument, are correct?

Mr. ADAMS. Not at all. I think the figures will do just what the Senator says they will do. Any amendment merely involves delay, and merely adds to the problem without helping its solution.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BYRNES. I suggest to the Senator that on page 4 of the hearings in the House, Colonel Harrington inserted a table which I think will give to the Senator from Washington the assurance which he desires.

In this table Colonel Harrington shows that there were separated from the service by voluntary separations and discharges in the month of January 214,000 persons; in December 294,000; in November 237,000. If we may assume that there will be the same number of separations in April, May, and June that have occurred in every month as far back as this table goes, there will be approximately 700,000 separations between now and June 30. Of those separations Colonel Harrington showed that voluntary separations during the past 3 months amounted to three hundred and fifty-some thousands. It is said that 400,000 will be removed. The answer to that statement is that if no more are put on, the voluntary separations during the past 3 months amounted to more than 350,000, and the discharges amounted also to more than 300,000. That does not mean administrative discharges, but men were discharged for various reasons—misconduct on the part of some individuals, incompetency, or many other reasons. But if no more eligibles are certified to the rolls, judging from the record of the past 6 months, there will be a reduction of more than 600,000 between now and June 30.

The difficulty in our following this subject always is that we do not take into consideration the number who are certified to take the places of others. It depends entirely upon that, because without it we now have a prospective reduction of more than 600,000.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. ADAMS. If the Senator will pardon me, I have just one more word to say. As I said before, in corroboration, I have taken more time than I should. I know that figures are dull. We cannot expect those who have not lived with these matters to have the same grasp of the figures as those who have lived with them. We cannot put in their minds the tabulations we have studied over. I simply want the Senate to know how earnest and how sincere the Appropriations Committee were; that their report represents a desire on their part to let petty differences go, to abandon politics, to be good citizens, to be safe Senators, and not to count the cost to themselves. Anyone who is interested just in votes, or in popularity, may well be warned to avoid efforts to reduce expenditures. That is not the way to votes or to popularity. I repeat just one statement: More is involved in this problem than $50,000,000.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, I ask permission to insert in the RECORD some figures on unemployment furnished by the American Federation of Labor and another organization, and part of a letter on the same subject.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington (D. C.) Times-Herald of April 11, 1939]

$150,000,000 IS ESSENTIAL, SENATE TOLD—PRESIDENT SENDS LETTER TO PEPPER AS VOTE NEARS ON $100,000,000 COMPROMISE

President Roosevelt today asserted that Senate failure to vote $150,000,000 for relief during the remaining 2½ months of the fiscal year would cause the dismissal of approximately 400,000 W. P. A. workers.

The Senate was expected to vote during the afternoon on a proposal to raise the pending $100,000,000 to $150,000,000.

QUESTION OF ARITHMETIC

In a letter to Senator CLAUDE PEPPER (Democrat, Florida), who took up the fight for $150,000,000 after administration Senate leaders agreed to compromise on the lower figure, Mr. Roosevelt said the question "is one of arithmetic."

"In reply to your inquiry," the President wrote, "I think there is nothing for me to add or subtract from what I have made so clear on so many occasions since last January.

"The sole question of continuing relief to July 1 is one of arithmetic.

WORK FOR FEWER PEOPLE

"If $100,000,000 is voted, between 300,000 and 400,000 fewer people can be given work relief than if $150,000,000 is voted—and in addition practically none of the 700,000 or 800,000 people on the waiting list can be given employment.

"It seems to me," the President concluded, "that that is the long and short of it."

WORKERS' ALLIANCE OF AMERICA,
April 11, 1939.

DEAR MR. SENATOR: We are appealing to you in these last hours before the vote on the W. P. A. deficiency appropriation, to do everything in your power to avert the discharge of 760,000 W. P. A. workers. This tremendous number of layoffs is scheduled for April, May, and June if only $100,000,000 is voted by the Congress.

We believe that every Member of the Senate has the responsibility to see that these three-quarters of a million families do not suffer as a result of your vote.

We are aware that many Senators feel themselves committed to vote for only $100,000,000. If you are one of those, and you vote for merely this amount, you are giving your sanction and approval to depriving 760,000 wage earners and their families of their daily bread.

It is our conviction that the amendment of Senator PEPPER for $150,000,000 should be supported by you.

If this amendment fails, we believe you have the responsibility to vote for the Schwellenbach amendment, which would give the Works Progress Administrator the power to so adjust the employment and the disposition of funds that no needy employable worker who cannot find employment in private industry shall be discharged, except for cause.

This would mean that the funds would be exhausted on June 20 instead of June 30. Congress could then, in the 1940 appropriation bill, include sufficient funds to carry on the program during the final 10 days.

Will you, for the sake of this 10-day period, make 760,000 of your needy fellow citizens jobless? The proposal of Senator SCHWELLENBACH is such that it should be acceptable should the $150,000,000 amendment fail, to Senators of all parties and all economic beliefs. May we count upon you to cast your vote to keep these needy employable people at work?

Sincerely yours,

DAVID LASSER, National President.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I never have been able to see how borrowing money by our Government, and its expenditure for work-relief labor, could ever raise commodity prices in this country to the level of 1926, which we seek. In fact, it has not done so. I think the time should very quickly come when this policy should cease; but I do not believe it ever will cease unless some action is taken by Congress to restore the price level of commodities in this country.

If one cannot make a profit on his business, there will be no income from it. We cannot increase income without increasing profits, or at least assuring some profits to the producers of commodities and to those engaged in industry.

Again, we find that a certain amount of national income is essential to prosperity. We now face, on our national income, the maximum amount that we can afford to pay in the form of taxation. What disturbs me is that we are constantly arguing about these enormous expenditures of borrowed money, and the only intimation we give out that our action is going to affect commodity prices is that if we stop the spending, private industry will spend. I do not think that naturally follows by any means. Private capital will not invest, no matter what the taxes are, during deflation or threat of deflation. It always invests during inflation. I can understand, of course, that the five or six billion dollars we might spend of the Government's borrowed money would be only a drop in the bucket if private industry did not join in with its capital and its money; but I do not know what Congress has done or is doing to retard deflation and to increase commodity prices.

We certainly have some control over our monetary agents in this country. It would seem that we should have some control over the Federal Reserve Board, and some control over the Treasury Department. If we have not, we should have. It is perfectly evident that the Federal Reserve Board, in connection with the Secretary of the Treasury, in the latter part of 1936 and the early part of 1937 caused the recession of 1938, as it is called, and did it deliberately.

In the latter part of 1936 and the early part of 1937 commodity prices in this country had reached nearly the parity of 1926. As a matter of fact, farm commodity prices had reached 96, as compared with 100, which meant that the purchasing power of the dollar was down to 101.

Within a few months after that commodity prices were driven down 24 percent, and they are down at that point now. The general prices of agricultural products were driven down more than 24 percent, and they are there now.

We have tried every kind of scheme to save agriculture. We have paid the farmers to reduce their production; we have paid them bonuses in the form of loans. Yet it has not affected their commodity prices at all, and unless something is done to affect commodity prices, the present condition is bound to last forever.

Let us look at what Mr. Eccles, the great genius in charge of the Federal Reserve Board, said in his report at the end of 1936. This is a splendid report. In 1936 it looked as though we were not going to have any unemployment in 1937 and 1938; it looked as though the prices of all commodities would reach 100.

I want Senators to listen to this report for just a moment. On page 3 of the Annual Report of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve Board for 1936 we find the following:

> Progress in industry and trade was substantial in 1936. Production of durable goods increased considerably, and output of nondurable products also showed growth, particularly in the latter half of the year.

I am reading from a great monetary and economic genius, and I hope to conclude in a moment:

> The increase in durable-goods production reflected purchases of equipment both by industry and by individuals, as well as further expansion in construction. There was a general rise in employment, and income in both urban and rural areas was considerably larger than in other recent years. Capital values increased during the year, and in the latter part of the year there was a general advance in commodity prices. Total national income rose to $63,800,000,000 for the year, as compared with $55,000,000,000 in 1935 and a low of $39,500,000,000 in 1932.

That was a splendid showing. On page 2 of the report we find the following:

> During 1936, however, business drew upon the banks and upon investors' funds to a considerably larger extent. Commercial loans to bank customers, after 3 years of little change, increased by $1,000,000,000, and securities issued by corporations to obtain new capital (as distinct from refunding issues) amounted to $1,200,000,000 or more than the aggregate for the previous 4 years combined.

The same story of prosperity proceeds. On page 1 of the report for the year 1937 we find the following:

> At the opening of 1937 economic activity was increasing rapidly. The output of mines and factories, after a steady rise for 2 years, had reached the average level of 1929. Increased activity was manifested both in the industries producing goods for immediate consumption and in those producing durable goods. Capital expenditures by manufacturing industries were increasing rapidly, in line with output and profits. There was some revival in residential construction, which had dwindled to a very low level during the depression and was still far from normal. Employment was expanding and wage payments were rising even more rapidly as the result both of reduction in part-time employment and of increases in hourly wage rates. Increased farm income, a large volume of dividend disbursements, and larger wage payments resulted in an increase in retail and wholesale distributions. Prices of securities were at the highest level since the early part of the depression; yields on bonds, both Government and corporate, had reached exceptionally low levels, and capital issues of corporations were in the largest volume of the recovery years. Many commodity prices were rising rapidly. Advances were particularly pronounced in agricultural and other raw materials; prices of finished goods were also rising. Increased domestic demand, together with a considerable volume of foreign demand, contributed to the advance. A wave of buying was in progress. * * *

Relative to bank loans and the expansion of deposit currency, the Board reports as follows from page 2: "The total volume of bank deposits and currency continued to grow and at the beginning of 1937 was at the highest level in the country's history. Bank loans to trade and industry had increased considerably and were growing. New York City banks were reducing their holdings of Government securities, but total investments of banks had changed little in the last half of 1936. Idle funds in the hands of institutions and individual investors continued large, and long-term money rates were exceptionally low."

On page 3 of the 1937 report we find the following assertion:

Currency outside of banks had increased by about $2,000,000,000 between 1930 and 1937.

That is where currency must be to have any effect.

Now comes the report of the destruction of that prosperity, an admission on the part of Mr. Eccles that the Board deliberately destroyed that prosperity.

Yet I have never heard anything said in Congress against it. I have heard of no effort in Congress to control a situation of that kind. We are concerning ourselves with a feared waste of $50,000,000, when the act of the Federal Reserve Board struck down billions of dollars worth of capital in this country with one blow. We are talking now about saving the taxpayers' money, and in my opinion, there is not a thing that we are talking about which has anything whatever to do with the restoration of the price level.

This is what the Federal Reserve Board did in conspiracy with the Treasury Department. On page 2 of the 1937 report we find the following:

The rate of advance in business activity was, in fact, so fast that there were evidences of unsound developments.

There is the whole secret. There were evidences of unsound development. Prosperity was moving forward too rapidly to suit them, and there was threat of a boom. Yet there were 8,000,000 unemployed in this country at the time of that so-called threat of a boom. I read further:

There was a large increase in forward orders in anticipation of further price and wage increases, together with uncertainties regarding deliveries, partly due to labor disputes, and shortages were developing in plant and equipment and in some classes of skilled labor. Notwithstanding the fact that recovery was far from complete and that there was still a large amount of unemployment, boom conditions were developing in particular industries and boom psychology began to be manifested.

Then what happened? On page 1 of the report of 1936 we find that the Board took action to check the upswing. This is what it reported:

In July 1936 and again in January 1937 the Board of Governors took action to increase reserve requirements and thereby to eliminate a large part of the excess reserves that had accumulated. The combined effect of these two actions of the Board was to double the reserve requirements of member banks. Thus the power conferred upon the Board by the Banking Act of 1935 to increase reserve requirements for the purpose of preventing injurious credit expansion was fully utilized.

In December 1936 the United States Treasury inaugurated a policy of setting aside in an inactive stock all gold purchased subsequent to December 23, 1936, and thereby preventing the further acquisition of gold from increasing bank reserves. The Treasury and Federal Reserve measures taken together largely eliminated the basis of a potential credit expansion arising from the large movement of gold to this country which had begun in 1934 and had greatly expanded the credit base of the country.

Again, on page 2 of the 1937 report the Board reported that the Treasury Department joined in the program which had the effect of curtailing and checking the return of prosperity. I read:

In December the United States Treasury, after consultation with the Board, adopted a policy of placing new gold acquisitions in an inactive account, thus preventing further gold imports from adding to the reserves of member banks.

On page 3 of the 1937 report we find the following:

In August 1936 the Board of Governors had raised reserve requirements for member banks by 50 percent in order to absorb a part of the $3,000,000,000 of reserves in excess of requirements held by member banks. Under the law the Board has the responsibility of changing reserve requirements in order to prevent injurious credit expansion or contraction, and the Board had acted to eliminate from the credit base a part of the redundant reserves accumulated through a large volume of gold imports. The Board's action was in the nature of a precautionary measure to prevent an uncontrollable expansion of credit in the future. The policy of maintaining easy money and credit conditions pursued by the System since the beginning of the depression continued to be in effect.

On page 3 of the 1936 report we find the following:

The Board, therefore, in January and March 1936, took action to increase the margin requirements applicable to security loans made by brokers and dealers in securities and in March also made these requirements, as increased, applicable to loans made by banks on stocks for the purpose of purchasing or carrying stocks registered on national securities exchanges. By these measures the Board undertook to check the growing use of borrowed funds for speculation in securities, without limiting the supply or raising the cost of credit available for commercial, industrial, or agricultural purposes.

Senators, watch the development and see what happens. See what happens with this control of our monetary system. I continue to read from the 1937 report, page 8:

About the middle of March prices of stocks and of lower-grade corporate bonds began to decline from the high levels to which they had risen. Advance buying by industry and trade slackened, and early in April prices of commodities traded on organized exchanges began to decline. During the summer increases in crop production contributed to the declines in prices of cotton and grains, while livestock prices advanced. Industrial output continued large, however, reflecting to a considerable extent the filling of orders previously received. In the spring months there was a decline in offerings of securities for refunding purposes which had been in record volume in the early part of 1936 when business organizations, particularly the public utilities, were taking advantage of the prevailing low level of money rates to reduce the cost of their indebtedness.

Here is the end of the story on page 10 of the 1937 report:

As a consequence of these developments industrial production declined at an exceptionally rapid rate, and the Board's index, which had averaged 116 in the first 8 months of the year, fell to 84 in December. There were also sharp declines in factory employment and pay rolls. Movement of goods over the railroads was reduced and, with costs at a higher level, the earning prospects and financial positions of many railroads were impaired. In the commodity markets prices of raw materials and semifinished products showed widespread rapid declines, and prices of finished goods, which had risen somewhat further during the summer, also decreased. In December prices of some raw materials continued to decline but others, including steel scrap and cotton, advanced. Reductions in incomes were reflected toward the end of the year in reduced consumer buying of automobiles, furniture, and other durable goods. Residential building, which earlier in the year had decreased as a consequence primarily of higher building costs, declined further in the autumn, as uncertainties arose regarding income prospects. At this time there were some reduction in building costs, but with business activity declining people were reluctant to build new houses or buy old ones.

There is the history of the rise in 1936 and 1937, and there is the history of the decline down to the present time.

The Federal Reserve Board, which has extraordinary control over the monetary affairs of the United States, conceived in 1936, at a time when there were 8,000,000 unemployed persons in this country, at a time when the price levels had not yet reached those of 1926, that there was a boom, and that conditions were unsound, and the Board took every step in its power to stop the boom, and it did stop the boom, and put conditions where they are now, and since the conditions were brought to that point the Board has taken no action to overcome the wrong and the destruction it did. Instead of that, we have Mr. Eccles, in a very confused and pitiful way, writing a letter to the Committee on Banking and Currency, saying there have been very many disagreements on both sides, and that they would be very happy to have the Committee on Banking and Currency suggest to the Board what they should do.

Mr. President, there is no question what they should do. They cannot control the credit of this country, because a depositor in a bank will not use his money to buy anything so long as he thinks there is a deflationary movement under way and prices are going down. A bank for the same reason will not lend money so long as it believes there is a deflationary movement and prices are going down. Let the depositor think that prices are going up and he will buy, and the bank will join him in lending. The Board has no control over the bank's credit. It has control over the currency in this country. Every time the suggestion is made that the Government use its function in issuing currency, business and banking institutions have been taught to be afraid and they are afraid that something will happen to our currency similar to what happened to the German mark. Therefore, the Board does not know what to do. It will say that there is just as much currency in this country now as there was in 1929. That is true. But where is it? In 1929 it was in the hands of the people. At the present time it is hoarded by the banks on one hand and hoarded by the depositors on the other.

Mr. Eccles tells us that in 1936 not only were deposits moving freely but currency in circulation out of the banks increased. I say "in circulation." I do not mean in circulation as the Treasury considers it to be when it is merely outside of the Treasury. I mean in circulation out of the Treasury and outside the banks.

The deposits at the present time are hoarded. It would make no difference if there were $20,000,000,000 in currency registered in the Treasury reports as being in circulation, which would simply mean that it was outside the Treasury, if all of it were hoarded in banks, both by the banks and the depositors. But there is no doubt that when the Thomas amendment to the agricultural bill was agreed to, authorizing the United States Treasury to issue and spend $3,000,000,000 in Treasury notes, it had an inflationary effect. Why? Because, as Jimmie Warburg said, there had never before been such an inflationary movement in this country as that. In addition, it provided another $3,000,000,000 which the Government might use to take up its current accounts. That made a total of $6,000,000,000. It was Jimmie Warburg who suggested that if such a bill were passed everyone who had a deposit would run out and buy something solid—buy commodities and real estate—and there would be the greatest inflation in commodity values that the United States ever saw. That was exactly what we wanted to the point of reflation.

But, Mr. President, none of that power was ever utilized by the President of the United States. He did not utilize the $3,000,000,000. And to make matters worse, as the inflationary period was coming, and the course of prosperity and commodity prices moved up, to July 1933, the Treasury Department again became frightened of boom, and deliberately issued a statement that there would be no inflation, and then prices dropped.

We have six-billion-and-some-odd dollars in currency in this country. Three-fourths of it at this time is hoarded. We have the privilege, if we want to do so, of issuing $750,000,000 of gold currency. Unfortunately, that is all the gold of the fifteen billion that is unallocated. We have the power today to issue $3,000,000,000 in silver currency. That total would not make the five billion minimum we should have. There would be no power of currency inflation based on metallic reserves. The Federal Reserve Board can retire Federal Reserve notes. So the Federal Reserve Board has absolute control over currency inflation and deflation. There can be no danger of currency inflation. Why not reflate?

I quote from the recent hearing before the special committee of the Senate upon the silver investigation:

The CHAIRMAN. What do you call "currency inflation"? Describe "currency inflation." I have heard the expression used quite a lot. I would like to know distinctly what it is.

Mr. ECCLES. To me it would mean where the supply of money, bank deposits and currency, in the hands of those that spend that money, is greater than a country's ability to produce the goods for the market. It would be a condition of overemployment, a condition of inability to produce the goods, so that the supply of money in the hands of those who spend it is in excess of a country's ability to supply the demands.

The CHAIRMAN. What would be the effect, then?

Mr. ECCLES. The effect would be the rapidly rising price level. It would be a diminution of the purchasing power of the dollar.

The CHAIRMAN. Has not the Government been striving apparently for 6 years to lower the purchasing power of the dollar and to raise the price level of commodities? That has certainly been the effort of our Government for 6 years.

Mr. ECCLES. Of course you speak of "the Government." It is difficult for me to say. There are different views with reference to it. There are some people in the Government, and I think practically everybody, felt that the prices should go up, it would be desirable to have higher prices certainly than they were in 1932, that the prices should bear certainly some relationship to fixed charges and debt structure. If it is possible to create that condition, I would think that was desirable.

The CHAIRMAN. As I understand you now, and I hope I do, the effect of currency inflation would be to raise rapidly price levels, isn't that true?

Mr. ECCLES. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. Then by "currency inflation" you could bring the price levels up to what the Department of Labor fixes as parity. That is true, isn't it?

Mr. ECCLES. You may get a great variation in prices. You may have some prices very low, and you may have other prices higher. Taking an average price level, I think that is true.

Yet we should always have $5,000,000,000; a nonreducible minimum of nonretirable circulating currency. The trouble is that the authorities are so frightened of inflation such as took place in Germany that they will not overcome a deflation. They are not concerned with deflation. It is just as though one lacked 5 pounds of pressure in an automobile tire which required 29 pounds, and was afraid to have the 5 pounds put in for fear the man at the station would put in 100 pounds and blow it up. If 5 pounds were put in the tire, it would be reflation, but if 100 pounds were pumped in the tire, it would be inflation.

There is no question that the agents of the Government controlling our monetary system could do what Governor Strong did when he was Governor of the Federal Reserve Bank in New York, when he held the 1926 levels, on an average, all the time he was there. When the purchasing power of the dollar went above the line and the commodity price went below the line, he was not afraid to add to the currency to bring the dollar to the proper level; and he did it constantly.

In charge of our finances today we have men who know how to create a deflation, but apparently they have not the slightest idea about creating reflation. They can start a conflagration but they cannot put out the fire. Yet they were granted the power to do both.

I think money has been uselessly spent. It will always be so. However, until our Government takes some steps to cheapen the purchasing power of the dollar, which means raising the selling price of commodities, there will never be profits from industry in this country; and if there are no profits from industry in this country, there will be no income. If there be no income there will be no return from taxes. Yet we stand and fight intensely over $50,000,000, while the acts of the Federal Reserve Board and the Treasury Department cause losses of billions to industry and to the people of the country. The fight seems absurd.

To demonstrate the economy of the thing, in 1937 the Government was taking only 40 percent of the silver produced by the miners. That was thought to be too little. That really meant, in effect, a price of 77.57 cents an ounce to the miner. Just before 1938 the President threatened to cut the price from 77.57 cents to 64.64 cents. The Governors of every Western State, every mine operators' association, and every miners' association, wrote and wired to the President of the United States that owing to the lower price of lead, zinc, and copper, with which silver is associated in the ore, if he cut the price 13 cents an ounce, from 77.57 cents to 64.64 cents, many mines would have to close down, many others would have to come down to mere maintenance operation, and great unemployment in the mining section of the country would result.

However, the President was advised otherwise by someone else. What happened? The Director of the Bureau of Mines testified before our committee the other day, and he submitted tables to show that, by reason of the reduction, the production of silver in 1938 had dropped off 15 percent, and that labor in the mines had dropped off 25 percent. He testified that counting the number of outside employees, based upon every mine worker—and he is a Director of the Bureau of Mines, whose business it is to know—200,000 persons had been thrown on the relief rolls. What did that cost the Government? It cost the Government $900 per man, or a total of $180,000,000.

What did the Government win? It won $2,215,143. We can see the actual loss from throwing men out of employment. The Government did what it did to increase its seigniorage $2,000,000.

That is not all. A producing mine—lead, silver, copper, or zinc—pays a bullion tax in most of the States. That source of revenue is one of the biggest incomes to the State in Utah, Nevada, and many Western States. Every producing mine pays a corporation income tax to the Federal Government. The Government not only has charged itself $180,000,000 for these 200,000 men, but it has lost the taxes, all to win a measly $2,000,000 in seigniorage. That is the situation today.

So when we stand here and talk about $50,000,000, I am not so deeply interested. I wish to say that while I do not think spending by means of Government borrowing will ever accomplish a return to prosperity, and while I think much money may be wasted, I am wholly unwilling to take a chance on human suffering. I am unwilling to take a chance when there is dispute as to the facts and the effects of throwing men and women out of work in this country by reason of something with which they had nothing to do. In my opinion the administrators of a powerful monetary system in our own Government are wholly responsible for most of the unemployment of 1939.

Mr. President, I ask to have printed at this point in my remarks certain extracts from the testimony before the Senate Special Silver Committee.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MARCH 27, 1939.

Hon. MARRINER S. ECCLES,
Chairman, Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: In your letter to Hon. ROBERT F. WAGNER, chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate of March 9, 1939, opposing Senate bill 31, introduced by Hon. M. M. LOGAN, of Kentucky, proposing a legislative mandate to restore the predepression price level and maintain it, you enclosed a memorandum which on March 13 was given to the public press. This memorandum, in effect, denies the quantitative theory of money and denies that Congress, or the Board of Governors and the Federal Reserve banks as the agency of Congress, could regulate the value of money by regulating its volume.

A number of Congressmen invited my views on this memorandum. I enclose for your inspection my comments, not in the hope of a reply but in the hope that the memorandum might possibly be of service to your administration, or to the public. I request you to bring it to the attention of the Board of Governors. If there be any errors of fact in it, I ask that you point them out so that I may correct them before the matter goes further. If my inferences and conclusions seem erroneous to you, I should be glad to have you explain why, as my first desire is to be on the side of right and truth. My wish is to be of service in perfecting the management and development of the Federal Reserve System.

Yours respectfully,

ROBERT L. OWEN.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, you have this memorandum here.

Mr. OWEN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Suppose we place that in the record at this point following your letter.

Mr. OWEN. All right, sir.

"MEMORANDUM ON STATEMENT OF THE BOARD OF GOVERNORS ON PROPOSALS TO MAINTAIN PRICES AT FIXED LEVELS, MARCH 13

"On January 10, 1939, Hon. ROBERT F. WAGNER, chairman of the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency, sent to the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System a bill introduced by Hon. M. M. LOGAN, of Kentucky (S. 31), proposing to use the powers of the Federal Reserve System to restore the predepression price level, or purchasing power of the dollar, and maintain it at a fixed level.

"On March 9, 1939, 2 months later, Chairman Eccles replied:

"'* * * you are advised that the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System does not favor the enactment of Senate bill No. 31, a bill to amend the Federal Reserve Act, to restore and maintain a stable price level, and for other purposes, or any other legislation of this general character.

"'A statement of the reasons for this view is contained in the enclosed memorandum.'

"The Board of Governors in the memorandum opposes any bill which proposes a stable price level on the ground—

"'* * * that prices do not depend primarily on the volume or the cost of money; that the Board's control over the volume of money is not and cannot be made complete; and that steady average prices, even if obtainable by official action, would not assure lasting prosperity' (p. 1).

"'The Board declares that those who propose a stable price level do so under the impression—"'* * * that prices can be raised by increasing the supply of money, that prices can be lowered by reducing the supply of money, and that prices can be kept fairly steady by changing the supply of money in the right direction at the right time' (p. 1).

"In other words, the Board, in a public statement, denies the quantitative theory of money; and denies that it is possible to either establish or to maintain a dollar of uniform, permanent, debt-paying, purchasing power.

"The Board also denies what has already been accomplished by other leading nations and substantially contradicts the testimony of the Chairman of the Board heretofore given by him on various occasions.

"Let us consider what he said on February 24, 1933, before the Committee on Finance of the Senate, under Chairman Reed Smoot, of Utah:

"'* * * it must be recognized that the break-down of our present economic system is due to the failure of our political and financial leadership to intelligently deal with the money problem. In the real world there is no cause nor reason for the unemployment with its resultant destitution and suffering of fully one-third of our entire population. We have all and more of the material wealth which we had at the peak of our prosperity in the year 1929. Our people need and want everything which our abundant facilities and resources are able to provide for them. The problem of production has been solved, and we need no further capital accumulation for the present, which could only be utilized in further increasing our productive facilities or extending further foreign credits. We have a complete economic plant able to supply a superabundance of not only all of the necessities of our people, but the comforts and luxuries as well. Our problem, then, becomes one purely of distribution. This can only be brought about by providing purchasing power sufficiently adequate to enable the people to obtain the consumption of goods which we, as a nation, are able to produce. The economic system can serve no other purpose and expect to survive.

"'If our problem is, then, the result of the failure of our money system to properly function, which today is generally recognized, we then must turn to the consideration of the necessary corrective measures to be brought about in that field' (p. 705).

"'The Government controls the gold reserve, the power to issue money and credit, thus largely regulating the price structure' (p. 707).

"Certainly Mr. Eccles was correct in this statement, but it is substantially in contradiction of the present position of the Board. He says now that it cannot be done; that relief cannot be given by the Government, nor by the Federal Reserve System as an agency of the Government. He has conceded many times that the Government can expand and contract money and that no other power has the legal authority under the Constitution. He said as much in his appearance before the Banking and Currency Committee of the House when the Banking Act of 1935 was under consideration. He said:

"'Open-market operations are the most important single instrument of control over the volume and the cost of credit in this country. When I say "credit" in this connection I mean money, because by far the largest part of money in use by the people of this country is in the form of bank credit, or bank deposits. When the Federal Reserve banks buy bills or securities in the open market, they increase the volume of the people's money and lower its cost; and when they sell in the open market, they decrease the volume of money and increase its cost. Authority over these operations, which affect the welfare of the people as a whole, must be vested in a body representing the national interest' (p. 181).

"The Federal Reserve Board was given the power over open-market operations through which it could expand or contract the money supply, it if chose to do so.

"It did choose to do this even when its powers were less than under the Banking Act of 1935. On May 18, 1920, in a secret meeting with the class A directors, representing exclusively the banks, and ignoring class B directors, representing industry, commerce, and agriculture, and class C directors, representing the Government, the Board agreed upon a drastic contraction of credit and currency and used its powers over the member banks to put this policy into effect. It declared various important articles of industry nonessential and undeserving of credit, such as, for instance, automobiles. As the result of such drastic action by the Board, the price level fell from 167 in May 1920 to 93 in June 1921. The purchasing power of money rose from 60 to 107.

"By the exercise of its powers to extend credit, and to permit credit to be expanded, in the security exchanges, the price of securities rose necessarily beyond the power of the securities to pay dividends on the purchase price. The result of this mismanagement was a violent reaction beginning October 23, 1929, which caused the average of preferred and common stocks listed on the New York Stock Exchange to fall from $81.73 a share to $11.89 a share. This caused universal bankruptcy and caused the dollar to rise from an index of 105 in 1929 to 167 by February 1933.

"The powers through which it accomplished this are abundantly set forth in the letter of the Federal Reserve Board of May 25, 1920. An abstract of these powers was made by the Committee on Agriculture of the Senate as follows:

"'1. Discount rates should be raised.

"'2. Member banks should call loans on agricultural products, thus forcing the sale of such products.

"'3. Member-bank credits should be restricted.

"'4. Existing loans should be liquidated.

"'5. Expansion of loans should be checked.

"'6. That member banks should use their power to limit the volume and character of loans.

"'7. The Federal Reserve banks should establish normal discount or credit lines for each member bank and should impose graduated discount rates on loans in excess of the normal line.

"'8. Served notice that the Federal Reserve banks have power to refuse to discount any form or class of paper.

"'9. Suggested notice to the public that the Federal Reserve banks have the power to control and regulate credit.

"'10. Served notice to the public that they must economize, must limit demands for banking credit, and must begin to pay existing debts.

"'11. Suggested that the member banks educate and impress the country with notice of the Federal Reserve's announced policy' (S. Rept. 1328, 75th Cong., 3d sess.).

"Chairman Eccles himself recognizes the powers of the Federal Reserve System, for he said in his memorandum to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate when considering S. 1990, Seventy-fifth Congress, first session: 'The Federal Reserve System can regulate within limits the supply of money * * *' (p. 12).

"But he insisted that there were other factors that might influence prices, which of course has a minor element of truth in it. But the Federal Reserve System is not responsible for the remedies for these conditions. The effect of unfair practices in commerce and the effect of monopolies must be left to regulation through other branches of the Government for which the Federal Reserve System is not responsible.

"There can be no reasonable doubt whatever that the Federal Reserve System can do exactly what the honorable chairman himself has testified to in the hearings on the Banking Act of 1935, when he said:

"'Mr. HANCOCK. In effect, Governor, does not this bill undertake to bring back home the sovereign power vested in the Congress to coin money and to regulate the value of it?

"'Mr. ECCLES. Well, it brings to the Federal Reserve Board the power, and, of course——

"'Mr. HANCOCK. And through that Board back to Congress?

"'Mr. ECCLES. That is right * * *' (p. 207).

"'Mr. CROSS. Governor, you agree with the proposition that it is the duty of Congress to regulate the value of money, don't you; that is, Congress, acting through its agency which it sets up, shall do it? Of course, Congress itself does not do it.

"'Governor ECCLES. I think that is a sovereign power given to Congress.

"'Mr. CROSS. In the Constitution.

"'Governor ECCLES. In the Constitution' (p. 233).

"But now when bills are pending in the Senate and House proposing to exercise the constitutional power, we find the Board of Governors, under the leadership of the chairman, attempting to defeat, through this release to the public press, the reasonable efforts of Senators and Members of Congress to regulate the value of money.

"It is perfectly obvious to students of monetary science where the trouble lies with Chairman Eccles. He has made several serious errors: (1) That the banks are full of money. (2) That the price level is not controlled by the volume of money; which is a denial of the quantitative theory. (3) That stability of prices is not so important as economic stability in industry, commerce, and agriculture. Let us examine these statements.

"THE BANKS ARE FULL OF MONEY

"The argument submitted by the Board is that in 1929 there were $23,000,000,000 of demand bank deposits and the price level was 95, while in 1938 the demand bank deposits were $26,000,000,000 and the price level only 77, and therefore the volume of the demand deposits did not regulate or greatly influence the price level.

"Let us correct the figures. On June 30, 1929, the demand deposits were 22.4 billion dollars for corporations and individuals, excluding interbank deposits and governmental deposits.

"On June 30, 1929, they were 22.8 billion dollars, excluding governmental deposits and interbank deposits, the governmental deposits amounting to over 3.2 billion dollars.

"In 1929 the amount of demand deposits not in circulation was comparatively small, inactive accounts being represented by about $10,000,000,000 of time deposits, of which the Federal Reserve Board has taken no notice. During this year the actual use of these 22.4 billion dollars of demand deposits was $1,227,000,000,000. But in 1938, over half of the demand deposits were hoarded and not in circulation. The total amount of checks drawn against the demand deposits which were in circulation amounted to $530,000,000,000, less than half of the money employed in 1929, although we had had an increase in population of approximately 10,000,000 people.

"The fatal defect in the argument of the Board is that it failed to perceive that demand deposits in hoarding, which are unemployed and not used to pay wages and salaries and carry inventories, but held for future investment cannot be classified as money in circulation. Such demand deposits have no more effect upon the transaction of business, upon the employment of labor, and the production of goods than if they were gold bars hoarded in the vaults of the United States Government, where we have $15,000,000,000 of idle gold unemployed.

"Let it be remembered that money is 'anything employed in conventional use as a medium of exchange and measure of value.' When currency or demand deposits are not employed as medium of exchange, but are buried by the miser in the ground or hoarded by those who merchandise in money, it is not money and does not qualify when considering the quantitative theory of money.

"It is for this reason that Mr. Eccles denies the quantitative theory of money. It is because his mind has not grasped the true meaning of money as employed in the quantitative theory. The quantitative theory deals with money in circulation, not with money hoarded, locked up in vaults and unemployed. Such hoards may be converted into money but they do not comprise money in the quantitative theory.

"Therefore, to say that the banks are full of money is grossly misleading.

"No one knows the substantial facts of the concentration of our money supply in the financial centers better than does the chairman, because in his testimony of February 24, 1933, before the Senate Committee on Finance, he said:

"'I repeat there is plenty of money today to bring about a restoration of prices, but the chief trouble is that it is in the wrong place; it is concentrated in the larger financial centers of the country, the creditor sections, leaving a great portion of the back country, or the debtor sections, drained dry and making it appear that there is a great shortage of money and that it is, therefore, necessary for the Government to print more (p. 711).

"'The maladjustment referred to must be corrected before there can be the necessary velocity of money. I see no way of correcting this situation except through Government action' (p. 712).

"The chairman knows that the concentration of unemployed money in the cities gives the Government an extremely low rate of interest on its bonds; but what he does not appear to know is that the scarcity of money throughout the country can be easily corrected by the powers of the Government without adding to the debt of the United States. He has forgotten the method employed by the Bank of England for over 90 years, to wit, the immediate expansion of the money supply by the purchase of sound bankable assets, thus converting nonliquid securities into liquid money and correcting the effects of hoarding and correcting the fear which induces hoarding, and inviting those who hoard to invest their money by creating a rising market through the expansion of the money supply.

"The Bank of England did this in 1847, 1857, 1866, and 1890.

"At present, and for 6 years, the banks of Great Britain, under the direction in policy of the British Government through the Chancelor of the Exchequer, have created the money supply required to restore employment. Under this management the businessmen of Great Britain have for 6 years enjoyed an unbroken interest rate of 2 percent and a comparatively stable price level.

"THE PRICE LEVEL IS NOT CONTROLLED BY THE VOLUME OF MONEY

"This blunder resulted in a most serious injury to the American people in 1937, because, when a monopoly raised the price of copper from 9 cents to 17 cents a pound and other monopoly prices were engineered, an attempt was made by the Federal Reserve System to control monopoly prices by contracting the money supply upon which the country had been led to depend through deficit spending and the issuance of bonds. The Federal Reserve System proposed to balance the Budget, stop expenditures, and prevent monopoly prices without the alternative of expanding the money supply through the creative powers of the Government and the open-market operations. Certainly they stopped monopoly prices. Copper fell promptly to the bottom. Prices of all kinds were reduced with the result of ruin to the country through a third depression in 16 years created by the mismanagement of the Federal Reserve System. What took place demonstrates that the price level was controlled by the volume of money. Let us remember, however, that by volume of money Mr. Eccles erroneously means demand deposits not in circulation as well as demand deposits in circulation. He blends together demand deposits having zero velocity and demand deposits having a turn-over of 50 times per annum. When the demand deposits in circulation are kept clearly in sight and the volume of checks drawn against such demand deposits is compared one year with another, it will be found that the so-called price level follows the contraction of the check money of the country based upon demand deposits in circulation.

"It is quite clear that the management of the Federal Reserve System does not understand that the all-commodity index, frequently called the price level, is merely a mathematical basis upon which to determine the index of the purchasing power of money, comparing one year with another. In 1926, when President Coolidge established the standard of 100 for the index of the purchasing power of money, it was done in the following manner: First, quantities of 784 commodities were taken as a basis, each quantity being established on the mean average of the years 1923–25 for each commodity. This fixed quantity of each commodity was then multiplied by the average weekly wholesale primary market price of each commodity. The result in dollars was set down, and the total value of the 784 commodities was added up. It made a total of $54,700,000,000. This was set down as the average purchasing power of money in terms of fixed quantities of 784 commodities for the year 1926. The dollar index was, therefore, put at 100 and the all-commodity index was put at 100.

"In 1938, when the same mathematical calculations were made, the total price paid for the 784 commodities amounted to 77 percent of the 54.7 billion dollars. And the dollar index, being in inverse ratio to the all-commodity index, was 130. In other words, the index of the purchasing power of the dollar had increased in the wholesale commodity markets in terms of the necessities of life 30 percent in value, thus forcing the debtors to actually pay the creditors 30 percent more in value than they had agreed to pay in principal and interest.

"When the Board speaks about the price level, it is in effect necessarily speaking of the dollar index, or the purchasing power of money and the debt-paying power of money. Certainly this important fact has escaped its attention. In its release of March 13, 1939, it said:

"'* * * (1) prices cannot be controlled by changes in the amount and cost of money; (2) the Board's control of the amount of money is not complete and cannot be made complete' (p. 1).

"'The Board believes that an order by Congress to the Board or to any other agency of Congress to bring about and maintain a given average of prices would not assist but would hinder efforts to stabilize business conditions' (p. 9).

"The Board thus asserts that a stable dollar of uniform, debt-paying, purchasing power would do more harm than good. This attitude is taken because the Board does not understand that a stable price level is a stable dollar, upon which necessarily the stability of the entire economic system depends.

"The point is that the Board does not realize that to restore the so-called price level to 100 would be restoring the dollar index to 100 from 130. It treats the price level as if it were something quite different from the dollar index, of which it is the mathematical base. It does not treat the price level as a unit. It treats it as a conglomerate and talks about the disequilibrium of prices and about some prices going up rapidly and others going down rapidly, which, while true, is entirely misleading because we are speaking of a price level which means a unit of 54.7 billion dollars for a fixed volume of commodities.

"STABILITY OF PRICES IS NOT SO IMPORTANT AS ECONOMIC STABILITY IN INDUSTRY, COMMERCE, AND AGRICULTURE

"The argument that the stability of prices is not so important as the stability of economic conditions is a final evidence of the misconception of the Board of what the price level is.

"The price level is the basis upon which the purchasing, debt-paying power of the dollar is founded; and, therefore, it should be perfectly obvious that it is impossible to have a stable economic condition in any field when the dollar has its debt-paying, purchasing power violently changed by the contraction of its supply through fear or hope of profit.

"Finally, it might be pointed out that this public release of the Board of Governors ignores established principles of modern monetary science demonstrated by nearly all the countries of the world, including our own. It ignores the party declarations of the Democratic, Republican, Progressive, and Farmer-Labor Parties.

"It ignores the act of the House of Representatives of May 2, 1932, when that body passed the Goldsborough bill to restore the purchasing power of the dollar to the predepression level and maintain it.

"The Board ignores the action of Congress in the Thomas amendment which authorized an expansion of $6,000,000,000 for the purpose of correcting the contraction which had taken place. It has defeated the execution of that authority and is now justifying it in a release to the public press.

"The Board ignores also the opinions expressed by the leaders of the organized farm groups of the United States (the National Grange, the National Farmers Union, the National Cooperative Council, and the American Farm Bureau Federation) and the testimony they have given.

"It ignores the opinions of a great number of professors of political economy who have studied modern monetary science and expressed the opinion that the Congress of the United States should regulate the value of money and exclusively create it through governmental action.

"It ignores the famous cable of President Roosevelt to the London Economic Conference.

"Let it be remembered that when President Roosevelt came in 6 years ago the outstanding currency on March 15, 1933, was 7.2 billion dollars; then it was contracted by the Federal Reserve System and only expanded by the purchase of silver certificates so as to now reach a maximum of 6.7 billion dollars. During the first year of Roosevelt's administration the Federal Reserve banks contracted the currency nearly $2,000,000,000. The outstanding credits of the Federal Reserve banks on March 15, 1933, were 3.5 billion dollars, which were contracted the first year following by about a billion dollars. At present they are $1,000,000,000 less than they were when Roosevelt came in.

"Under the influence and direction of the Federal Reserve System, 16,000 banks have failed in 16 years through mismanagement of the system. The loss in production in the last 10 years has reached nearly $200,000,000,000 in products and services which might have been enjoyed under a wiser management, leaving the country free from debt or relief charges. These facts appear in the records of the Board of Governors.

"The Federal Reserve System with its enormous power, with its large bureau of research, with every opportunity in the world to know the facts, and with every opportunity to digest the facts, up to this time has not given the country relief nor has it pointed out to Congress any means by which it can be affirmatively done. The Board seems to be content with setting itself firmly as an obstacle to the regulation of the value of money by Congress.

"It seems necessary, therefore, that Congress must exercise its power, through a legislative mandate, to instruct the Board and the Federal Reserve banks and to give any additional powers necessary to achieve the restoration of maximum production and employment through monetary means. If there be obstacles in the way, Congress should remove them at once.

"In stating the importance of a legislative mandate I do not concede that the Board and the Reserve banks have not the power immediately to end this depression. It could be done by the Board instructing the Reserve banks to buy bonds and notes of the United States on account of the United States at the rate of $50,000,000 a day until such nonliquid securities converted into liquid money should correct the deficit of liquid money produced by the hoarding of demand deposits, and until those who are hoarding demand deposits for fear or for profit or for security would either restore such money to circulation or until the new money thus created should make the hoarding harmless to the general public, now suffering from pernicious monetary anemia.

"It should be conceded that the Federal Reserve System cannot in itself be held responsible for punitive or obstructive taxes, or for the executive management of money appropriated in public relief and agricultural relief, or for the policies of the Departments of the Treasury, Commerce, and Agriculture. The insistence of the Board of Governors that the proper management of these Departments is a necessary part of the correct management of our economic system is conceded, but the Federal Reserve System is not held responsible for any other department except its own and should confine itself to perfecting its own opportunities of giving the country relief.

"Students of monetary science know that nearly all of our economic dislocations, the distress of agriculture, of home owners, of the railroads, and of the small-business man, is due directly and immediately to the unwise management of the Federal Reserve System. When Congress reassumes its powers of directing the powers of the Federal Reserve System through a legislative mandate, the stability of our economic conditions will be restored in so great a measure that the complaints of the Board of Governors as to other departments of the Government will be comparatively easy to correct.

"The manner in which the stability of our economic life has been impaired by the mismanagement of the Federal Reserve System and the remedies therefor, with the statistical evidence upon which they are based, has been clearly set forth in Senate Document 23 of the Seventy-sixth Congress, first session. In this document will be found a discussion of the principles of modern monetary science in relation to our national economy and banking structure. The statistics are furnished by the Board of Governors.

"The members of the Board of Governors should not be bankers. This does not reflect in any way on the patriotism or intelligence of bankers. An Irish jury favors home rule, and a banker by his lifelong training favors the control of the expansion and contraction of money by the banks. In their subconscious mind they have firmly set an unconquerable aversion to the idea of a political body like Congress exercising the power to control, create, and regulate the value of money. For many years they have filled the public press with the danger of Congress wrecking the country by unwise tinkering with the currency. Nearly all bankers agree that Congress should not be allowed to tinker with the currency. The bankers have frequently defeated a Member of Congress who favored governmental control by the power of the bankers' local influence. The bankers frequently have intimidated Congress through their powerful influence.

"Mr. Eccles, in his testimony of February 24, 1933, said:

"'I happen to be * * * president of First Security Corporation, owning and operating 26 banks and 1 trust company * * * Total resources of approximately $50,000,000' (p. 704).

"And said:

"'I am a capitalist'" (p. 730).

"He truly described himself as a generous, intelligent capitalist who did not believe in refusing deficit spending to prevent starvation or distress to one-third of our Nation. He was so generous in his attitude toward the distressed parts of the country that he became recognized as a New Dealer in the matter of relief.

"When we were improving our conditions by the processes of time in early 1937, he collaborated with Mr. Morgenthau in advocating contraction through the immediate balancing of the Budget and the cessation of deficit financing without offering any other alternative whatever to present reaction.

"Let us concede his sincerity, but let us also remember that by his training and habit of thought and fixed convictions that he is not qualified to be a safe monetary guide for the Roosevelt administration, or for the ending of unemployment, or for the termination of the distress which compels deficit spending because of humane considerations.

"A wise management of the Federal Reserve System would restore employment to a maximum, would end any need for deficit spending, and would not raise the issue of a $45,000,000,000 maximum debt, but would immediately begin to cut the debt down and justify an immediate lowering of the tax rates by increasing the income of corporations and individuals who pay taxes.

"When the leaders lack vision the people perish."

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I wish to speak briefly with reference to the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER]. When we consider the presentation of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS], in which he very carefully attempted to analyze the figures and the results which would be obtained by the appropriation of $100,000,000 or the appropriation of $150,000,000, I think we must conclude that there is a very serious question in everybody's mind as to the exact result which will be attained.

We know that more than 800,000 persons are certified as being eligible for W. P. A., and in need of W. P. A. Even if $150,000,000 were appropriated, a very large number of them would not have an opportunity to obtain W. P. A. employment. So, regardless of the figure, we find a situation in which a large number of persons will not have an opportunity to work on W. P. A.

I do not think anyone on the other side will seriously argue that the addition of $50,000,000 to the appropriation would seriously affect the credit of the United States. I do not think anyone will seriously argue that $50,000,000 in itself is of very great importance so far as the total financial program of the Government is concerned. We know that a certain number of persons—I do not try to estimate the number—will receive employment if the $50,000,000 is added and will not receive it if we appropriate only $100,000,000. A certain number of thousands of persons in this country have been declared by the regularly constituted agencies to be eligible for relief, to be eligible for W. P. A.; and they will obtain employment if we appropriate $150,000,000. They will not obtain employment if we appropriate only $100,000,000.

What, then, is the argument behind the reduction of $50,000,000 under the amount recommended by the President? I know that many Members of this body and many persons in this country have had the feeling that if the Government would stop spending money and balance the Budget, or that if we could do this, or do that, then private industry would take up all the slack of unemployment and our problems would be solved. We were told that in 1937, and we tried to make severe reductions in expenditures. After that we went into a tailspin to a greater degree than we have done at any time. The actual decline in business activities in the fall of 1937 and the spring of 1938 was even more rapid than it was in the fall of 1929.

We were told that if the undistributed-profits tax could be repealed, business would receive a stimulus. We practically repealed the undistributed-profits tax, but business did not obtain any stimulus from that action.

We were told that if Mr. Harry Hopkins would make a speech in Iowa somewhere and let business know that the administration wanted to be friendly with industry, that would help. Still business indices have gone down, and there has been no improvement.

It will be remembered that when the question came up in the month of January, there was a very decided feeling upon the part of many Members of this body, and the argument was made, that if a demonstration could be made to business that Congress had once again taken control of Federal funds, there would be a rapid increase in business, and that business would rapidly recover.

I do not contend, as the Senator from New Mexico seemed to infer that I contended the other day, that the fact that the $150,000,000 was deducted from the $875,000,000, caused business not to increase, as was anticipated in January. At that time I argued rather at length, and I am sure very dully, because I attempted to present the question purely from the standpoint of the economic studies which had been made, that we could not expect during this spring the increase in business which was predicted by those who advocated the reduction of $150,000,000. We have not had such an increase. Business has not increased.

I wish to read very briefly from a statement in yesterday morning's newspaper by a man who certainly cannot be accused of being an ardent advocate of the administration, a man who has some reputation as an economist. I refer to Roger Babson. He says:

> Does the failure of business to rise since January mean that the encouraging predictions I made for the entire year should be revised downward? Definitely not. The improvement has simply been postponed by one war scare after another. Three out of every four investors, bankers, businessmen, and merchants whom I see say, "I'm not doing anything until I see what Hitler does next." Those who seem least worried of all are Mr. and Mrs. John Q. Consumer. They keep right on with their retail shopping despite war hysteria. They are showing more sense than most "businessmen."
> RETAIL TRADE BETTER
> We should be thankful that they are. By continuing to buy they force stores to reorder merchandise, force manufacturers to buy raw materials, and force workers to keep employed. If they were as chicken-hearted as those who are scared stiff by sensational radio and news dispatches, trade would be as low as a year ago. As it is, retail sales are relatively good. Prices are well below last Easter season, yet profit margins in many lines are better than they were even in 1937. Those businesses that are lagging are being held back by fear, and fear alone.

It is not fear of government; and the fact that the Government itself made available through appropriations provided by Congress the money which was used by Mr. and Mrs. John Q. Consumer has made it possible for our retail business to sustain itself during this year.

I am not one who agrees with the theory that we can permanently spend ourselves into prosperity. I know that the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] will probably be surprised when I say that I am not one who adopts the views of the gentleman with whom the Senator from Virginia argues so frequently, Mr. Eccles, on the question of spending ourselves into prosperity. However, we are confronted with a situation——

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, before the Senator passes from the subject of fear, I wonder if he has seen any figures as to the diminution in the value of securities on the stock exchange growing out of the fear of war in Europe in the last few days?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I have seen the figures. There was a very sharp decline, as I remember, from two to six dollars last week, although yesterday there was a rise of from one to four dollars, as I remember reading the figures.

Mr. PEPPER. The total loss was several billion dollars in the last few days.

Mr. HUGHES. There was a fall in the price of shares of stock of from two to three dollars a day.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, we are faced with a situation now, and we must recognize that within the next few months we are probably going to see the most serious and dangerous condition, so far as business is concerned, that we have seen in this country for many years.

I wish to present the basis of that statement. It is an argument made not by any New Dealer, not by anybody who supports the administration, but in the United States News by Mr. David Lawrence. I wish to read very briefly from a statement in the last issue of the United States News.

> "All that business needs to recover is a chance."
> "If only Government will get out of the way business will recover."
>
> "Recovery has followed every other depression; it will follow this one if the Government will stop interfering."
> "If the Government will balance its Budget and will stop pampering workers and will let commodity markets go free, there will be recovery."
>
> Those ideas, the highest officials in Washington readily admit, are strongly held today by businessmen and by a growing proportion of the people of the Nation.
> That raises the question:
> Has anything happened in the world to make today's recovery problem different than the recovery problem of past periods? In a word: Has anything fundamental happened to interfere with the once automatic controls of laissez-faire capitalism?

This is written not in any Daily Worker, but in the United States News, the editor of which is Mr. David Lawrence.

> Vital importance attaches to this question right now when it appears that one more incipient recovery movement is at a critical stage.
> Search for an answer to the question calls for an understanding of the controls of the economic system. All economists are agreed that the operation of a free market, where forces of supply and demand determine price, is the controlling feature of the capitalistic system. Stable money is a vital factor in the operation of that system. Its effective functioning took place under a world gold standard, with Great Britain as a banker, with the banker permitting free trade in his market and with backward nations of the world accepting surplus capital and surplus goods for development.
> At this stage, the Government's appraisers of the economy as it functions at home and abroad are pointing to break-downs readily apparent in the system of controls that formerly operated to produce recovery after past depressions.
> And what do they show?

Then he proceeds to set forth what they show. I am not going to take the time to read anything except the headlines of some of the various factors which he points out.

A look abroad.

Market break-down: The entire, once-controlling, world-market system of exchange is in a state of collapse.

* * * * * * *

Monetary system of world in collapse.

Currency break-down: The money system that in the past permitted the operation of the free world market now is gone.

* * * * * * *

War requirements now control trade.

Trade break-down: War requirements, not price—or quality or ability to produce—more and more is controlling world trade.

* * * * * * *

Surpluses of capital find no investment.

Investment contraction: Always in the past, surplus capital has found an outlet for investment in the upbuilding of backward nations or in the financing of industrial expansion in nations that lack sufficient capital.

* * * * * * *

"Controls" extinguish free world markets.

War: In the world today, war, and the threat of war, is dominating trade.

* * * * * * *

A survey at home.

Slowing population growth: The recovery that came from the depression of 1920–21 came with the greatest population increase in the Nation's history. This increase amounted to 16,000,000 in a decade. The decade of the 1930's has seen that increase slow by 50 percent, with barely 8,000,000 being added.

I point out just a few of the number of things which David Lawrence, or his newspaper, says are causing the conditions which exist in this country today.

In January when we had a relief appropriation bill before us the President asked for $875,000,000. The Appropriations Committee and the Congress decided to reduce that by $150,000,000. They extended to the President an invitation—we extended it in the language of the act which we passed—if he thought an emergency existed to come back and ask for more. Criticism is made of him that he came back too soon; he came back in 5 days or a week or whatever the period was, but the President at that time foresaw precisely what was going to happen during the period of a few months and appreciated the fact that it was necessary, if we were to have the use of W. P. A. funds to hold up—I do not say stimulate, but "to hold up"—business in this country that work upon the appropriation bill be started as quickly as possible.

We have appropriated much money this year for armaments. I am not critical about that at all; I am not in position to be critical, for I have voted for them and I have voted for them without opposition. There have been many here who have an entirely different attitude toward the question of appropriating billions of dollars for armaments, to build battleships, and things of that kind; and the question of appropriating money in order to provide employment for those of our country who need work, and who, because of an economic condition which they did not create, cannot find work. We are told that the reason for the difference of attitude upon the two questions is that in the one case it is a question of a local situation while in the other it is a question of defense. I think that adequate relief is a question of defense. It is a question of defense of our American system of government, a question of whether or not our Government shall recognize and carry forward its responsibility to the people of this country and not force them into such a situation that they may be willing to accept the teachings and the doctrines of those who believe that we should embrace communism or fascism or nazi-ism.

Last Sunday, when he made his first really important utterance, there was delivered from Rome, by the Pope, a speech upon the question of peace. From the context of his entire discussion there can be no doubt that he had in mind the situation which has existed and is existing in the countries of the world with reference to the danger of propaganda from those who would destroy democratic institutions and substitute dictatorial institutions. He said:

Who can fail to see that in this way enormous masses are being formed whom impoverishment and misery—so much more exasperating because in strident contrast with the luxury and excessive comforts of those privileged ones who do not feel the duty of helping suffering—render easy prey to deceptive mirages insidiously proposed by shrewd propagandists of fatal theories?

That statement by the Pope in Rome on last Sunday directly describes the situation in this country. The Members of this body who will say, with an air of complete indifference, "I am perfectly willing to vote $100,000,000 or $200,000,000 for a battleship; I am willing to vote billions for a program of national defense, because that is national defense," and who are not willing to vote for appropriations of this kind, do not appreciate where the real possibilities of attack upon our American Government lie.

For that reason, since there can be no question that the general problem of our fiscal situation cannot be affected by appropriating the additional $50,000,000, and since there can be no question that several thousand persons who need employment will receive employment if that amount is appropriated, I intend to vote for the amendment of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. AUSTIN obtained the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Vermont yield to me?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. When the Senate adjourned on Saturday we had an understanding that we would vote at 2:30 o'clock on yesterday on the amendment of the Senator from Florida, and all amendments thereto. That agreement lapsed; and when we met today I did not desire to renew it, because I felt that the whole day might be devoted to the discussion.

I am very anxious that we shall conclude the consideration of this measure today. We cannot hold a legislative session tomorrow; and if the consideration of the joint resolution is not concluded today it will have to go over until Thursday. It is very important that the measure pass at the earliest possible moment, because much depends upon it. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that at not later than 5 o'clock today the Senate proceed to vote on the pending amendment and all amendments thereto.

Mr. BILBO. I object.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that at an hour not later than 5:30 o'clock today the Senate proceed to vote on the pending amendment and all amendments thereto.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold that request for a moment?

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say to the Senator from Florida that I think if we can conclude the consideration of the joint resolution today, we can afford to remain a little later than our usual adjourning time in order not to carry the measure over until Thursday. I have no desire to cut off anybody from debate; but if we had met yesterday under normal conditions there would have been only two hours and a half of debate to be equally divided, and we have had pretty liberal debate today, all of which during the whole discussion, with the exception of one speech today by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS], has been by the proponents of the amendment. Certainly nobody can contend that the proponents of the amendment have in any way been unfairly dealt with as to the time of debate. I have no desire now to cut them off; but I am sure the Senator will appreciate the desirability of having this matter disposed of. I have no objection to withholding the request for a brief period; but if we withhold it much longer it will be 5 o'clock, and then it will be practically impossible to get an agreement to vote today.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, the reason why I asked the Senator to withhold his request at this time was because all of us have a desire to vote today on this measure. There is no disposition on the part of the proponents of the amendment to carry the vote over beyond today. I do not know how long the Senator from Vermont proposes to address the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from Vermont, as I understand, is not going to speak on the joint resolution or the amendment, but is going to call attention to the fact that this is the seventy-seventh anniversary of the birth of the Chief Justice of the United States, and that, I suppose, will not take much time. So far as I am concerned, I am willing to stay here until 6 o'clock, and I myself think it would be better for us to do it rather than to put the joint resolution over to next Thursday, and come back under similar conditions and take all day Thursday, as we have taken all day today, in discussing the measure.

Mr. PEPPER. I am in hearty accord with the Senator. I wish to say, however, that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] proposes to make some remarks, and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO] wishes to make some brief remarks, as does the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY]. All of us are looking forward to the completion of consideration of the joint resolution today.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the Senator agree now to conclude the consideration of the pending amendment, and all amendments thereto, at an hour not later than 6 o'clock?

Mr. PEPPER. I will.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I modify my request, that at an hour not later than 6 o'clock today the Senate proceed to vote on the pending amendment and all amendments thereto.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Vermont yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I suggest to the Senator from Kentucky that in connection with his plan he bear in mind the fact that I have had a substitute pending for several days, and that after the consideration of the Pepper amendment is concluded it will be necessary to give at least a reasonable hearing to the substitute. If the consideration of the pending amendment is not concluded until 6 o'clock, I am wondering if the Senator thinks he could still hold the Senate to conclude the matter afterward, or whether he would not better accommodate the Senate and his own program if we had an early agreement to vote on Thursday upon the pending amendment, so that the matter then could take its regular course.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, if the joint resolution has to go over until Thursday, it does not matter whether we vote at 2 o'clock or at 5 o'clock. If it has to go over until Thursday, I see no virtue in trying to vote early on that day. What I am hoping to do is to conclude the consideration of the joint resolution today. I am sure the Senator from Michigan could present his substitute amendment today and I can guarantee him that it will receive reasonable consideration, though I hope it will be brief consideration.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am simply notifying the Senator of what lies ahead.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am willing to stay beyond 6 o'clock if we can conclude the consideration of the joint resolution today.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator from Vermont yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have propounded a unanimous-consent request.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, my desire is to be helpful in securing a vote; but I believe the Senator from Kentucky at this juncture would make no progress in attempting to set a particular hour for a vote. In view of the substitute, let me suggest that the Senator ask unanimous consent that all speeches from this time on be limited, say, to 15 or 20 minutes, and that no Senator shall speak more than once, and that the Senate shall remain in session until a vote is taken.

I can well understand that if we set the time to vote at 6 o'clock, it might shut off any argument on the substitute, and I do not even know what the substitute is. Many Senators object to setting a time to vote who would not object to a limit of time on speeches; and I know that when Senators wish to do so they easily compress into 15 minutes all that may be said on any subject. Senators rarely use that power, but I am proud to say that it is within the literary qualifications of every Senator here to say in 15 minutes all that he wishes to say upon any subject. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I am not going to dispute the profound asseveration of the able and distinguished and always courteous, if not always consistent, Senator from Arizona. I will say frankly that I should have no objection to a limitation of debate, but I should not be frank if I did not also say that I hope to make a few remarks on the amendment before the vote is taken.

Mr. ASHURST. I think it is the Senator's duty to do so.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think I am entitled to do so, because I am going to vote against the amendment, and I think I ought to be allowed to express not only my view but the view of those who think as I do on the subject. I do not know whether or not I can do that in 10 or 15 minutes. Probably I could if I would; but I may not have the power of intellectual and linguistic concentration which is so ably possessed by my colleague and friend from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator from Vermont yield to me for a moment?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. I was reserving my judgment on the amendment until I could hear the Senator from Kentucky. The Senator says he desires to speak on the amendment. I go further, and say that, in my opinion, it is his duty to speak on the amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, the Senator's remarks now make it obligatory upon me to speak upon the subject. If the Senate is willing to stay here until we can vote, without fixing a time for a vote, I am perfectly willing to stay here tonight until we can vote; but I have no way of taking a census of the Senate on the subject.

I withdraw the request for the moment, because the Senator from Vermont desires to speak on another subject.

SEVENTY-SEVENTH ANNIVERSARY OF BIRTH OF CHIEF JUSTICE HUGHES

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Vermont yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. GILLETTE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield for that purpose?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from Iowa that I appreciate the mark of respect to the Chief Justice which is implied in the suggestion of the absence of a quorum, to which I assented a short time ago when the Senator from Iowa and I were conversing; but I suggest to him that since that time many Senators have entered the Chamber, and we now have a pretty full attendance. In the interest of expedition, is not the Senator willing to withdraw his suggestion of the absence of a quorum?

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, in view of the statement of the Senator from Vermont, I gladly withdraw the suggestion of the absence of a quorum.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, Charles Evans Hughes, Chief Justice of the United States, enjoys the felicitations and good wishes of the American people on this his seventy-seventh birthday.

His remarkably constructive service to humanity is permanently established in international law and American jurisprudence, by him expounded and applied during his distinguished term as Secretary of State and as the eleventh Chief Justice.

The height and depth and wide horizons of his sentiments and his thoughts have comprehended the significance of the venerable voice of history and the meaning of the present changing scene.

The variety and scope of his experience as college professor, practicing lawyer, prosecutor, special ambassador to many international conferences, author, Governor of New York, candidate for President, Secretary of State, and Chief Justice have made him a powerful champion of that constitutionalism which, to use his own eloquent words, keeps "democratic government from destroying itself by the excesses of its own power."

Great as is the dignity of the Chief Justice, the simplicity, affability, and friendliness of Charles Evans Hughes the man impress all who meet him.

Long life, service, and happiness to Charles Evans Hughes, our beloved Chief Justice!

ADDITIONAL APPROPRIATION FOR WORK RELIEF AND RELIEF

The Senate resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 246) making a further additional appropriation for work relief and relief for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I wish to take merely a moment to read into the RECORD several letters which I have received recently bearing upon the W. P. A. appropriation. First is a letter from Millard W. Rice, legislative representative of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, as follows:

I have just received a telegram from Mr. Edward Dunne, commander, Brooklyn Council, Kings County, of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, Brooklyn, N. Y., dated April 6, 1939, stating as follows:

"We vigorously protest the dismissal of veterans from W. P. A. employment. This we understand is due to lack of appropriation for W. P. A. continuance. Request Administrator Harrington and our Federal legislators be notified of this condition through you. Independent veteran groups springing up rapidly to take similar action."

It would appear that the provisions of Public Resolution No. 122, approved June 21, 1938, and of Public Resolution No. 1, approved February 4, 1939, specifically providing that preference of W. P. A. employment shall be extended to war, campaign, and expedition veterans who are in need thereof, are being violated, if it is true that veterans are being discontinued from W. P. A. employment, allegedly because of lack of appropriations to permit the W. P. A. to furnish employment to all war veterans and American citizens in need thereof.

Moreover, if any such policy is actually going into effect in New York City and elsewhere, then it would appear that the policy enunciated in your letter to me under date of March 9, 1939, is not adhered to. In such letter you stated as follows:

"In accordance with the provisions of section 11 of the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938, as amended, preference in employment on projects of this Administration is extended to veterans who are in need, as evidenced by certification from the certifying agency, provided the veterans are American citizens and are qualified to perform the duties required.

"In effecting reductions in employment, this Administration takes into consideration the statutory provisions of the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938, as amended, providing that from among those certified as in need of relief, preference in continuation of employment on the Works Program shall be given to veterans of the World War and veterans of the Spanish-American War who are citizens of the United States."

May I be advised as to whether or not there has been any change in policy as to the preference to be extended to war, campaign, and expedition veterans in need for W. P. A. employment, and for preferred retention in W. P. A. employment, as provided for by law, and as repeatedly enunciated in policies expressed by you?

Very sincerely yours,

MILLARD W. RICE,
Legislative Representative.

The next letter is from John J. Crim, chairman of the national legislative committee of the Army and Navy Union. It is as follows:

The Senate has the opportunity of proving to the millions of underprivileged citizens that the program set forth by the administration in the giving of work relief will continue and the necessary funds of $150,000,000 will be appropriated to carry out this great work.

As great numbers of our members would be laid off under a curtailed appropriation, we are asking the opportunity of expressing, through you, our views to the Members of the Senate, and will appreciate their support in adding the $50,000,000 that was cut by the House of Representatives from the President's request.

Thanking you and the other Members for their cooperation, I remain,

Sincerely yours,

JOHN J. CRIM, Chairman.

In connection with what is stated in the letter last read, I have just received a message that 800 W. P. A. workers were laid off in Buffalo, N. Y., and that comparative numbers have been laid off in every community in the United States.

A few days ago, in order to keep the record straight, I directed a communication to Colonel Harrington as to the effect of the amendment now pending, and he wrote me as follows:

WORKS PROGRESS ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, D. C., April 7, 1939.

The Hon. JAMES M. MEAD,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR MEAD: The following is in response to your inquiries as to the effect of a supplemental appropriation of $100,000,000 upon the Works Progress Administration program for the balance of the current fiscal year.

So far as the matter of reducing the rolls after April 1, 1939, is concerned, the original program based upon the President's recommendation for an appropriation of $875,000,000 was to maintain an average employment of 3,000,000 persons through February and March, 2,900,000 in April, 2,800,000 in May, and 2,700,000 in June.

The contemplated average of 3,000,000 persons was maintained through February and March. The situation which faced me in April 1, was that the Congress had taken no action upon the President's request for an additional $150,000,000 to bring the appropriation for the Works Progress Administration to the amount originally recommended. I therefore ordered a reduction of the rolls to 2,800,000 to be completed in the week ending tomorrow. There certainly can be no question as to the actuality of this reduction. Furthermore, these persons will not be replaced if an additional $100,000,000 is appropriated.

Pending action on House Joint Resolution No. 246, I have not made a final decision as to the course to pursue in the months of May and June. I can, however, definitely state that further reductions will be necessary, as the funds at my disposal, if $100,000,000 is appropriated, will permit an average employment of only 2,366,000 persons in those 2 months.

In the matter of the number of certified people who are not now employed on the Works Progress Administration program, this number as of the end of February was 869,000, which has now undoubtedly been increased due to the lay-off which is being made this week.

Your second inquiry concerned the amount of the supplemental appropriation which I recommended to the Appropriations Committees. I wish to state that my recommendation to both the Senate and House committees was for the sum of $150,000,000. So far as the House committee is concerned, this is definitely shown on pages 2 and 79 of the printed record of the hearings.

Sincerely yours,

F. C. HARRINGTON,
Administrator.

Mr. President, the letter from Colonel Harrington and the messages from the President, without exception, are marked by their persistent consistency, and that consistency is woefully lacking in the ever-changing attitude of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations. Only a few weeks ago they told us that $725,000,000 was sufficient. Today they assure us that $100,000,000 additional will just about be sufficient. Insofar as I am concerned, I am going to vote for sufficient appropriations to keep the veterans at work; I am going to vote for sufficient funds to make opportunity for our own workers to find employment, rather than take my stand with a committee which makes one report one week and changes it by $100,000,000 the following week.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, in his time I wish to read into the RECORD the leading editorial in the Fairmont Times, of Fairmont, W. Va., for April 8, a short editorial, which refers to the very matter the Senator has been discussing in his statement. The editorial is entitled "Economy Comes Home," and is as follows:

[From the Fairmont Times of April 8, 1939]

"ECONOMY" COMES HOME

Effective today, 958 W. P. A. workers must be cut off the pay roll in the Second District, headquarters for which are in Fairmont.

So far as is known, none of those 958 have any possibilities of finding new work or new sources of income, unless they turn to the West Virginia department of public assistance for direct relief. It is possible that many of them will qualify for direct relief.

That's how the anti-New Dealers in Congress are "economizing"—by throwing men out of gainful employment and leaving them on the hands of State relief administrations that will have to give them food and shelter without receiving anything in return.

Mr. BILBO obtained the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BILBO. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have tried to canvass the situation in the Senate, and it is obvious that we cannot conclude the consideration of the pending joint resolution today without remaining in session longer than most Senators desire to stay. I ask unanimous consent that at not later than 2 o'clock on Thursday the Senate proceed to vote on the amendment now pending and all amendments thereto, and that thereafter, until the conclusion of the consideration of the joint resolution, no Senator shall speak more than once nor longer than 10 minutes on the joint resolution or any amendment thereto.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I think the Senator will have to amend the request. I am sure the Senator from Kentucky and I are in accord. What he desires is a limitation of debate after 2 o'clock on Thursday.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is correct.

Mr. McNARY. And that the limitation of debate shall follow the disposal of the pending amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is correct.

Mr. McNARY. The able Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] has an amendment in the nature of a substitute, which must be considered after 2 o'clock.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is true, and I understood from the Senator from Michigan that he would be willing to abide by a limitation of 10 minutes.

Mr. McNARY. Exactly; but from the Senator's statement it would not be inferred that he would have an opportunity to present his amendment, because the Senator refers to the pending amendment and all amendments thereto.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is not an amendment to the pending amendment.

Mr. McNARY. It would be an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. BARKLEY. I amend the request, then, and ask that after 2 o'clock on Thursday no Senator shall speak more than once nor longer than 10 minutes on the joint resolution or any amendment thereto or any substitute for the joint resolution.

Mr. McNARY. That is all right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will not the Senator from Kentucky state his request?

Mr. BARKLEY. The request is that at not later than 2 o'clock on Thursday the Senate vote on the pending amendment and all amendments thereto, and that thereafter no Senator shall speak more than once nor longer than 10 minutes on the joint resolution, or on any amendment thereto or substitute therefor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will not the Senator from Kentucky amend his request by providing that half the time on Thursday may be controlled by the proponents of the amendment and half by the opponents? Otherwise, one Senator may take the floor and consume the entire 2 hours, and cut off debate.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not wish to be unfair, but practically all the time so far has been consumed by proponents of the amendment. Nine-tenths of the time has been consumed by the proponents. I do not know of anyone who could possibly talk for 2 hours, or who would desire to talk for even an hour.

Mr. SMITH. I thought the Senator limited the time to 10 minutes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Not before 2 o'clock.

Mr. SMITH. After 2 o'clock the limitation would be 10 minutes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; but the pending amendment will be disposed of by that time. I do not have any objection to a division of time on Thursday, but to make it a condition to agreeing to the unanimous-consent request puts the debate upon the status that the time up to now has been equally divided, whereas everyone knows that it has been almost entirely consumed by the proponents of the amendment, and if they did not have any time at all on Thursday they still would be far ahead in the consumption of time in the debate.

I assure the Senator that, so far as I am concerned, I will do my best to see that no one Senator gets the floor and keeps it during the 2 hours.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, unless the proponents of the amendment are assured of at least 1 hour of time on Thursday, I shall object.

Mr. BARKLEY. We will proceed, then, without any further request on my part to get an agreement to vote on Thursday.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BILBO. I yield.

Mr. BONE. I wish to introduce into the RECORD a telegram I received from Charles F. Ernest, head of the welfare operations in my State, which points out that—

> Total certified and awaiting W. P. A. assignment as of latest available date, March 15, 13,258. In addition 3,508 have applied and their certifications are pending.

This telegram was sent from Olympia, Wash., on April 3, 1939.

> These two groups with their dependents represent 46,944 persons. The need for continuing a substantial work quota is further intensified by the fact that revenue-producing conditions in the State are such that it has become impossible to continue direct relief to able-bodied as of April 1.

The telegram goes on to point out that—

> The number to whom direct relief was being given as of March 15 was 15,159 family heads who together with their dependents number 42,445 human beings.

And Mr. Ernest winds up his appeal in his telegram with the statement:

> Any satisfactory degree of care for able-bodied persons in need will require continuation of present W. P. A. quota.

Mr. President, there was one other little matter to which I desire to direct the attention of my brethren. This is both an interesting and a pathetic showing, and very challenging as well.

The National Emergency Council representative in my State made some studies of illness frequency by relief status or annual family income in the great State of Washington.

The figures show that out of 1,000 persons—families on relief—234 were ill, and 71 out of the 234 had chronic illnesses.

In the nonrelief status, with incomes from zero up to $999 per family per year, there were 174 persons ill, and 54 of them were chronic.

In families with incomes ranging from $1,000 to $1,999 there were 155 person ill, and of these 39 cases were chronic.

In cases of incomes of $2,000 to $2,999 per family there were 150 persons ill, and 37 of those cases were chronic.

In cases of families with incomes over $3,000 there were 149 persons ill, and 39 of those persons had chronic illness.

That, Mr. President, indicates that as the family income increases illness decreases. Disease has become a tragic and inevitable concomitant of poverty. Thus illness goes hand in hand with poverty, and the health of America is being slowly but inexorably dragged down under the impact of the conditions of poverty in which so many people are compelled to live.

Mr. WAGNER. Is any medical care given to these unfortunate impoverished families?

Mr. BONE. They have to wrestle with the problem of illness as best they can. The scanty family income is given over wholly to the purchase of bare necessities. So the impact of this thing has dreadful possibilities.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi yield to me?

Mr. BILBO. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina to correct a mistake made in the RECORD.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, on April 6, 1939, I took occasion to bring to the attention of the Senator from Florida an article from the Washington Times-Herald, and I want to read that into the RECORD in order that I shall not do injustice to the young lady who addressed a communication to me with respect to that article. It has to do with the W. P. A. I see the Senator from Florida on the floor of the Senate now. He was very courteous to allow me to bring it to the attention of the Senate the other day when I directed an inquiry to him in regard to it. The article I clipped from the Washington Times-Herald reads as follows:

NEW Y. W. C. A. COURSE TELLS HOW TO TRAVEL IN EUROPE—W. P. A. RESEARCH AIDE WHO COVERED 25,000 MILES LAST YEAR WILL GIVE CLASS HER SECRETS ON GETTING BY ON ONE LANGUAGE

How to travel in Europe without languages, money, time, or war scares will be taught at the Y. W. C. A. in a 6 weeks' course opening Tuesday.

The professor in charge will be Frances Fox, Works Progress Administration research assistant, who last year did just what she will impart to her class. She traveled 25,000 miles, speaking only English.

Her course will include tips on what souvenirs to bring home and what to do if seasick, homesick, lovesick, or just sick.

Central and southern European travel will be stressed, along with the British Isles and Scandinavia and Finland.

Subjects will be the titles to a book Miss Fox is planning on "Travel and How To Do It." Some of them are: "Are You an Unadulterated Patriot?" "Guides and How To Prevent Them," "A Word to Wives on Packing for Men," "Mercenary in Money Matters," "Customs Is a Custom," "Tips on Tips, and Also on Gyps," and "Enigmatic Menus."

Mr. President, after I had read that clipping from the Washington Times-Herald into the RECORD, I received a letter from Miss Fox, which occasions my requesting permission at this time to make the statement I am making. I asked the Senator from Mississippi to yield to me for that purpose. The letter is as follows:

Washington, D. C., April 7, 1939.

The Honorable ROBERT R. REYNOLDS,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR REYNOLDS: Several statements made by you yesterday on the floor of the Senate, and quoted subsequently by at least two radio commentators, were completely untrue, and I wish to inform you of the facts in the hope you will be compelled, as a matter of simple justice, to correct the RECORD.

During my travels abroad I had no connection with the Works Progress Administration. These travels were concluded over a year ago and I did not begin work for the W. P. A. until about 8 months ago. My present series of talks likewise has no connection with the W. P. A. They are delivered in the evening, under the sponsorship of the Y. W. C. A. Moreover, there was nothing in the newspaper clipping you read to your colleagues to justify your assumptions that either the travels or the lectures were in any way connected with or financed by the W. P. A.

In view of your own extended travels, I wonder if you could have any objection of any kind to one traveling where and when she chose, so long as it was on her own savings and her own time. And I am definitely eager to know whether you are sufficiently interested in truth and justice, regardless of your immunity, to get up and withdraw your false statements in the same manner that you made them.

Very truly,

FRANCES FOX.

Mr. President, immediately upon receiving Miss Fox's letter I addressed to her a communication—the date after her letter was written. It is as follows:

APRIL 8, 1939.

MY DEAR MISS FOX: Thank you sincerely for your letter of April 7, which I found on my desk this afternoon when I came from the Senate. I have noted the contents of your letter very carefully.

In view of your statement I shall be very happy indeed to insert your letter in the RECORD next Monday if the opportunity is provided, together with the newspaper clipping which I utilized on the floor of the Senate in making reference to the W. P. A. matter now under discussion in the Chamber of the Senate.

I am asking Miss Basinger, who takes this letter, to secure for me the RECORD carrying the newspaper clipping mentioned, so that your letter may follow that clipping. I would not have anyone think that I would do you an injustice, or anybody else for that matter, including the W. P. A.

With assurances of my highest respect, I beg to be,

Very sincerely yours,

ROBERT R. REYNOLDS.

I thank the Senator from Mississippi for permitting me the opportunity to make this correction in the RECORD. I want to assure the President of the Senate and my colleagues that I have never attempted to or shall I ever misquote anyone for that matter, and whenever I make a mistake I shall be very happy if I may be provided the opportunity to correct it.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, I believe in governmental economy, but I do not belong to the so-called economic bloc which is attempting to cut to the bone every appropriation which has a tendency to relieve suffering humanity and contribute to the social uplift of the people of our Nation.

I know that many persons have been disturbed over the fact that our national debt has reached the neighborhood of $40,000,000,000. However, we are in much better condition financially than is the great British Empire. I am told by those who are in a position to know that if the Government should continue assuming obligations until we reached the present status of the British Government, we could go to $129,000,000,000 instead of $40,000,000,000. So after all we are not in such bad shape when we compare our condition with that of some of the other great nations of the world.

We boast of the fact that we have the greatest nation on earth, the most powerful nation on earth, the wealthiest nation on earth, and that our resources are unlimited, very few of them having been thoroughly developed. So this is no time to get economic hysteria and defeat an appropriation which is very essential to the welfare of 700,000 or 800,000 American citizens. I understand they are bona fide citizens, since we have eliminated the aliens who have been on our rolls.

I should be untrue to my duty and my responsibility to my constituents if I did not favor the $50,000,000 increase. This morning I obtained from the records in the W. P. A. office the fact that from the 1st of April to the 15th of April 3,840 of my constituents who had been certified as being in need of a job, in need of relief from the Government, will be discharged from the rolls.

I was further informed that if only $100,000,000 were appropriated today, 4,000 would be dismissed from the rolls each month in my State. That means that if the $50,000,000 should not be added to the appropriation, about 12,000 of the good people of my State would be thrown out into the cold without a job, on starvation, in need, in poverty.

That situation does not take into consideration the thousands in my State who have been certified as eligible for relief, and who have not yet been put on the rolls. Some of them have been waiting for 2 or 3 years, certified by the authorities of the Government upon examination. They have no work, they have no means of support, and they are fit subjects for relief. They have not been on the rolls.

For these reasons, speaking strictly as a representative of my State, I am compelled to support the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER].

I appreciate the rule that some of my colleagues are following, to vote with the committee recommendation. Since I have been in the Senate, and in recent months, I have read much in the press, and I have heard talk on the floor of the Senate, especially by our friends on the other side of the Chamber, to the effect that this is a "rubber stamp" Congress. I agree with our friends. To a very large extent this is a "rubber stamp" Congress. It is not a "rubber stamp" Congress in the sense in which that term is used by our friends on the opposite side of the Chamber, but it is a "rubber stamp" Congress for this reason: I care not what kind of a bill may be introduced; the minute the bill reaches the committee, the secretary instantly sends it down to one of the bureaus or departments for investigation and report. When the bill reaches the Department of Agriculture, the Department of State, the Department of Commerce, or the Treasury, as Senators know, it is not passed upon by the head of the department or bureau. It is passed on down to some "small fry" in the Department, some specialist, some so-called expert, some pseudo "brain truster"; and he, in his private office, decides what the policy of the Government shall be, and what the law shall be. Then the bill is sent on up to the head of the department, and in a perfunctory way in many cases the recommendation of the subordinate is accepted, the head of the department signs the letter, and it is sent to the committee.

When the committee assembles to consider an important piece of legislation which is vital to a particular State or to a great section of the country, the minute the clerk says to the committee that the report from the department or bureau or commission is adverse, every one folds his arms and the bill is dead; the legislation is neglected. So the Congress has surrendered to the departments and bureaus of the Government its right to pass upon legislation which the country needs. When the commiteee reports adversely, the great majority of my colleagues say, "The committee is against it, so I will follow the committee."

I think every Senator has his own responsibility. He has his duty to his constituents. While I am always happy to follow the lead of the committee, I cannot give my consent always to follow the committee, because a small majority in the committee could be just as mistaken as a majority on the floor of the Senate in the passage of legislation. So I think we should give careful consideration to all these questions, regardless of the action of the committee.

The thing I do not like about the report from the Appropriations Committee is the fact that the chairman stated on the floor that the testimony and the figures given by Colonel Harrington were such that the committee took issue with him, and reached the conclusion that the W. P. A. did not need the money, and that it could go on until July without the additional appropriation; whereas Colonel Harrington, with all his earnestness and his great desire to make a good job of the W. P. A., insisted that his figures justified the appropriation of the full $150,000,000.

I am certain that since January the President has insisted that the $150,000,000 is needed. Even since the committee of the Senate made its report he has insisted that it is needed, and he is still insisting that the Senate should vote the $150,000,000.

I am not disturbed about the House. Members of the House have their own responsibilities and duties to their constituents to discharge. We should do our duty, and then put the matter up to the House. If the House cannot, or will not agree, then the question will go to conference. That is the proper way to fight out the question.

Some one says, "We cannot get the amendment through the House." I do not know. Many times I have seen the House surrender to the will of the majority of the Senate; and it may be that in this important question, involving the welfare of 700,000 or 800,000 persons, the House will bow to the will of the Senate.

If the newspapers tomorrow morning should publish a story to the effect that a great cyclone or hurricane had stricken one part of the Nation, and had thrown out of employment and put on charity 700,000 or 800,000 of its citizens, the entire Congress would be ready to send money to the stricken area in order to give the people relief. In this case we are being called upon to send relief to 700,000 or 800,000—almost a million—who are in just as distressful a condition as any one would be after a storm or a hurricane, because these people have been certified by the proper authorities. The authorities have said by their certification that those certified are in need. They are without jobs. They are faced with starvation. They must have clothes and food; and yet we hesitate to do our duty.

The underlying force behind the campaign against the appropriation is the voice of big business, which is speaking in its silent, forceful way on the banks of the Potomac. We are contending with an invisible government whose influence is largely directing the economy campaign. The cry has been, "If we will only appease big business, we shall have a new era of prosperity in this country." The attempts to appease big business with tax relaxations, and the relaxation of rules and regulations governing monopolies, will be just about as successful in bringing about prosperity as Mr. Chamberlain's Munich agreement was in bringing peace to the people of Europe.

The Senator from Washington a while ago read the words of Mr. Babson, and said that the reason why the moneyed power of this country would not release the funds necessary to start the wheels of progress of the country was because they are waiting to see what Hitler is going to do. No; it is not Hitler they are watching and waiting for. They have been watching and waiting to see what Franklin D. Roosevelt and this administration will do toward releasing the bans and regulations on the monopolistic control of the affairs and economic life of the country. They have been waiting to see what the Senate Finance Committee and the House Ways and Means Committee will do toward relieving them of taxes that they do not want to pay. That is what they are waiting to see about. They do not give a hurrah for Hitler.

Let us appropriate this $150,000,000. Let us say to big business, "When you get ready to play ball and unloose the multiplied billions that are now in the banks of the country, that are now in hiding in the richest nation on earth, with boundless resources to be developed, with numberless opportunities to be furnished, we will give you a square deal; but if you do not turn loose these billions and play ball, we have the power and we are going to feed and clothe the American people at the expense of the big taxpayers of the country until you do so." That is all those engaged in big business have been waiting for; and right now they are waiting until 1940, in the hope that they can put at the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue a Republican President who will carry out their wish and will, with a House of Representatives that will cooperate.

It strikes me that the people sometimes are easily fooled. We saw big business trying to run this Government for 12 years under Harding, Coolidge, and Hoover, and we remember the hell of a fix it was in when the Democrats took charge in 1932. That was an example of big business trying to operate the Government, because God knows they had charge of it for 12 years; and yet we find a great many good people who want to turn around and try them again. If so, in the end we shall get the same dose that we got before.

I make reference to my own section of the country. We need this relief in Mississippi. All the Southern States need this relief. We are poor and yet we are wealthy. The South, along with the West, has the majority of the resources of this country today. They are not developed; but the South is rich in the great resources of the Nation. I just want to give you some figures.

Take oil, that great, essential material in our present-day civilization. The South and West produce 95.79 percent of all the oil of the United States.

Take lumber. The South and the West produce 90.18 percent of all the lumber that is used in building the houses of this country.

Take the 64 leading farm crops. Sixty-three and sixty-seven one hundredths percent of them are produced by those great sections which are in need today, the South and the West.

All the gold that is mined in this country comes from the West, thirty-five to forty million dollars' worth a year.

All the silver that is mined in this country comes from the South and the West, twenty-five or thirty million dollars' worth a year.

Notwithstanding these facts, however, we are today poor because we have been mistreated by the moneyed powers of the financial centers of the Nation; and I am ready to prove that statement.

One of the greatest industries of the country today is the paper industry. Did you know that 70 percent of all the paper and wood pulp made and used by the American people comes from Canada and from England? At the same time, one-tenth of the acreage of the South today would grow enough pine to produce enough pulp for all time to come, not only for the United States but for the entire world; just one-tenth of it. Recently, those of the South who had a vision of its development, and the utilization of its great wealth in natural resources in order to develop our own country, went to the bankers of New York, of Wall Street, and asked them to put money into building a paper mill in the South to develop this great industry. The bankers turned thumbs down on it, and instead invested $400,000,000 in Canada and in Europe, in the paper mills of those countries, to supply the United States with paper.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. BILBO. Yes.

Mr. LUNDEEN. International finance knows no flag, no country, no loyalty, and worships but one god, and that is the god of gold.

Mr. BILBO. And not much conscience, and no scruples at all. In other words, if the New York bankers and the other bankers of this country in whose vaults all these billions are hoarded would spend just $500,000,000 in the development of the paper industry in the South, erecting 100 mills and taking the products from 200,000,000 acres of the Southland, producing paper for the United States and for the world, it would give labor to 1,000,000 American citizens in the South today who are on the relief rolls. If the bankers do not want to pay the bill for taking care of the unfortunate idle of this country, let them open up their vaults and turn loose the money; and if they will spend $500,000,000 in the development of the paper industry of the South alone, we will take 1,000,000 persons off the relief rolls of the South.

Take the question of old-age pensions. I want to discuss that question at length when the measure comes before the Senate. What has happened? This silent, invisible government here on the banks of the Potomac, in the passage of the present social-security old-age-assistance law, passed a law in the interest of the rich States of the Union to the discrimination of the poor Commonwealths which make up this Republic. As a result, today the State of Mississippi—the State I have the honor in part to represent here—is paying on the average to her old people $4.79 per month, when in the richer States, in the concentrated-wealth sections of the country, the old people are receiving $30 a month. Practically all of the Southern States, although they are just teeming with undeveloped resources—and I make the prophecy that some day they will constitute the richest section of the United States—are not able today to pay over $4, $5, $8, or $10 per month to their old people.

I want to make another prophecy, and then I shall be through.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point, before he goes into the next subject?

Mr. BILBO. Yes.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I wonder if it would not be a good idea to prevent the export of this capital that goes by the billions into foreign countries. This capital was produced by American farmers, workingmen, and businessmen. Why permit its export? We should keep it here in the United States. There are nations which forbid the export of capital and so far as we can see they seem in that way to conserve their resources for their own people. I can see no sense in allowing our own capital to build factories in foreign countries with our own money just because they can employ cheap labor there. These products then come back here to the United States to plague us. We need an American policy.

Mr. BILBO. Yes; and the Senator's suggestion is a very happy one; but unfortunately the nations which pursue the course to which he has referred are the very nations which are now giving the rest of the world a great deal of trouble.

I wish to make a prophecy. The Democrats are in control at the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue, the White House, they are in control of the House of Representatives and of the Senate; we are on the job, and unless we give some response to the rising tide of the old people of this country, who demand a fair, and decent, and equitable, and just, and righteous compensation in their old age—unless we do that, we might just as well pack up our grips and get ready to move out of Washington, because the Republicans will outpromise the devil in their next national convention. Our promises may be greater, but they will not be believed, because we are on the job now and we can take action, and if we are on the job and will not give the assistance needed, the people will have no right to believe that we would do it if given another chance.

I hope there will be a sufficient number of Senators who have the humanity and a regard for the interests of the people of this country to lead them to vote this $150,000,000. I should be glad to speak 10 hours, but my time has been cut short, and I will finish at some other time.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, the inquiring student of government will search in vain from the beginning of Adam Smith's Wealth of Nations, through all the related dreary dissertations which followed it, to the end of the Fabian essays by George Bernard Shaw for a more fantastic political philosophy, or a less appealing economic fallacy, than the opponents of the Pepper amendment have enunciated in attempting to justify their opposition to this important measure.

Regardless of the language of the argumentation against the amendment, it may all be reduced to the unequivocal contention that the Congress can, by the simple expedient of adding approximately a half a million needy men and women to our vast army of unemployed, initiate a movement that will eventually balance the Budget, increase the prosperity of the taxpayers, and promote the general welfare of the country.

The naked, unblushing, manifest truth of the matter is that the remedy proposed by the opposition is as inappropriate for the healing of our economic afflictions as gasoline is for the extinguishment of a forest fire. Many Members of the Senate not only find it impossible to have a scintilla of faith in the efficacy of this extraordinary formula, but are impelled to the conclusion that its translation into reality would reduce consumption, diminish distribution, impoverish business, delay recovery, and increase the suffering of untold thousands of the unfortunate whom the Works Progress Administration has so far saved from starvation.

For the last 10 years the Government's paramount problem has been that of unemployment and the evils which flow directly from it. The insufficiency of jobs for the industrious, sober, and deserving manual laborers of the United States since the beginning of the Hoover panic in 1929 has made millions homeless; it has made millions ragged; it has made millions beg their bread; it has started innumerable throngs of discouraged men, destitute women, and famished little children over the hill to the poorhouse to eke out their existence in humiliation, die in agony, and sleep in the potter's field until the resurrection.

That a great increase in national prosperity is earnestly desired no one will venture to doubt or dare to deny. Only the means of obtaining it are involved in the debate.

The opponents of the amendment believe that prosperity can be achieved in the realm of increased unemployment. Those who are wholeheartedly supporting the amendment believe that employment and prosperity habitually go hand in hand. Throughout our history they have risen to the heights together. In the descent to the valley they have been as inseparable as the Siamese twins. The constant interdependence of these two vital factors in the great equation of national economic life is so self-evident and irresistible that legislators seldom ignore it and never intentionally do violence to it.

If every able-bodied, willing worker in the Nation should be lucratively employed at once, the toilers, with their wages, would promptly launch a buying campaign which, before the adjournment of this session of the Congress, would tax to capacity every facility of production and distribution in the land. And millions who have long been insufficiently housed and clothed and fed would soon create a profitable market for everything the farmers produce, for every commodity the railroads carry, for everything the coal operators, the manufacturers, and the merchants have to sell, and the people long to buy.

According to the latest reliable statistics, there are more than 11,000,000 jobless men and women in the United States. Just as long as this deplorable situation continues it will constitute an impassable barrier between the people and the promised land of prosperity into which they yearn to go. Unfortunately, the opponents of the Pepper amendment will, if their present efforts succeed, aggravate the chronic unemployment affliction and postpone complete recovery to a more distant day by robbing a half a million works-progress employees of their jobs and depriving them of the meager wages with which they are saving the Government the expense of supporting them in idleness and the burden of burying them if they should starve to death.

The action of the Congress in slashing $150,000,000 from the appropriation which the President originally requested for the Works Progress Administration has already deprived more than 205,000 toilers of their jobs.

Those who are intensely solicitous about financial affairs, only mildly interested in human values, and not visibly distressed by widespread misery are courteously urged to consider the fact that every time a works-progress employee is stricken from the roll, the loss of his wages injuriously affects everyone in his community who has supplied him the necessaries of life. And a little later the farmers who raise wheat in the north, cotton in the South, and hogs and cattle on the western plains suffer in some degree because of the annihilation of the purchasing power which the former job holder enjoyed.

If the Senate fails to grant the additional $50,000,000 which the supporters of the amendment seek to obtain, approximately 500,000 additional works-progress employees will be eliminated from the pay roll between now and the 30th day of June. Such a disheartening increase in unemployment might conceivably start a general business recession as great as that which plagued the country during the latter part of 1937 and the first half of 1938.

Let no one be deceived by the insinuations that the credit of the Nation is in danger and that if relief spending is not drastically reduced the Government will be face to face with insolvency or repudiation. The financial structure of the United States is the soundest on earth. Our credit is today better than that of any other nation that has ever existed in the entire history of the world.

And let us not be unduly alarmed by anything that may be heard from the wailing walls of the reactionaries concerning the amount of the national debt. A few weeks ago the eminent majority leader, Mr. BARKLEY, said in the course of an able address which he delivered in Ocala, Fla., that the sum total of the National, State, county, municipal, and private debts of the United States is now approximately $5,000,000,000 less than it was on the day of President Franklin D. Roosevelt's first inauguration.

Although the Government's own debt has increased, the money which has been spent for the employment of the idle on public works of permanent value has been used to liquidate local and private obligations to such an extent that our total indebtedness is now less than it was before the New Deal employment policy was established.

The industrial and economic problems with which this country is confronted were not caused by our having spent too much for the employment of the 15,000,000 destitute who were inherited from the Hoover administration, but because we have not spent enough for this praiseworthy purpose.

The opponents of the amendment say that the Government cannot afford to spend $50,000,000 to prevent a half a million deserving, needy men and women from being robbed of their jobs. They forget that this is still the richest country in the world. The American people constitute only 7 percent of the world's population but own 32 percent of its railroads, 33 percent of its radio broadcasting stations, 36 percent of its developed water power, 44 percent of its radio receiving sets, 58 percent of its telephone and telegraph facilities, and 76 percent of its automobiles. Because of the high standard of living among the fortunate, the United States consumes a third of the world's coal, half of its coffee, half of its rubber, half of its sugar, two-thirds of its petroleum, and three-fourths of its satin and silk.

During the past week we have learned that just one of our hundred thirty million people—a director of a prominent moving-picture concern—last year received salaries aggregating more than a million two hundred ninety-five thousand dollars—much more than the salaries of all the Members of the United States Senate combined. Multitudes of officials of American corporations are known to have received salaries last year that averaged more than a thousand dollars a day.

In the circumstances, we cannot justify the sacrifice of a half a million employees to the curse of enforced idleness on the ground that the Government cannot afford to lend them its aid.

Three choices are available to us concerning those whom the amendment is designed to save. First, if we are sufficiently heartless, we can let them starve. But it would cost the Government more to bury them than it would cost to employ them until the 1st of July. Second, we can provide them works-progress employment, in return for which they will give us construction of highways, bridges, schoolhouses, airplane landing fields, swimming pools, and many other public improvements of permanent utility and lasting value. Third, we can provide them a dole and thereby make them the unwilling and unhappy victims of enforced idleness and uselessness, and the Government will receive nothing in return. The supporters of the amendment believe that conscience decrees, prudence dictates and justice demands that we choose the works-progress employment which the requested additional appropriation of $50,000,000 would provide.

It may be difficult for those who were born with silver spoons in their mouths, or for those who since their earliest recollection have been clothed in purple and fine linen and have fared sumptuously every day to visualize the distress of a poor man who is charged with the responsibility of supporting a wife and four or five dependent children, and who has nothing in the world but $52.50 a month in wages from the Works Progress Administration between himself, his wife, and his children on the one hand, and immediate inescapable grinding want for food and shelter and clothing on the other.

But honorable and distinguished statesmen, with $10,000-a-year salaries with which to supply the wants of your families, will you not endeavor this afternoon to put yourselves in the places of the W. P. A. employees who are about to lose their jobs, who are about to become destitute, who are about to become homeless and hungry and cold?

The defeat of the amendment would cause many tragedies as agonizing as that described in the following story:

A workingman, a widower with five children, the oldest of whom was a girl 14 years of age, lived with his family in a rented cabin. The father was accidentally killed while unloading a truck. The little girl, in an effort to provide for a younger sister and her three little brothers, sought and found work—scrubbing neighbors' floors and washing their windows. But her compensation was so scant that she was compelled to work long hours in order to save the little family from dissolution. As a result of her overexertion she suffered an attack of influenza, which rapidly developed into pneumonia. The generous-hearted Christian doctor who had volunteered to treat her without pay, at last told her that she had only a few more hours to live, but he endeavored to encourage her by describing the joy she would experience in knowing Jesus in the better land. The doctor was called from the sickroom for a few minutes, and in his absence a neighbor girl came to see her dying friend. The little martyr with her hands as rough as sandpaper meekly folded across her breast, stated that she expected to see Jesus in a little while, but lamented: "I am so poor and so ignorant that when I meet Him I won't know what to say." Her little friend instantly replied: "You won't need to know—just show Him your hands."

Senators, when we finally stand trial before the only one who ever gave His absolute all, including His life on the cross, to the service of the poor, the needy, and the sick, let us at least be sure when we show the Saviour our hands that they will be free from the blood of the poverty-stricken and distressed, and let us hope that the Master will say to all of us concerning our vote today, "Well done, thou good and faithful servants."

Countless transgressions may be charged against me, but it will not be charged that I ever cast a vote in the Senate or elsewhere, the obvious, inevitable result of which was to augment the destitution, increase the suffering, and intensify the humiliation of those of whom Edwin Markham said:

Out of the roads they have gathered a hundred thousand men,
To ask for a hold on life as sure as the wolf in his den.
Their need lies close to the quick of life as the earth lies close to the stone,
It is as meat to the slender rib, as marrow to the bone.
They ask but leave to labor for a taste of life's delight,
For a little salt to savor their bread, for houses watertight.

They ask but the right to labor and to live by the strength of their hands,
They who have bodies like knotted oaks and patience like the sea sands.
And the right of a man to labor, and his right to labor in joy,
Not all your laws can strangle that right nor the gates of hell destroy,
For it came with the making of man and was kneaded into his bones,
And it will stand at the last of things on the dust of crumbled thrones.

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, I favor the adoption of the Pepper amendment, and hope it will prevail.

When the original relief-appropriation measure was before the Senate in January last I voted for the full amount recommended by the President. Everyone in my State knows whose vote decided the cut from $875,000,000 to $725,000,000 by a vote of 47 to 46.

Recently, my colleague and I had the privilege of addressing a joint meeting of the Pennsylvania Legislature, which privilege was extended to us by a resolution of the lower house. At that meeting my colleague stated that he would vote to restore the full amount of $150,000,000, provided a committee were appointed to investigate the W. P. A. I now wish to remind him that since that date the House of Representatives has appointed a committee for that purpose.

Once more, I desire to say that I hope the Pepper amendment will prevail.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, at this hour I would not detain the Senate on this amendment or any other amendment unless I thought it my duty to do so. I shall try to be brief.

I am not concerned with the politics of this situation. During the discussion of the $875,000,000 proposition two months ago, charges were made that politics had been injected into relief; and one of the political parties in this Chamber injected politics in relief by caucusing as a political organization on how it would vote on it.

I am not going to take time to discuss the philosophy of spending or of economizing as it applies to this particular amendment. I think my record during the past 6 years shows that I have not been averse to spending for relief, and I am not now averse to such spending; and I am not at all frightened over the size of the public debt of the United States.

If I had it within my power by the issue of a word to decide whether this emergency relief appropriation measure would carry $100,000,000 or $150,000,000, I would order it to carry the $150,000,000 recommended by the President. I voted for $875,000,000 2 months ago; and with my colleagues here, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], the Senators from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH and Mr. CHAVEZ], and other Senators on the Appropriation Committee and on this floor, we lost by one vote. That is past history. It could be charged that any individual Senator here who voted against $875,000,000 at that time was responsible for its defeat, because the change of one vote would have carried the amendment.

But, Mr. President, we are confronted here with a condition and not a theory, as Grover Cleveland once said on another occasion, in dealing with another subject. The President, in his message to Congress at the beginning of this session, asked for $875,000,000. The House of Representatives passed a joint resolution providing for $725,000,000. We fought out the matter here on the floor and in committee. If we had obtained the $875,000,000 appropriation in the Senate, and the joint resolution had gone back to the House with a difference of $150,000,000 between the House and the Senate, and the joint resolution had gone to conference, as it would have gone, we could not well have hoped to get out of that conference with more than $100,000,000 of the $150,000,000 representing the difference between the two Houses. If we had carried the $875,000,000 then, and the matter had gone to conference, and the conferees had brought back $825,000,000, which is about what they would have brought back, we should have been then just where we are now, and this joint resolution would not be here today.

When the President requested the additional $150,000,000, and the matter was under consideration in the House, it soon became obvious that the House would not pass a bill carrying more than $100,000,000 in addition to previous appropriations. That is what the House passed. However much I or other Senators may regret the reduction, however unsatisfactory it may be and is to the President of the United States and to us, there are 531 Members of the Congress of the United States, and 530 of them besides myself have a right to pass on this question.

I have no control over a single one of those 530 Members in the House and in the Senate. Further, I desire to say that so far as this amendment is concerned I have not attempted to exercise any control over or to influence the vote of a single Senator. I thought it unwise to precipitate this fight here, and I still think so, because if the Pepper amendment should be adopted, and we should pass the joint resolution with $150,000,000, it would go back to the House of Representatives and go to conference, and they would be wrangling over the difference between $100,000,000 and $150,000,000 for the next 10 days or two weeks, and at the end of that time they would come back here with $100,000,000, just what is carried in the joint resolution today.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is it not true that if we should adopt the $100,000,000, Congress will likely be in session continuously from now until July 1, and if any really critical situation should arise it could be corrected at that time?

Mr. BARKLEY. I am going to discuss that question in a moment. I thank the Senator from Texas for reminding me of it.

A great deal has been said inside the Chamber and outside—more outside than inside—to the effect that some sort of nefarious and obnoxious agreement was entered into by which the votes of Members here are bound on this amendment.

Mr. President, I am speaking today not only as an individual Senator from Kentucky, but I am going to assume the responsibility of speaking as the majority leader of the United States Senate. If I have not the common sense and the frankness and the courage to take my share of responsibility on an issue of this sort, the Democratic conference ought to meet day after tomorrow and select somebody who has the courage to do it.

When I became advised of the situation in the Committee on Appropriations with respect to this measure, I think it was my duty to consider the circumstances which prevailed in the committee and in this Chamber.

It is well known that some of the members of the Appropriations Committee were opposed to any additional appropriation whatever and any member of the committee will confirm that statement. Just how many there were I do not undertake to say but there were several.

There were other members of the committee who were willing to appropriate $50,000,000 additional and others $75,000,000 additional, and the amount ranged all the way up to $150,000,000, which is the subject of the present controversy.

I think I am not divulging any secret when I say that if in the Committee on Appropriations each individual member had voted his own individual sentiments on the subject we would not have a joint resolution before us providing $100,000,000, but we would have one providing a maximum of not more than $83,000,000 and it might have been $75,000,000; and if that had occurred we would now be fighting here to restore the amount to $100,000,000 instead of trying to obtain $150,000,000, which is the subject of the amendment pending.

When I was advised by members of the committee of that situation and it came to me in my capacity here, I said to them what I am saying now that while I, myself, would like to see the appropriation made $150,000,000, while I favored $150,000,000, I think common sense dictates to us that we act here in the light of the conditions which prevail and not as we might like them to be.

When Senators like the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], who led the fight on this floor and in the committee 2 months ago to get the entire amount asked for by the President; when a Senator like the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON], for whose sincerity and whose ability and frankness and integrity I have the highest regard, as we all do; when the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], who 2 months ago helped to make the fight to get the entire amount; and other Senators on the committee, regardless of their views as to the size of the appropriation, came to me and advised me of the situation, I did what I think any man of common sense and frankness would have done. I recommended to them that they do the best they could, and it was my opinion then as it is now that in the light of these circumstances if they could obtain a unanimous report for $100,000,000 as the joint resolution was passed by the House the wise course to pursue was to accept that and bring the joint resolution out on the floor and pass it without amendment and get it to the President so that he might sign it without delay.

I was not willing, however, to take the responsibility alone of pursuing that course. Late one afternoon I called into conference 15 or 20 Senators, those who were on the floor and as many as I could get in touch with at that hour, to advise about the situation. Among those were the three members of the Committee on Appropriations to whom I have referred. After discussing the situation for nearly 2 hours, it was the almost unanimous judgment of those present, every one of whom had voted for the $875,000,000 2 months ago, that the wisest course to pursue was the course which has been pursued by the Committee on Appropriations and which I am recommending now.

No one has been bound as to his vote on the amendment. No effort has been made to bind anyone and I have not myself talked around among my friends and colleagues on this side of the Chamber and electioneered with them or buttonholed them as to how they would vote on the amendment when it is voted on; and I do not propose to do that. Although I disagree with him as to the wisdom of offering his amendment, I did not ask the Senator from Florida not to offer it; and the Senator will say so in the presence of the Senate.

So, Mr. President, if the course I have pursued and the vote I am going to cast here today subjects me to criticism I accept it without flinching, from whatever source it may come, inside or outside this Chamber.

If I have made an error in judgment in trying to be frank with my colleagues and with the country, because I am not willing to kid the people of the United States, or my colleagues here in the Senate by holding out a hope for them that they can get something which I know they cannot get, however desirable it may be in their estimation, the responsibility is mine.

Mr. President, what is the situation? I will recount the amounts appropriated for this purpose during the past 3 or 4 years, because I think we are entitled to compare them in order to assess the real importance of the particular $50,000,000 in dispute in relation to the amount which has been appropriated by the Congress for previous years and for this year.

In the act of 1935, for the Emergency Relief Administration, Congress appropriated $1,357,000,000. The Relief Administration appropriation for fiscal year 1937 was $1,817,000,000. For the fiscal year 1938 it was $1,476,000,000. For the fiscal year 1939 we have appropriated to date for Works Progress Administration a total of $2,063,000,000.

If the $150,000,000 asked for by the President were added to this, the total amount would be $2,213,000,000. With the hundred million dollars carried in the joint resolution the total appropriation for this year will be $2,163,000,000.

I am authorized by the President to say that while he wants the $150,000,000, while he thinks it is necessary, while the $100,000,000 is not satisfactory, he will sign the bill for $100,000,000 if and when it comes to him.

I am authorized further to say that within the next few days the President will send to the Congress a message asking for an appropriation of $1,500,000,000 for the Works Progress Administration for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1939.

I have conferred with some of the members of the Committee on Appropriations about the wisdom and propriety of an appropriation of a billion and a half dollars for next year, and it is my sincere hope that we may enact that appropriation without a serious contest in either House of the Congress. But when we have reduced the appropriation for W. P. A. next year, according to the request of the President, when it comes in within a few days, we will have reduced the amount available for W. P. A. from $2,163,000,000 for 1939 to $1,500,000,000 for 1940, which will be a reduction of $613,000,000 in the W. P. A. appropriation for next year below the amount appropriated for this year.

When you compare the $2,163,000,000 for this year, with $1,500,000,000 for next year to begin on the first day of July, representing a reduction of $613,000,000, I contend in all sincerity, that in view of the situation existing in the House of Representatives and in the Senate, $50,000,000, after all, is not such a stupendous amount as to justify all the delay and controversy involved in this amendment.

Mr. President, we will have an appropriation bill for 1940, with the recommendation of the President for $1,500,000,000—we will have it here in the Senate sometime during June. There is no way to predict how much of a contest may arise over that amount. But, Mr. President, it has been my view and is my view now that in view of the approach of June, when we have to fight out this entire question of relief, and the amount, that it was unwise to have a fight here over the amount involved in this amendment, within 2 months of the time when we have to consider and determine the entire question of how much money we will have available for 1940.

I have some Irish blood in my veins, and I like to fight as much as anyone whenever something is accomplished by it. But my daily prayer is not "Lord, show me a fight in order that I may get into it." And my daily prayer is not "Lord, show me a spot in order that I may put some Democrat on it, or Republican either." I am not in the business of trying to put Members on the spot. I go on the assumption that men who occupy responsible positions in the Senate of the United States will vote on a roll call as they will vote in any other way in the United States Senate. And if there is any Senator here on the Republican or Democratic side, or with any other political affiliation, who would be afraid to vote on a roll call in any way he would not vote in secret, to use the language of my friend from South Carolina, we ought to search our consciences and our hearts to see whether we are frank with ourselves and with our constituents.

Mr. President, I have conferred and I think I am guilty of no impropriety in making this statement—I have conferred with responsible leaders of the House of Representatives upon this situation as it exists, and I think I know as certainly as I know anything, that $100,000,000 is all we are going to get out of this appropriation, and knowing that as I think I do, and feeling that way about it, I am unwilling to delay for 10 days or for 5 days the final adoption of this joint resolution, because when we come to consider the appropriation for 1940, as it will be presented to us within a few days by the President of the United States, and as we must in order to make it available by the first day of July, if the situation that then exists requires any additional appropriation to be made available for the remainder of 1939 we can add it onto that bill and make it available for expenditure prior to the first day of July—the end of this fiscal year.

These facts, Mr. President, constitutes one of the reasons why I feel that this amendment and the controversy around it is a futile gesture. I say that not in criticism of any Senator. I say it not in criticism of my dear friend from Florida, who is the author of this amendment. I say it not in criticism of any Senator who will vote for the amendment, but I say it because I desire to be frank with the Senate and frank with the country—most of all to be frank with the unfortunate men and women of this Nation who rely on this sort of employment for their daily bread.

I do not deem that there is any fundamental principle involved in the difference between $100,000,000 and $150,000,000 for if we owe any obligation as a matter of principle we owe it to all the unemployed, and not a few of them or only a portion of them. We have to deal with these problems as they arise here. We have to exercise our own conscience and our own better judgment in the light of facts that we know exist.

In the light of those facts, for the reasons I have assigned, I shall vote against the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida, and I trust that the joint resolution will be adopted without amendment of any sort, so that we may send it to the President for his signature and make this money available without further delay in order that the situation to which our attention has been called repeatedly may not grow worse.

I appreciate the President's attitude. I would not have wanted him to change it, Mr. President, and if he had indicated to me himself a willingness to have retreated from the figure which he originally sent us, I would have advised him not to do so.

The President has his responsibility. No man has ever borne his responsibilities more nobly or more faithfully than has Franklin D. Roosevelt. I have my responsibility likewise, and so have other Senators.

Acting upon my responsibility, in the light of the situation which I believe to exist, regretting as I do that I cannot vote for the amendment, I feel that it is my duty to vote against the amendment. Other Senators will be governed by their own sense of duty; but it is my settled conviction that the joint resolution should be agreed to without amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. McNARY. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PEPPER. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Danaher	Johnson, Colo.	Radcliffe
Andrews	Davis	King	Reed
Ashurst	Downey	La Follette	Reynolds
Austin	Ellender	Lee	Russell
Bailey	George	Lodge	Schwartz
Bankhead	Gerry	Lucas	Schwellenbach
Barbour	Gibson	Lundeen	Shipstead
Barkley	Gillette	McCarran	Smathers
Bilbo	Green	McKellar	Smith
Bone	Guffey	McNary	Stewart
Bridges	Gurney	Maloney	Taft
Brown	Harrison	Mead	Thomas, Okla.
Bulow	Hatch	Minton	Thomas, Utah
Burke	Hayden	Murray	Townsend
Byrd	Herring	Neely	Truman
Byrnes	Hill	Norris	Vandenberg
Capper	Holman	Nye	Wagner
Clark, Idaho	Holt	Overton	Walsh
Clark, Mo.	Hughes	Pepper	Wheeler
Connally	Johnson, Calif.	Pittman	White

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER]. On that question the yeas and nays have been demanded and ordered. The clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of the Pepper amendment will answer "yea"; those opposed "nay."

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BILBO (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY], who has been called out of the city. If he were present, he would vote "nay." If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea." I withhold my vote.

Mr. ELLENDER (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS]. If he were present, he would vote "nay." If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea." I withhold my vote.

Mr. WHITE (when Mr. HALE's name was called). On this question my colleague [Mr. HALE] has a pair with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER]. If my colleague were present he would vote "nay." I am informed that if the Senator from North Dakota were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. HILL (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS], and withhold my vote. If the Senator from Indiana were present, he would vote "nay." If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. BARKLEY (when Mr. LOGAN's name was called). My colleague [Mr. LOGAN] is unavoidably detained. If he were present, he would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HATCH. My colleague [Mr. CHAVEZ] is unavoidably detained from the Senate on very important business. I am not authorized to state how he would vote if he were present.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD (after having voted in the negative). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. I am informed that if he were present and voting he would vote as I have voted, so I allow my vote to stand.

Mr. DAVIS (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN]. I understand that if he were present he would vote as I have voted. Therefore, I allow my vote to stand.

Mr. BRIDGES. My colleague [Mr. TOBEY] is necessarily absent from the Senate, due to illness. I understand that he has a general pair with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY]. If my colleague were present and at liberty to vote, he would vote "nay." I understand that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], if present, would vote "yea."

Mr. CONNALLY. The senior Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] is unavoidably detained from the Senate. I am not authorized to state how he would vote if present.

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER] is detained from the Senate because of illness in his family.

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS] is unavoidably detained.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] are absent on important public business.

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 49, as follows:

YEAS—28

Andrews	Hughes	Minton	Schwellenbach
Bone	Johnson, Colo.	Murray	Smathers
Clark, Idaho	La Follette	Neely	Thomas, Okla.

So Mr. PEPPER's amendment was rejected.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment, to be inserted at the conclusion of the joint resolution:

Provided, That the Works Progress Administration shall so administer the funds allotted to it for the balance of the fiscal year, and so regulate the employment, that no project worker who is in need and employable, and who cannot find employment in private industry at wages not less than the prevailing rate of wages, for work for which he or she is reasonably fitted by training and experience, shall be discharged from the Works Progress Administration rolls, except for cause.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment offered by the Senator from Washington will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. At the end of the joint resolution it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the Works Progress Administration shall so administer the funds allotted to it for the balance of the fiscal year, and so regulate the employment, that no project worker who is in need and employable, and who cannot find employment in private industry at wages not less than the prevailing rate of wages, for work for which he or she is reasonably fitted by training and experience, shall be discharged from the Works Progress Administration rolls, except for cause.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, very briefly I desire to state that we have discussed this matter here two or three times. If the position of the committee is correct that no one will be discharged, then certainly the committee cannot with consistency object to the amendment. It simply gives assurance to those who are on the rolls that there will be some continuity of employment between now and the first of July.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. HAYDEN. I desire to make a suggestion. If any amendment is adopted to the joint resolution, it will have to go back to the House and to conference. We cannot tell how long that will take. To my mind, it is very important that the appropriation be made and become available immediately. The effect of the Senator's proposal, therefore, would be to delay the matter.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. BILBO. Will the Senator from Washington agree to an amendment to his amendment, striking from it the word "discharged" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "refused", so as to read "no project worker * * * shall be refused employment"?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. That would completely change the meaning of the amendment. The amendment is intended only to protect those who are now employed on the rolls, and to provide for them some degree of security in their employment between now and July 1.

Mr. BILBO. My contention is that the seven or eight hundred thousand persons who are certified as now off relief have not heretofore been enjoying any of the compensation of the program, and that if they meet the requirements set up by the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington that class of persons should not be refused employment. I am trying to take care of those who are on the outside as well as those who have been enjoying the fruits of this program.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I will say to the Senator that I tried for 2 years to get that sort of a measure adopted; and I am satisfied that if such an amendment were accepted, the joint resolution never would get through conference. For that reason I am not willing to accept the amendment.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. OVERTON. If I correctly understand the Senator's amendment, if it is adopted there will be no limitation upon the W. P. A. Administrator insofar as an appropriation is concerned. He may continue to employ persons regardless of the limitations contained in the appropriation.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. No; I do not think so. I think all the amendment does is to give to those who are now on the rolls some assurance of continuity of employment until the end of the fiscal year. I do not think the amendment affects the joint resolution in any other way. If the analysis made by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] is correct, the amendment will not make any difference; but I think these persons are entitled to that assurance, and I think it would be a very desirable thing from the point of view of the general purposes of the joint resolution to have the amendment adopted.

Mr. OVERTON. Suppose the appropriation were not sufficient to carry out the purposes of the amendment, what would happen?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. If the figures which have been accepted by the committee are so far off as to result in that, it would mean a necessity for a further appropriation; but I honestly assure the Senator and the Senate that I do not present the amendment from the point of view of inviting a deficiency appropriation. I present it from the point of view of giving to these persons an assurance that they are going to remain on the rolls unless they are discharged for cause.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment in the nature of a substitute which I offer. I move that all after the enacting clause of the joint resolution be stricken out, and that the matter I send to the desk be inserted in lieu thereof.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment, in the nature of a substitute, offered by the Senator from Michigan, will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause of the joint resolution and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

That the first section of the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution making an additional appropriation for work relief and relief for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939," approved February 4, 1939, is amended by striking out "June 30, 1939" wherever it appears in such section and inserting in lieu thereof "June 7, 1939."

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the Senate for just 3 or 4 minutes, I shall very briefly explain the theory of the substitute, and content myself with a vote upon it.

It seems to me there is a far more rational and realistic approach to this problem than the pending one, as represented either in the committee's recommendation or in the amendment submitted by the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER]. Instead of guessing whether $50,000,000 or $100,000,000 or $150,000,000 of additional relief money is necessary next June, I again suggest that we wait until next June to settle next June's problem. In the meantime we can devote 2 months to a study of concrete and specific relief economies, and to the creation, perhaps, of a substitute for the entire existing relief formula, instead of now rushing to another pell-mell decision under the whip and spur of one more emergency which once more invites us to hasty and inconclusive decision.

Mr. President, if you will follow me, the W. P. A. already has $725,000,000 to spend to next June 30. The President and his relief administrator say this is $150,000,000 short of the necessities for their program; but under their program they do not need one penny of the additional $150,000,000 until June 8. Therefore, their program can be fully financed in their way by the simple recourse of amending the original authorization to permit them to spend the $725,000,000 up to June 8 instead of June 30. This eliminates the necessity for any additional appropriation at the present time. It postpones until June the necessity for any additional appropriation under their own theory and their own demands. It gives Congress 2 more months in which to investigate the W. P. A. and in which to identify some of the economies which Congress believes to be possible without any impairment of legitimate relief necessities.

The President cannot complain; he gets what he wants to June 7. W. P. A. cannot complain; it gets its own program to June 7. Then, prior to June 7, in the light of further studies and disclosures and recommendations, Congress can deal with the last 3 weeks of this fiscal year on the same realistic basis with which it deals with the whole 12 months of the next fiscal year.

Mr. President, that, in a nutshell, is the theory of the substitute, and I submit that it meets every relief necessity for 2 more months, yet relieves us of the necessity of guessing at the moment what ultimately may be required.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I desire to say a word about the amendment. It presents a new theory of government, a remarkable theory. What is the use of appropriating $100,000,000? Why not appropriate enough for the time between now and next Sunday, and cut the appropriation away down? If in the meantime there were any demand to go further with the program, we could make another appropriation. We could deal the money out in handfuls.

Mr. President, I understand the amendment to mean that until the 7th of June they can run on at the same rate with the money which the $100,000,000 appropriation will provide, and if Congress does not do anything then, they discharge everybody. That is economy. Why not make it the 1st of May; why not the 15th of April; why not the 15th of May?

We have been all wrong in appropriating in time past for fiscal years. We might just as well shut down and go a week at a time, and get the same program, get everything anyone wants, except that the money would not last very long.

Mr. President, it seems to me that is the ultimate meaning of the amendment, and if we wish to ecconomize we might just as well cut the $100,000,000 down to $25,000,000, and proceed with that so far as it will go, and in the meantime we study this question, a question which we never heard of before, a new question. When we had the matter before us early in the present session there was a difference in understanding as to whether we should have $725,000,000 or $875,000,000, so we said we would cut it down $150,000,000, and would let it run on, and if any more were needed we could appropriate it afterward.

We tried that, and we found, and everyone admits, that we need $100,000,000 more to carry out the program. Why not run along with that $100,000,000 at the same rate until the program is carried out, and then let Congress study the question a little more, and hear from the suffering people, who, after the 7th of June, if we stop appropriating, are going to be dying of starvation?

The committee can bring in a report which will fix that. They can bring it in on the 6th of June and say, "Pass this measure without amendment. Let it go this way. You have only 1 day's time in which to do it. You must not debate it. Let it go through without amendment." And Senators, with great, big bleeding hearts for the suffering poor, will say, "That is the only way to save them. Let us do this much now and follow the recommendations of the committee," as we are doing now.

Everyone knows that it will be necessary to provide more than a hundred and fifty million dollars if we are to do the job in the right way. We cannot do it for one hundred and fifty million, in my opinion.

The theory advanced is that we have to have a hundred and fifty million, but we cannot give it to the suffering people now. Let us hold them up, in expectancy, tie them up in the air by a thread, and say, "We will see on the 7th of June whether you can live any longer or get along." And the day before that time comes the committee will come in and say, "Well, it will take twenty-five million to do this. Do not raise it to fifty million, because we have not time. If you debate it and it goes back to the House it will get in conference, and you will not have any time to go on, and therefore these people will starve. Do it now, do it just as the committee says, or do not do it at all."

Mr. President, it looks to me as if this amendment would have us jumping out of the frying pan into the fire.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. Does the Senator from Nebraska mean that the relief program in this country does not need more study?

Mr. NORRIS. No; and I did not say anything of the kind. However, the Senator can study it from now until he is a hundred years old and he will not know anything about it. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRIDGES. Let me tell the Senator something. I probably know as much about this problem as does the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course the Senator does. He knows more than anybody else. God cannot compare with the Senator when it comes to information.

Mr. BRIDGES. I want to tell the Senator something.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator has already told me something.

Mr. BRIDGES. I think I am as fully informed on this subject as is the Senator. I do not reverse myself quite so often as the Senator does, speaking generally.

Mr. NORRIS. That does not make the Senator a god, because I am a fool. The Senator can study this problem until he is as old as Methuselah and he will not know anything about it, unless some party leader tells him what to do. That is the only thing he will know about it. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRIDGES. I never take orders from any party leader. I vote my convictions. It might be wise if someone would tell the Senator what to do. He might be a little more consistent, and perhaps more often correct.

Mr. NORRIS. Suppose it is wise to tell me what to do; the Senator cannot tell me.

Mr. BRIDGES. No; I would not want to.

Mr. NORRIS. No; the Senator would not get to first base. [Laughter.] But if I am ignorant, if I do not know anything about it, if I cannot realize what it is to see suffering humanity down in the ditch and in the dirt, that is not any excuse for the Senator being as ignorant as I am.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. NORRIS. Of course.

Mr. BRIDGES. Does the Senator claim to have a corner on relieving suffering humanity?

Mr. NORRIS. No; I do not have the sole right and I do not claim it. No one would impute that to me except the Senator from New Hampshire. He would impute anything to anyone at any time to suit his own convenience.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] in the nature of a substitute for the joint resolution.

The amendment in the nature of a substitute was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, on Saturday last the Senate confirmed the nomination of Mr. Frederick I. Thompson to be a member of the Federal Communications Commission. As in executive session, I ask unanimous consent that the President may be advised forthwith of that confirmation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the President will be notified.

ORDER FOR ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business today it adjourn until 2:15 o'clock p. m. tomorrow, and that at the conclusion of the funeral services of the late Senator Lewis tomorrow the Senate as a further mark of respect to his memory do stand adjourned.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

AUTHORIZATION FOR SIGNING OF BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, ETC.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that during the intervening time between now and Thursday the Vice President may sign bills and resolutions ready for his signature; that the Secretary of the Senate may receive messages from the House of Representatives, and that all committees may be authorized to make reports on bills, resolutions, and nominations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate adjourn, under the order just made.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned, the adjournment being under the order previously entered, until tomorrow, Wednesday, April 12, 1939, at 2:15 o'clock p. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, APRIL 11, 1939

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, hallowed be Thy name; behold us with Thine eyes, whose power is in their love, and enable our innermost selves to triumph over weak and sinful tendencies. In these times of pressure and disturbance, we pray for the manifestation of the sons of God, for men who have no wasted energies and no contagion of weariness but who are endued with the affirmation of a great faith, for men who walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly but whose delight is in the law of the Lord. They shall be like trees planted by the rivers of water that bringeth forth their fruit in their season. O God, we beseech Thee to enrich our lives by the flowing streams of the River of Life. In the blessed name of Jesus. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by my colleague the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] over the N. B. C. network on the subject of parity payments. The gentleman from Missouri is chairman of the agricultural subcommittee of the Committee an Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday next, after the reading of the Journal, the disposition of business on the Speaker's table, and the completion of the legislative business for the day, I may address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a subcommittee of the Committee on Indian Affairs may sit during the session of the House today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD by including therein a brief discussion by the vice president of the General Motors Export Corporation on Industry's Stake in an Export Market for American Farm Products.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

FOREIGN TRADE

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, the announcement in this morning's press that the administration was about to negotiate barter arrangements with certain foreign countries as a means of exchanging surplus cotton and grains for rubber and tin indicates that at last the administration is about to take a practical and realistic view of foreign trade, such as the Republican minority has long advocated.

In criticizing the present trade-treaty program under which our tariffs on competitive foreign products have been drastically reduced without guaranteeing compensating foreign markets for American surpluses I have contended that the only real justification for foreign trade was to exchange our surpluses for the things we need but do not produce ourselves. Only in this way can foreign trade be carried on to mutual advantage and without injury to domestic agriculture, industry, or labor.

We normally offer a free market for two-thirds of our imports, which are made up largely of noncompetitive products. It is proper that we should require other countries to take our surpluses in exchange for the products we need to buy of them, and which we allow to enter our market duty free.

It has been apparent for some time that the idealistic and economically disadvantageous trade-treaty program was breaking down. Now it is being sabotaged by the administration itself. American farmers have become the most vehement critics of the program, having been "sold down the river" through sharp tariff reductions on foreign farm products without any increased foreign market for American agricultural products being gained. Opposition to the program in Congress is no longer confined to the Republican minority.

The first evidence that the administration realized the failure of the treaty program was when the proposals for export subsidies on cotton and wheat were advanced, which are the very antithesis of the Hull reciprocity program. Next was the imposition of countervailing duties on subsidized German exports, which, while mandatory under provisions of the Republican Tariff Act of 1930, was, nevertheless, inconsistent with the administration's previous policy of leading the way in the reduction of trade barriers. And now comes the last straw—barter—which, like the export subsidy proposal, is directly contrary to the principles of the present reciprocity program and more in line with the bilateral treaty policy which the administration has heretofore strenuously opposed—yes, even condemned.

While the new barter proposal is limited only to the exchange of certain items needed for national defense, the fact is that if it is sound for that limited purpose it is sound as regards our entire foreign trade. The present trade treaties, which involve only mutual tariff reductions, guarantee us no increased foreign markets. Foreign countries are neither obligated to buy our goods or pay us their war debts in return for our surrender to them of our rich home market. Only by barter are definite export markets assured for American surpluses. In my remarks of February 16, 1939, dealing with the trade-treaty program, I called the attention of the House to the fact that despite Secretary Hull's attempts to convert the world to his trade-treaty policy, involving most-favored-nation treatment, most countries were proceeding along the lines of bilateral trading, which the administration has now been forced to accept.

It is of interest to note that if the proposed barter agreements are entered into they will be subject to Senate ratification, as in the case of ordinary treaties. The fact that the present reciprocal trade treaties are not subject to ratification or approval by either branch of Congress has been one of the chief criticisms of the Hull reciprocity program.

The reversal of its foreign-trade policy is just another instance of where the administration has been obliged to retreat from and scuttle a major part of its program because of failure or public repudiation. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein a statement by former President Hoover on the subject of President Roosevelt's foreign policy.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. REED of New York asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Wednesday of next week after the disposition of the legislative business of the day the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] may address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by including therein a brief article written by Paul Mallon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. SECCOMBE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address by the Honorable Graves Williams.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

THE NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, during the last 2 years I have frequently pointed out numerous examples of high-handed and unjustifiable conduct on the part of the National Labor Relations Board. The conduct of this Board has been such as to stir up Nation-wide interest in discovering, if possible, just what ends the Board is serving and what influences are responsible for its decisions. Some time ago I offered a resolution calling for a committee of this House to make a full and thorough investigation of the Labor Board and its officials. As another reason why that resolution should be adopted I want to remind you that—

ABUSE OF THE SMALL-BUSINESS MAN BY THE NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD

Several days ago I called attention to what I believed to be a miserable failure on the part of the National Labor Relations Board in the conduct of a case against the Oil Well Manufacturing Co., of Los Angeles, Calif.

At that time I explained that this was a very small company, having only 12 production employees, and that the filing of a complaint by the Board in the case of one George Falardeau, which was subsequently dismissed because no investigation had been made by the Board, had cost this little company many hundreds of dollars in needless expense.

In that same complaint the company was charged by the Labor Board with also firing Ethan E. Harris because of labor activities.

Here is a summary of what happened: In June 1937 the workers of the plant organized what was known as the Employees Mutual Benefit Association, and as a group held a meeting with a Mr. Clarence White, the president, in his office. They asked an increase of 5 cents per hour for 3 months until the men reached a minimum of a dollar an hour and time and a half for all time over 40 hours per week.

Mr. White told the men that he could not pay the dollar per hour, and the men then left his office. A few minutes later he joined the employees in back of the plant and told them he would grant a 5-cent-an-hour increase, but that it was for them to decide whether they wanted time and a half for over 40 hours or time and a third as they were then getting. He explained that it would be impossible to work the men overtime at a time-and-a-half rate. He thereupon went to his office and the men returned a short time after and told him they would accept the 5-cent-an-hour increase and preferred to be able to work overtime and would accept time and a third for overtime. This all occurred within the period of an hour.

There is no contradictory evidence in the record. White also told the men that it was up to them whether they had an organization or not. He had no interest in the matter. He also told them that no man had jeopardized his position by participating in the controversy. It must be remembered that there were only 12 employees engaged in production at this company. Harris was the spokesman for the men.

There is no evidence, nor was it alleged that White made any effort to interfere with the men's right to organize. Even the witnesses for the Board pointed out that he had never raised any question as to whether they belonged to one union or another.

But the trial examiner, in his intermediate report made April 12, 1938, said that the respondent had discouraged organizational activities, when at the June meeting he stated he preferred to deal with the men individually rather than collectively and that he considered the action of all of them meeting with him mob tactics, and that White later discharged Harris because "in a large part by his resentment against Harris as the personification, in White's mind, of gangster and mob tactics of the association."

Now, at best there is no basis for the conclusion reached by the trial examiner in finding that White discouraged organizational activities by saying that his men were ganging up on him. Three witnesses other than Harris testified that Mr. White at the meeting said he thought the men were ganging up on him by all coming in instead of having a representative or committee. Six other witnesses, all of whom were at the meeting, testified that he made no such statement.

Two witnesses beside Harris testified that White stated a preference for dealing with the men individually, while six testified that he made no such statement.

Now, the respondent, Mr. White, discharged Mr. Harris in July after he had caused the company an actual loss of $190 in some machine metal work he was doing, thereby causing a delay in one of the company's foreign orders. It was shown further that Harris had been absent from work 40 full working days, 10 half days, and on 9 occasions left early during his 10 months of employment at this company.

It was shown that he ate his lunch during working hours and rang in on the time clock and went out on company time and sought employment at another plant in the neighborhood. It was also shown that Harris was warned about his absences and about his work. He was a shell-shocked veteran of the war and was drawing compensation. It was further shown that he made much noise in the plant and Mr. White and the superintendent testified that they considered it dangerous to the other employees to keep him there.

Yet the trial examiner says that Harris was fired for organizational activities when virtually all the workers testified that they knew Harris had ruined the job for which he was discharged. One comes to the conclusion after reading the full transcript of this case that it was the general impression of the workers that Harris should have been fired for poor workmanship. Harris himself expected to be fired for his poor workmanship because he testified that he stated to the superintendent, "If you hear Mr. White is going to discharge me, let me know so I can keep my record clear." The superintendent testified, and it was not denied by any witness, that Harris told him he would not blame Mr. White for discharging him because of poor workmanship. Yet the trial examiner concludes that Harris was fired for organizational activity.

This case presents a most serious problem for the small manufacturer. Mr. White happens to be one of those fellows who has made his the hard way, starting as a mechanic himself, later hiring a helper and going on from there. He rode through the depression with the assistance and indulgence of his creditors and is now on the way back to a point where he is furnishing employment for 23 people. The employees testified that he was most reasonable and considerate in his demands of them.

This employer is fighting this case because of the principle involved. He does not believe it to be for the safety and happiness of the other workers to have a fellow like Harris around, and he so testified. It was conclusively proved that Harris was unreliable, missed many days of work, and ruined a job which caused financial loss to the company.

This employer really cannot afford to fight this case. Unquestionably it has cost him several thousands of dollars in expenses such as the cost of a transcript, lawyer's fees, and traveling expenses to and from Washington to appear before the Board to defend himself. I would venture that this amount of money represents more than a year's profit from his business. Yet he is carrying on because he feels that his rights are being invaded by the unscrupulous action of the Labor Relations Board. And I agree with him. By no stretch of the imagination can I understand how the trial examiner reached such an unwarranted conclusion after reading 490 pages of the transcript. This is just another example of the Labor Board's abuse of assumed authority. We must correct this situation before it is too late. We must protect the small-business man. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LEWIS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial published in the Bellaire Daily Leader on April 5.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

THE LATE HONORABLE WILLIAM O. BARNARD, MEMBER OF CONGRESS

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to report the death of a former Member of this House, the Honorable William O. Barnard, of the Tenth Congressional District of Indiana. Judge Barnard died on Saturday last and was buried on yesterday. I learned of his death only this morning.

Judge Barnard was a Member of the Sixty-first Congress. He was a judge in the State of Indiana for many years and was a practicing attorney during all of his life except when he was holding public office.

His service to his State and Nation was outstanding. He was a good citizen and a man of splendid character. He was one of those fine individuals to whom we can reflect with pride after he is gone.

MR. TREADWAY, THE OPTIMIST

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, we have just listened to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] praise the administration's proposal to exchange American farm products with foreign countries for "rubber and tin," or as he expressed it, "the things we need but do not produce ourselves."

Whenever the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] rises to congratulate a Democratic administration, I am always reminded of the old adage, "Beware of the Greeks when they come bearing gifts."

To say the least of it, his expressions amount to little, if anything, more than damning the administration with faint praise. He is very optimistic in his expression of approval of the exchange of certain farm products produced in this country for foreign goods, so long as those goods do not compete with articles produced in Massachusetts. That is characteristic of him and of the school of thought he represents. He is willing for us to trade with anybody who does not produce goods in competition with his favored manufacturers. So long as our exports are exchanged for goods that are not produced by the tariff barons of New England, the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts becomes a natural-born optimist in expressing his desire for the success of such a program. But let anything be suggested that would break the strangle hold of these tariff barons who have robbed the American consumers, and especially the American farmers, for the last 75 years, and you will hear loud and vociferous protests from the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

He reminds me of the Negro's definition of an optimist.

He said to some of his colored friends, "I is a optimist."

Another Negro asked, "What is a optimist?"

He said, "A optimist is a fellow dat don't give a damn what happens, so it don't happen to him." [Laughter.]

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] is just such an optimist. He is willing to do anything in God's world for the American farmer so long as it does not do the farmer any good whatsoever or take away a penny's profit from the tariff barons of New England; or deprive them of the power to rob and plunder the helpless masses of the American people through the burdensome taxes they now bear in the form of high protective tariffs.

The gentleman from Massachusetts is the ranking Republican member on the Ways and Means Committee, and is living in hope that the country will suffer a political precipitation next year and give his party a majority in the House. If such a calamity should happen, he would become the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means. Then if his party should follow his leadership, the farmers as well as the small-business men and the laborers of the South, the West, and the Middle West would stand just about as much chance to get even the crumbs that would fall from the table as Lazarus did at the banquet of Dives.

Tariffs and monopolies, including the money monopoly that controls our financial system, are responsible for our present troubles. The Republican high protective tariff did more to distort our economic structure and bring on the crash of 1932–33 than all other influences combined. And there is no man in public life more responsible for that condition, so far as ability goes, than the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

He was not only a Member of Congress, but he was one of the ranking members of the Committee on Ways and Means during all the tragic years of the Harding-Coolidge-Hoover regime.

Let us see what was done during that administration and what effect it had. In 1920 the Republican Party coordinated all the elements of discontent and dissatisfaction growing out of the World War, camouflaged their real intentions behind a smoke screen of abuse and misrepresentation, and swept into power by the largest majority any political party had ever received up to that time.

They immediately placed upon the statute books of this Republic the highest protective tariff law ever known in times of peace. A tariff is an indirect tax; it taxes one man for the benefit of another—uses the power of government to enrich favored individuals and favored special interests. It is simply thievery within the law.

They levied tariffs on everything the poor man has to buy, from the swaddling clothes of infancy to the tombstone that marks his last resting place. They actually put a tariff on tombstones, or on the marble from which they are made.

Yet when some of the western Republicans begged for a tariff on cowhides, of which shoes are manufactured in Massachusetts, the Old Guard Republicans from that section of the country voted it down.

They were not willing to give the farmers even the crumbs that fell from the tariff table. They were taking care of the interests that had put up the campaign funds.

One farmer during those years said that he took a cowhide to town and sold it for practically nothing. He then went around to a merchant and bought a hamestring, and paid more for the hamestring than he got for the hide.

One of the ablest men who appeared in this Capitol during those days represented the Fair Tariff League. He showed that the tariff was costing the American people $4,000,000,000 a year, and that of that $4,000,000,000 only $600,000,000 went into the Federal Treasury, while $3,400,000,000 went into the pockets of the beneficiaries of the tariff law—the tariff barons the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] is so anxious to protect.

Those tariffs bled the farmers of this country white; they were compelled to pay so much more for the things they had to buy in proportion to the prices received for the things they had to sell that they soon found themselves on the way to bankruptcy; and when their buying power was destroyed, our economic structure collapsed.

It is true that in order to placate the farmers they showed their contempt for their intelligence by placing a tariff of 42 cents a bushel on wheat, knowing that we were shipping out about 200,000,000 bushels more wheat each year than was being shipped into the country. That was just like building a dam to keep water from flowing upstream. During those years wheat was 10 cents a bushel higher in Winnipeg, Canada, than it was in Minneapolis, Minn., because of the fact that the Canadians had more reasonable freight rates and could exchange their farm commodities for manufactured articles produced in other countries without having to pay the artificially high prices imposed upon our people by the Republican high protective tariff.

They sold war materials that had been purchased by the Democratic administration during the last years of the World War, and which were no longer needed, since the war was over, turned the money into the Treasury, and took credit for reducing the foreign debt to that extent, when, as a matter of fact, the current revenues were not sufficient to balance the Budget.

They also reduced the income taxes in the higher brackets, thereby taking the taxes off of those swollen fortunes that had been made by war profiteers—coined, if you please, from the blood and tears of the suffering men and women of the world.

Not satisfied with that, they paid back hundreds of millions, if not billions, of dollars to the big income-tax payers, even at a time when our economic structure was on the verge of collapse; and in order to gratify the cupidity of certain international bankers, who are now busy trying to drag us into another war in Europe, they refunded the foreign debts, and in doing so reduced the interest rates so far below the rates we were paying on our outstanding bonds that we lost $6,200,000,000 in the transaction.

In other words, they gave a bonus to our European debtors and the international bankers who held their securities of $6,200,000,000 at a time when hungry ex-service men were appealing in vain for the payment of their adjusted-service certificates.

European countries immediately manifested their ingratitude by repudiating the entire debt, being encouraged to do so by these international bankers, who have profited by that repudiation, and denounced the United States as "Uncle Shylock."

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] was very optimistic during those glorious days of what they termed "Republican prosperity," when the very things they were doing were bound to culminate in the economic wreck that overtook us in 1932.

Their high protective tariff laws not only robbed the farmer of everything he made and destroyed his buying power but it provoked retaliation on the part of other countries, and caused them to raise retaliatory tariff walls, impose quotas, inspection fees, import permits, and dozens of other restrictions against our trade, until by 1932 the very map of the world had become, as it were, a barbed wire entanglement of these barriers, behind which world trade had become stagnant and world commerce had become paralyzed.

Our farmers had no buying power, their economic vitality was gone; they had been robbed until they had nothing left. Manufacturing establishments had their warehouses packed with goods they could not sell and our circulating medium through the control of the Federal Reserve System had been reduced below the danger point, while they were financing a jamboree on the stock market, the most gigantic saturnalia of legalized robbery ever perpetrated under the eyes, and with the consent, of a national administration; when every intelligent man knew that the crash was bound to come and that the stocks being offered invariably were not worth much more than the paper they were printed on.

When the crash finally came and left this country in the worst condition it has ever known, something had to be done to save us from revolution.

Whether the present administration's spending program was the proper course or not, certainly the members of the Republican Old Guard should be the last ones on earth to criticize it.

But the shocking thing about it now is that they are gradually making themselves believe they are coming back into power next year, with no intention of relieving the very diseases that produced our present troubles. Instead of that, they would probably attempt to cure them by raising high tariffs higher, as they did during the Harding-Coolidge-Hoover regime, and make things infinitely worse. I am confident that would be the course pursued if the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] could have his way.

Of course, I want to see American farm products exchanged for tin, rubber, and all other commodities. Why limit the exchange to tin and rubber? The gentleman from Massachusetts wants that done in order to prevent the reduction of the tariffs that, as I said, are bleeding the American farmers to death.

We are finding ourselves ingloriously isolated and stewing in our own misery because of our refusal to exchange our raw materials for the finished products of other countries. A manufacturer in England, France, Holland, Germany, Italy, or even Russia, or any other country, can take a carload of manufactured articles, from typewriters to sewing machines, from electric refrigerators to dishpans, to South America, or Central America, or to Canada and exchange them for the very raw materials we produce in this country for approximately one-third or one-half of the price we would ordinarily have to pay for the same articles. In that way the farmers of Central and South America are getting rid of their cotton, their cattle, their hides, their hogs, their dairy products, their sugar, their lumber, and all the other raw materials they produce, and getting approximately twice as much for them, and invariably three or four times as much, in exchange for manufactured articles as the farmers in this country are getting.

And the farmers of Canada are exchanging their wheat, cattle, lumber, and other raw materials for European-made goods in the same way, with the result that the people, and especially the farmers, in Central and South America and in Canada, are prospering all out of proportion to the degree of prosperity enjoyed by the farmers of the United States.

But we cannot exchange our raw materials for their manufactured articles because of the tariff, which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] would preserve; and we never can have uniform prosperity throughout this country as long as these tariff walls exist.

Rather than to give us relief, the beneficiaries of these iniquitous tariff laws would join the international bankers who are trying to kick up a European war and then drag us into it.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] and other tariff advocates from that State tell us they do not want to trade with Germany because of its dictatorship. I have no sympathy with dictators, but I submit it is none of our business to try to regulate the international affairs of other countries.

Besides, the world is run by dictators today—outside of the United States. There is not a democracy in Europe, with the possible exception of the British Empire—if we want to call that a democracy.

There is not a democracy in Central or South America. Every single one of those countries is governed by a dictatorship or by a system of fascism, if you want to call it that, and not by representative government such as we have in the United States.

Spain has now joined the totalitarian states of Europe. Portugal has been with them from the beginning. Every country in South America is settled by Spanish people, who speak the Spanish language, with the exception of Brazil and Haiti.

Brazil speaks Portuguese and Haiti speaks French. Haiti is a Negro country and can have very little influence in the economic affairs of the world. Brazil has recently abolished its republican form of government and established a Fascist system so much like the one now existing in Italy that you can hardly tell one from the other. They not only abolished their senate and house of representatives, but they destroyed every state government.

The people of South America are going to trade with Spain and Portugal, and with Italy, Germany, England, France—or with any other country that will trade with them on reasonable terms. Canada has the British Empire as a market for her raw materials, which she can exchange for manufactured articles of all kinds.

That leaves the United States isolated economically behind her supertariff walls built by the Harding-Coolidge-Hoover regime, while our farmers are selling their products far below the cost of production, and many of them abandoning their farms and seeking the relief rolls.

It is cruel and inhuman to tell the farmers of this Nation that the way to raise prices of what they sell is to plunge this Nation into a devastating war—a war that nobody wants except a few international agitators. The American farmers do not want temporary relief at the sacrifice of the blood of their sons. Another war would probably complete the destruction of our civilization and would undoubtedly wipe out what vestige of democracy, or representative government, we have left. Besides, European nations do not want a war with us, nor do they want a war with each other. If the international agitators in this country will stop their propaganda through the newspapers and over the radio, stop trying to stir up trouble, European differences will be adjusted gradually and the world will move forward into a new era of peace.

If arrangements could be made to give the American farmer the same privileges that are accorded to the Mexican farmer, the Brazilian farmer, and the Canadian farmer to exchange his raw materials for all kinds of manufactured articles, made in foreign countries, then we would have a return of prosperity that everybody could enjoy.

Such a condition will never be brought about if we have to depend upon such "optimistic" statesmen as the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], the Republican leader of the high tariff barons in the Congress of the United States. Like the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], these tariff barons are also optimists, such as the Negro described, who "don't give a damn what happens so it don't happen to them." [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had adopted the following resolution:

Senate Resolution 119

Resolved, That the secretary invite the Members of the House of Representatives to attend the funeral of Hon. James Hamilton Lewis in the Senate Chamber on Wednesday, April 12, 1939, at 2:30 o'clock p. m., and to appoint a committee to act with the committee of the Senate; and be it further

Resolved, That invitations be extended to the President of the United States and the members of the Cabinet, the Chief Justice and Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, the Diplomatic Corps (through the Secretary of State), the Chief of Staff of the Army, the Chief of Naval Operations of the Navy, the Major General Commandant of the Marine Corps, and the Commandant of the Coast Guard to attend the funeral in the Senate Chamber.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 754. An act for the relief of J. G. Mayfield; and

S. 1253. An act for the relief of John B. Dow.

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 155, for immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 155

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of H. R. 5324, a bill to amend the National Housing Act, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 3 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, this resolution makes in order the bill H. R. 5324, to amend the National Housing Act. It is a liberal rule, allowing 3 hours' general debate, after which the bill will be considered under the 5-minute rule. It cannot be charged, by the minority leader or anyone else, that this is a stringent rule.

This bill extends the life of the National Housing Act to July 1, 1941, and restricts insurance on loans to banks, trust companies, and building and loan associations to $2,500, as aganist the existing $10,000 maximum. It also limits the total liability to $100,000,000 and confines loans to 3 years and 32 days.

Section 2 provides a premium charge for insurance hereafter granted, and section 203 limits the aggregate amount of principal obligations of all mortgages insured to $3,000,000,000, subject to increase to $4,000,000,000 with the approval of the President.

The F. H. A. is well on its way toward being self-sustaining. Income from its mutual mortgage insurance system during the next fiscal year will be sufficient to pay its operating expenses and leave a substantial surplus to be added to the insurance reserve funds.

Over 8,000,000 persons—estimating four and a fraction to the family—have been provided with improved housing through the use of private capital under the F. H. A. plan.

Testimony is to the effect that of 360,000 loans made only 425 were later subject to foreclosure, and on these only $160,000 was lost. This is an excellent record.

Approximately 100,000 single-family homes were built under the F. H. A. plan during the past year.

The F. H. A. has been described editorially as the spark plug of recovery. While other industries were lagging, the residential construction industry, stimulated by the F. H. A. amended program of February 1938, showed a remarkable revival. And I have figures to support this statement.

For the first time in history we have an agency, the F. H. A., to which the inexperienced layman may go for guidance and protection when he buys or builds a home. It protects him against usurious interest rates, the second mortgage racket, and all the other discredited devices which contributed so largely to the collapse of the real-estate market in the early thirties.

Real estate boards throughout the country are urging passage of this bill, emphasizing that it not only provides work for thousands, but stimulates the raw material markets and aids business generally.

The minority report criticizes this bill as keeping the Government in the real-estate mortgage business. One of the best replies to that is an editorial in the Chicago Daily Times which points out that the "F. H. A. is based upon a happy blending of government and business," that private financial institutions provide the money, insured by F. H. A., and would-be home owners, real-estate dealers and others, increase the value of buildings, with benefits shared widely by banks with idle capital, building supply dealers and others.

Despite this—

States the Times—

authorization for an increase of a billion dollars in the total F. H. A. insured loans * * * faces a serious fight on the floor.

The answer is given in the same editorial, which points out that—

This apparently incomprehensible circumstance arises primarily from the fact that building and loan institutions throughout the country resent the F. H. A. limitation of 5 percent interest upon such loans and fear that competition for these investments may drive the rates even lower.

I quote further from the editorial:

What is of vital importance, however, is the whole effect of the F. H. A. program. In many ways the whole hope of a deep-rooted recovery of our entire economic system revolves about a sweeping revival of the building industry. In the face of that a temporary 1 or 2 percent difference in the return upon a billion dollars is a ridiculous quibble.

To appreciate the key position held by the construction industry in our hopes for recovery it is necessary to look back over the past a bit. Just to make it a thumbnail sketch, let's stick this side of 1870—about the time the Nation recovered from the effects of the Civil War.

From 1870 to 1914 was a period of tremendous expansion in America. The West had been tied to the East by railroads, and all its vast mineral and agricultural wealth gave a tremendous stimulus to every type of industry. Our population was increasing at a prodigious rate.

All of our energies were at work in building a nation. Cities doubled and redoubled in size. The railroad and shipping industry expanded enormously. Every cent of our available capital was kept at work providing bigger and bigger industrial establishments.

WORLD WAR GAVE US BIG BOOM

Then came the World War. Our industrial pace, after a few months of slump, again was stepped up to an ever-growing capacity to supply fighting nations with war supplies and the rest of the world with goods normally supplied by those at war. This constantly increasing demand for production capacity, extending several years after the war until other nations recovered, again kept all our capital at work—and men, too.

The automobile, with its huge stimulus to steel, rubber, and a score of allied industries, the job of building a million miles of highways, and radio, then picked up the task and carried us along until the formula ran its dizzy course in 1929.

Today the job of building our Nation is basically complete. Population is increasing yet, but at a crawl compared to pre-war days. Other nations are industrially self-sufficient, or approaching it. Foreign markets are tied up with nationalistic jealousies and monetary exchange difficulties. The markets for automobiles and radios are sharply reduced because so many persons already own them.

What, then, is to put idle money and idle men to work? The only giant unsatisfied need, offering hopes of pulling all industry with it, is for new housing. Others may come along. The gradual forcing of greater buying power into many more hands eventually may do the trick. But the immediate hope lies in housing.

F. H. A. is the spark plug of this recovery movement. In Illinois alone the volume of applications for loans has reached $70,000,000 monthly. Nationally the demand is for hundreds of millions. It is utterly inconceivable that Congress could let anything now serve to choke off this growing stream of recovery with all that it means to the Nation.

I want to include in the extension of my remarks a tabulation the F. H. A. has submitted to me, which lists by States the amounts of insured loans for property improvement and insured mortgage loans on small homes. This is a record of splendid accomplishment, long to be remembered, and I recommend that the Members look it over.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time and ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH]?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I do not profess to be an expert in the field of finance; however, I do entertain some pretty well-defined convictions on Government competition with private business. In my candid opinion, the interference of the Government with private industry by competition and otherwise is largely responsible for the unfortunate condition from which our Nation is suffering today.

When the Federal Housing Act was passed it was understood that it was to meet another emergency, and that as a recovery measure its tenure would be of temporary duration; but now we find that it is the aim and purpose of some to make this activity permanent. This is only typical, however.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. I am very pleased to have the gentleman make the statement he just made with respect to Government competition with private industry. May I ask the gentleman what he thinks about the Tennessee Valley Authority as a competitor of private business?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. The Tennessee Valley Authority is based on an entirely different philosophy from that embodied in this proposal.

Mr. MAY. I will withdraw the question if the gentleman wishes me to do so.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I fully understand the object of the gentleman's inquiry, and I am not at all embarrassed thereby.

Once a Government bureau is created it is next to impossible to discontinue it. Those personally benefiting from it are never willing to admit that it has served its purpose; that the emergency for which it was created has ceased to be. And just so long as Congress will continue to extend their authority and grant them funds to carry on their spending mania they will hang on like grim death. This is the history of bureaucracy without exception.

When the original Federal Housing Act came before the House it received practically the unanimous support of the entire membership. It was one of the most popular recovery measures that has come before the Congress. While a great deal of good has undoubtedly been accomplished by this legislation, it seems to me that the act has been greatly abused. Banks and other lending agencies in the country have taken advantage of this act to unload their undesirable mortgages, retaining those which they considered safe and sound.

Mr. SHORT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. SHORT. Is it not a fact that today Uncle Sam is the biggest holder of bad mortgages of anyone in the world?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. That is exactly the case.

Mr. SHORT. Can the gentleman inform the Members of the House how many foreclosures we have had under the H. O. L. C.?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I cannot give the number, but it is my recollection it is around 200,000.

Mr. SHORT. How many foreclosures have we had under the Farm Credit Administration?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I cannot give the gentleman that information.

Mr. SHORT. It would be interesting for the gentleman to give that information.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. It is certainly a large number of foreclosures, I am sure——

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SABATH. I have the figures with reference to foreclosures. I think there have been only 400 out of 1,800,000 loans.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. The gentleman means 400,000, does he not?

Mr. SABATH. No.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I recall that during the last session of Congress it was developed here on the floor that there had been one-hundred-thirty-thousand-some-odd foreclosures.

Mr. SHORT. Unquestionably.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I cannot yield further.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. The gentleman is talking about something else. He is not talking about F. H, A.

Mr. SABATH. This has nothing to do with the F. H. A.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I am opposed to the Government taking over mortgages on existing properties unless it can be definitely established that the owners are in great distress, and only then when the security is reasonably sound. If the Government continues its program of taking home mortgages with little or no discrimination as in the past, it will only be a question of time when the Government will own a large percent of the homes in this country, which manifestly would be a very undesirable situation.

I strongly favor that part of the pending bill which relates to loans for new construction for low-cost housing. I think the Government can do a splendid job in this field. However I am just as strongly opposed to the Government making loans for the reconstruction or reconditioning of large construction such as apartment houses and the like. I do not believe that the Federal Government has any place in this field. In my opinion it has been in this activity that the Government has in the main been imposed upon. The two projects in St. Louis to which the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] referred to yesterday affords an illustration of this abuse.

I hope Mr. Speaker an amendment to the pending bill may be adopted which will preclude a repetition of the St. Louis scandal which I understand is not alone confined to the city of St. Louis. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois desire to yield further time?

Mr. SABATH. No; I do not, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Tennessee desire to yield further time?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT].

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I may desire to use some of my time later.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, since the Government started this business of insuring home mortgages I have been somewhat in favor of the program because I thought it gave an impetus to home construction and helped employment in the building trades. I believe this is one of the activities of this administration which is as free from criticism as any activity of the Government can be. The Federal Housing Administration has met with universal approval throughout the United States. It is my personal opinion that it has been administered honestly, conscientiously, and intelligently. I have great admiration for the personnel of the Federal Housing Administration and believe they are doing a splendid job. There are certain matters pertaining to the administration of the Federal Housing Administration which were investigated and perhaps should be subject to criticism, but that holds true of probably every department of the Government. I am sure any errors or omissions on the part of the Administration are not due to laxity on the part of the Administrator or his personnel or ignorance of the manner in which the job should be done. We have chiselers in all walks of life, and undoubtedly the real-estate chiselers have taken advantage of the situation as they would others. Editorially throughout the United States the press has commented favorably upon the activities of the Federal Housing Administration.

The bill before us continues certain activities of the Federal Housing Administration. There are certain controversial subjects involved, and I shall have to cover them very briefly. First, let me say that the activity of the Federal Housing Administration has been quite extensive. They have insured mortgages under title II to the number of about 363,000, totaling $1,528,000,000. Of these 363,000 mortgages there have been committed, but premiums not being collected on them, 51,000, and there are pending in the Federal Housing Administration about 31,400 applications, making a total volume of business of 395,400 mortgages.

Perhaps I should distinguish between title I and title II. There seems to be some question as to the functioning of the Federal Housing Administration under these titles. The bill is made up of several titles, but we have particularly to do today with title I and title II.

The act now provides under title I that 10 percent of the loans made for modernization and repair of existing structures may be insured. We have always referred to that as the modernization title. Last year we provided that a person with limited means who was to live in the home himself could build a new home under title I, provided the value was not over $2,500. Title I is not popular with the Administration but is more popular, perhaps, than title II with the Members of Congress. We wrote title I back into the act last year from the floor. At the present time the authority to insure these loans under the modernization, repair, and construction loan provision of title I expires on July 1, 1939, or sooner if the President happens to find there is no need for continuing it. We remove this authority on the part of the President and in the new bill extend the time to July 1, 1941. Under the existing law the value of the mortgage for repairs or modernization may be $10,000. Under the pending bill the limitation is set at $2,500 for all kinds of mortgages under title I.

You will recall that under title I there was no premium rate, there was no reserve fund, and it was purely a subsidy. The losses have been approximately 1.8 percent. We have written into the new bill a provision for the establishment of an insurance fund after the payment of administration costs and have provided for an insurance premium of 1 percent to pay administrative costs and to build up a reserve against possible losses. To be sure, the 1 percent will not cover the losses if they continue as they have run since the title has been enacted, but it will be a step in the right direction and it is expected that eventually this activity will be able to stand on its own feet.

In title I as it now exists we have a provision that loans made for rehabilitation after earthquakes, tornadoes, hurricanes, floods, and so forth, which loans should not be more than $2,000, should be insured up to 20 percent. We have put these loans for rehabilitation following floods, tornadoes, and other catastrophes, on the same basis as other loans for repairs, alterations, and modernization.

There is a provision in title I of the existing law whereby we insure up to 20 percent of $50,000 for modernization and repair of hotels, churches, colleges, schools, commercial buildings, and the like, and this provision has been eliminated from the bill.

We have set a time limit within which the modernization, repair, and construction loans may be paid under title I of 3 years and 32 days. This may seem peculiar to you, but the reason for it is that we have sought to authorize the administration to allow the home owner to repay the loan in 36 equal installments.

Under title II we have been insuring existing construction up to 80 percent of the aggregate, and the limitation which we have placed upon the aggregate amount of obligations which the Administration can have outstanding at any time was originally $2,000,000,000, but last year we provided that the President might authorize another $1,000,000,000 if he found it necessary. He did find it necessary, and by Executive order increased the authorization to $3,000,000,000.

In this bill, although a $6,000,000,000 authorization was asked for, we set $3,000,000,000 as the limit, with a provision that if the President sees fit to continue it, if the necessity arises, he may raise the amount another $1,000,000,000, making a total of $4,000,000,000 altogether.

The only limitation on time under title II is limited only by the amount which they have to do business with. We have a controversy about that provision with respect to the insurance of existing mortgages. This bill extends the time up to July 1, 1941, from July 1, 1939, in which the Administrator may insure mortgages on existing construction under the same terms as he insures mortgages on new construction. This is controversial and will be covered in the debate.

We have granted permission to the Assistant Administrator to sign deeds, releases, and discharges without a specific power of attorney signed by the Administrator.

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield at this point?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. SACKS. I would like to make the observation that although we kept in existing mortgages we limited it, as we did the R. F. C., by making the applicant file an affidavit saying he could not get the mortgage from a private source upon the same terms. Is not that correct?

Mr. WOLCOTT. That is correct.

The only manner in which, I believe, we have expanded the activities of the Administration is with respect to the amount which is available under title I. The limitation originally was $100,000,000. The limitation under the new act gives $100,000,000 plus the insurance premiums which have been collected.

I have seen fit personally, and I speak for no one else on the minority side of the committee, to go along with this bill in its entirety. I have gone along with title I for the reason I could see no particular reason why we should force a man, if he wanted a modern home, to move into a new neighborhood. If a man has a home with a certain sentimental value to it, which he can modernize, I do not see why we should force him to move out of the neighborhood in which he has lived, perhaps, for 20 years or more and go to a new location. Title I makes it possible for him to stay in his present location and at the same time have a modern home.

With respect to the insurance of mortgages on existing homes, I have felt if we were to have a well-balanced bill, one that would not, perhaps, demoralize the real-estate market, we would have to continue insuring mortgages on existing construction.

I have no particular interest in this bill other than to see it made a workable bill.

We recommend that section 210 of the act with respect to multiple dwellings be repealed.

Section 207 of the act, which has to do with multiple dwellings, the value of which is not in excess of $5,000,000, we recommend that it be continued with certain limitations. There will undoubtedly be a great deal of controversy concerning the value of the property and the value of the land turned in, but it is my personal opinion that these are matters beside the issue as to whether the Government shall continue to insure mortgages, and I want to stress the fact that during the debate on this bill we should have constantly in mind that the Federal Housing Administration makes no loans.

I wish the membership would not confuse this with other agencies of the Government, such as the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, the Home Loan Bank, and the United States Housing Administration, which do make loans. The Federal Housing Administration makes no loans. It insures loans made by private financial institutions. In effect, it has drawn some of the frozen money and credit out of banks and has made it possible to carry on a home-building program in this country which might never have been available otherwise.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. The gentleman expressed himself very forcefully in the committee about the rackets that had been carried on. Has he any suggestion as to what he can do to prevent these rackets?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes; refer each and every one of them to the Department of Justice under the penalty clauses of the act. I was mistaken at that time with respect to the penalty clauses of the act. In reading over the penalty clauses since then I have found there is every opportunity for the prosecution of any racketeer under this act, and if the Administration has been lax in any particular, perhaps, it has been lax in not referring these rackets and racketeers which have taken advantage of this act, to the Department of Justice for such action as the Department of Justice saw fit to take.

Much has been said in the record of writing up the value of property in respect to the St. Louis project. I do not have any personal interest in St. Louis. I thought that a reasonable explanation was made by representatives of the Administration. Much to my surprise I find that the Congress is not blameless because we wrote into the law in that respect, subsection (c) of section 207, as follows:

To be eligible for insurance under this section, a mortgage on any property or project shall involve a principal obligation in an amount not to exceed $5,000,000, and not to exceed 80 percent of the amount which the Administrator estimates will be the value of the property or the project when the proposed improvements are completed.

In all fairness to the Administration, I think we had better have that in mind with respect to the valuations placed on it.

I anticipate that an amendment will be offered on the floor of this House to provide that in arriving at those estimates the Administrator must find the value of the property previous to the improvements, and that the estimate shall not be greater than the total value of the vacant property plus the improvements. The Administrator at the present time must find in his estimates of the value of the property, not the vacant property, not the fields, not the lot, but the value of the property after the improvements have been put in. I do not have that in mind particularly with reference to rackets. There are rackets, and the gentleman knows that there are rackets, and we all know that there are rackets. There are barnacles on every activity of the Federal Government, and it is our job to create the machinery by which the administrators may remove the barnacles, and I find we have done that adequately under the penalty clauses of the bill.

Mr. GIFFORD. But I am somewhat surprised when a member of the committee says that we are not particularly interested in the St. Louis project, when we read these letters and the number of articles appearing in newspapers demanding a congressional investigation, and is it not the duty of the committee to pay attention to such a thing? Then, I call attention also to the fact that this morning I had handed to me information about a Louisville project which is worse than this.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I know the gentleman's attitude, and I appreciate it, and I am not trying to fight the battle of the Administrator. The Administration means nothing more to me than to any other Member of this Congress. I think this is a worthwhile activity, and I am willing to stand up here and be fair enough, even if it is under a Democratic administration, to say so, because I do believe it, and I do believe this is a well-administered department of the Government, which has been doing a great deal of good.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, and I yield an additional 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York, because I think he is right at this time, and I think he ought to have that additional time and more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Illinois, the chairman of the Committee on Rules [Mr. SABATH], for giving me 5 additional minutes, and I think it is only fair to him that any criticism that I may have, and possibly I shall have ample criticism of the New Deal administration, shall occur during the first 5 minutes of time given me by the Republican side, while in the remaining 5 minutes I shall uphold the bill.

Mr. Speaker, the administration has been in power for 6 years. It has borrowed $20,000,000,000 during that time, and yet it has not solved one single economic problem. We still have 12,000,000 unemployed and many millions more on part time, and we are now coming before the Congress asking for an additional billion of dollars that the mortgages on new homes may be financed or insured up to 90 percent by the Federal Government. I am in favor of this bill, not because I want to be for it but because of the economic conditions that exist in the United States. I would much prefer to have this money loaned, properly loaned, and as it has been in the past, by loaning institutions, without any guaranty by the Government of any kind and without injecting the Government into business, as this bill does. But we face a serious condition in the country, brought on, I believe, at least in the last few years by the unsound and radical New Deal legislation that has destroyed confidence in America. When the President took office on March 4, 1933, he said that the only thing we have to fear is fear. Recently in addressing the Congress of the United States he said that the most important problem to solve now was to get the idle capital in the banks together with the idle manpower and with the idle American wage earners.

That, of course, is the big issue in America. There is idle capital in the banks; there is more money in the banks today than ever before, and there is more idle manpower, and the one thing that stops the idle capital and the idle wage earners from getting together is fear. Fear pervades the land. The man who owns money does not dare invest it. He is afraid. He is afraid of punitive laws, of punitive taxation; he is afraid if he makes any profit that it will be taken away from him.

So, as long as this fear remains in America there will be no flow of capital into industry to expand industry, to turn the wheels of industry, and provide employment for millions of our people looking for jobs at the present time.

So much for my first 5 minutes on the Republican side. Call it partisanship if you will. I call it a mere statement of facts.

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I admit that we had a big depression in 1929, which the gentleman was about to ask me about.

Mr. SACKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I just wanted to head him off. I admit the depression in 1929, but in answer to that I will say that depression followed 8 or 9 years in which we had an abundance of prosperity, and people were employed and made money easily. What I claim now, and I am speaking as a partisan; I claim that this Roosevelt depression has followed the other depression, without any real employment of labor and without any prosperity. Therefore we are forced, in this Roosevelt depression, to do things that we do not approve of at all. I do not approve of the principle of this bill, but I propose to support the bill and I propose to give the reasons why I support it.

Mr. BARRY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. BARRY. Has not this piece of legislation brought more idle money out of the banks than any other one piece of legislation the gentleman can think of?

Mr. FISH. I do not think that would be a very wide admission on my part or any confession, because I do not think this administration has done anything to solve any of our economic problems, but this bill certainly helps the man who wants to build a home. It has, as the gentleman wants me to say, brought a certain amount of money out of the banks into building homes. I do not think there is anything more desirable in America at the present time than to make these facilities available for the building of homes for our wage earners.

Mr. BARRY. I am sure the gentleman will remember last year——

Mr. FISH. I do not think I can yield any further. I have a limited time and want to finish my statement. I believe this bill does promote home building and home owning. If we want to combat communism and radicalism and socialism in America, the best way to do it is to put American citizens in their own homes—owning their own homes and making them home owners. Once our wage earners are home owners you need not fear communism in this country. That is one fundamental reason why I am for this bill.

Furthermore, if any country is worth living in it is the United States of America. It is not worth living in if we are going to continue to have one-third of our population underfed, underclothed, and underhoused. What are we doing in this bill? We are following the experience of other nations—of England, of the Scandinavian countries, of France, and most of the civilized nations which have made available government funds to promote home building and home owning among their people.

The Federal Housing Administration was created in 1934. It has been amended by Congress every single year, 1935, 1936, 1937, 1938, and will be again this year. The act is divided into two important titles. The first title provides for repairs, rehabilitations, and improvements of houses already constructed. Under that title 1,800,000 improvements have been made by American citizens in the homes of this country. Title II provides for insurance up to 90 percent of the full value of new homes or on mortgages made to that amount by loaning institutions. Under title II 360,000 home owners have built their homes and approximately 100,000 new homes were built last year. That is why I feel if we can do anything to bring this frozen money out into the building industry, we should do it. These buildings are constructed under our American system, under our profit system, based upon private initiative and a reasonable profit. This bill upholds our American system, builds homes and provides work, and therefore in this emergency I say to the Democrats I am glad to go along with you. This is one of the few things you have done to bring money out of hiding and to put our wage earners to work, not by direct gifts, but by useful loans with little or no loss. It is not the proper way. It ought not to be done by the Federal Government, but by restoring confidence and doing away with fear. Then the money would come out of hiding in the banks of its own accord and you would not need this bill. This bill is needed because of the New Deal economic failures; but I say to the chairman of the Rules Committee I will support the bill under the prevailing economic conditions. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I agree most heartily with the remarks made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] in the last 5 minutes. I am in utmost accord with those remarks. But I disagree with what he said during his first 5 minutes, namely——

Mr. RANKIN. He usually meets himself coming back.

Mr. SABATH. I cannot say about that. I know that he travels at a pretty high speed, especially when he sees a chance to attack the administration. He is very much of a pattern with the other Republicans in that respect. All of them voice blanket accusations that this administration is responsible for unemployment, blissfully ignoring the record left by the last Republican administration, and overlooking hard facts such as the one that today over 8,000,000 men work who looked in vain for work in 1931 and 1932.

I say to you that if it were not for the political maneuvers of the Republican Party unemployment would be far less widespread than it is today. Cooperation from those who control the Republican Party would have gone a long way toward banishing that problem.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I always yield to my friend from Massachusetts.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I just wanted to ask the gentleman how long did he expect the American people to give him to get those people back to work?

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman must not have heard me when I just said that if it had not been for the willful and deliberate actions of those who control his party, the vested interests and industrial leaders, there would be no unemployment now. Factories were going at full speed in 1935, 1936, and 1937, the steel industry had day and night shifts, Massachusetts' textile mills were working overtime, and we were approaching some measure of the prosperity lost to us by the Republicans.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. What have the Republicans had to do with it since 1936?

Mr. SABATH. I will explain to the gentleman from Massachusetts what the Republicans had to do with it. It all began with an attempt to force repeal of the capital-gains and undistributed-surplus tax, and to defeat the wage and hour bill. Back of it all, of course, was the desire to politically damage the New Deal. There is no question in my mind but that a great many of the lay-offs in the fall of 1937 were called by Republican financial leaders for the express purpose of defeating such legislation as I have just referred to, and of embarrassing the administration. I say to you that the lengths to which those industrialists and others went fall just short of treason.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. What was the administration doing when the gentleman's alleged conspiracy of 1936 was hatched?

Mr. SABATH. It did everything within its power to stimulate business, to put men back to work, and to continue the strides toward prosperity. States and municipalities were encouraged to put men to work, loans for business were made available through the R. F. C., home building was stimulated by the F. H. A. Act, which we shortly will extend for 2 years. Yes; in every possible way the administration sought to escape the depression brought on by Wall Street and Republican financiers which lasted from 1929 until 1933.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman from Massachusetts, the minority leader [Mr. MARTIN], asked how long it was going to take us to get people back to work. I would remind him that it took the Republicans 12 years to get them out of work. We hope it will not take us that long to get them back.

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman from Mississippi mentions a fact the Republicans are trying to forget. I may say, however, that this administration has been cooperating and continues that cooperation with industry and business. I call upon the gentleman from Massachusetts as the minority leader to give the word if he is interested in the welfare of our country, as I think he is, and urge that they desist in their destructive tactics preventing return of prosperity such as we enjoyed during the first 4 years of this administration.

I hope the gentleman from Massachusetts will agree with me in the following statement. Every day we read complaints about high taxation and that the businessmen of the country are afraid to risk their money in enterprise. They fail to mention, Mr. Speaker, that in this country taxes are lower than in any other country in the world.

Mr. Speaker, under this administration conditions are again improving; people are going back to work; and once more I call upon the minority to aid us in enacting legislation to help abolish unemployment and to better the conditions of all our people. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

COMMITTEE TO ATTEND FUNERAL OF THE LATE SENATOR LEWIS

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the committee appointed on the part of the House to attend the funeral of the late Senator James Hamilton Lewis, as provided by House Resolution 157, be increased from 16 to 27 Members.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints the following Members of the House as members of the committee to attend the funeral of the late Senator James Hamilton Lewis: Messrs. SABATH, MCANDREWS, PARSONS, BEAM, KELLER, KELLY, SCHUETZ, ALLEN of Illinois, DIRKSEN, KOCIALKOWSKI, SCHAEFER of Illinois, ARENDS, CHURCH, MCKEOUGH, MITCHELL, REED of Illinois, ARNOLD, FRIES, MASON, BARNES, CHIPERFIELD, JOHNSON of Illinois, MACIEJEWSKI, MARTIN of Illinois, SMITH of Illinois, WHEAT, and Miss SUMNER of Illinois.

ATTENDANCE AT FUNERAL SERVICES OF THE LATE HONORABLE JAMES HAMILTON LEWIS

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 158

Resolved, That the House of Representatives accepts the invitation of the Senate to attend the funeral services of the late Honorable James Hamilton Lewis to be held in the Senate Chamber

Wednesday, April 12, 1939, at 2:30 o'clock p. m., and that the committee appointed by the Speaker of the House to attend the funeral shall act in conjunction with the committee of the Senate to make the necessary arrangements.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

The resolution was agreed to.

TEMPORARY NATIONAL ECONOMIC COMMITTEE

Mr. SABATH, from the Committee on Rules, presented the following resolution (Rept. No. 396), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered printed:

House Resolution 159

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 90, a joint resolution to amend the joint resolution approved June 16, 1938, entitled "Joint resolution to create a Temporary National Economic Committee." That after general debate, which shall be confined to the joint resolution and shall continue not to exceed 1½ hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary, the joint resolution shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the joint resolution for amendment the Committee shall rise and report same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the joint resolution and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

AMENDMENTS TO NATIONAL HOUSING ACT

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5324) to amend the National Housing Act, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5324) to amend the National Housing Act, and for other purposes, with Mr. RANKIN in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for 1 hour and 30 minutes.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, this bill seeks to apply the principle of insurance to loans made upon real property and primarily upon home construction.

The principle of insurance is recognized as sound throughout the business world everywhere. Under this bill, as has been stated but which does not seem to be fully understood, no loan can be made by the Federal Housing Authority. Not only is this the case, but it should be made clear at the outset that the Government has not made any expenditure nor incurred any loss in the liability of the Authority upon the insurance of mortgages.

During the years the Authority has been operating it has insured a total of $1,843,000,000 on mortgages.

The Authority has received applications totalling $2,500,000,000. The total losses incurred under title II of the bill amount to only $160,000 in round figures. There have been only 435 foreclosures under title II of the bill and 232 final dispositions of default mortgages under that title.

The total amount of premium-paying mortgages insured and firm commitments to insure under title II on March 31, 1939, exceeded $1,800,000,000, which money was all furnished by private capital. Of this amount, $1,670,000,000 was on mortgages under section 203, which provides for the insurance of loans on residential structures not in excess of $16,000.

The losses are to be met out of funds accumulated by an assessment levied on lending institutions for the mortgages under the system and an initial fund of $10,000,000 was supplied by the Government. Not one dollar has been paid out of the Treasury to cover losses under title II of this bill. On the contrary the Authority has accumulated profits that have made it practicable to set aside $15,000,000 as an additional fund to the original amount of $10,000,000 authorized as an initial fund for the protection of the obligations of the Authority.

Under title II of the bill there have been insured about $1,670,000,000. The ratio of insurance is about 40–60 between the mortgages insured covering existing property and mortgages insured covering new construction. Under title II the assessment fee originally was not less than one-half nor more than 1 percent. In the act of 1938 the rate was fixed at one-quarter of 1 percent on mortgages not in excess of $6,000. Under the bill before us the rate will be not more than 1 percent nor less than one-half of 1 percent. On new construction of homes not in excess of $6,000, 90 percent of the mortgage may be insured and under existing law the rate to be charged is one-fourth of 1 percent. The bill would amend this provision to permit a charge of not less than one-half nor more than 1 percent.

On construction between $6,000 and $16,000 the amount of mortgages that may be insured is 80 percent and the assessment fee one-half of 1 percent.

On houses where the value does not exceed $10,000 but does exceed $6,000, the 80-percent limitation, and the one-half of 1 percent premium assessment are applied to the amount of the mortgage between $6,000 and $10,000. On all mortgages above $10,000, there is 80 percent for the entire amount and one-half of 1 percent premium assessment under existing law. Under the provisions of this bill the insurance fee may be raised to 1 percent.

The interest rate limit is 5 percent. That is the maximum charge. Except where it is found that in certain areas the mortgage market demands a higher rate, in which case it may be fixed at 6 percent. In practice the rate has averaged less than 5 percent. Recently a large lending institution in New York City has advertised seeking loans of this type at 4¼ percent.

Under the permanent provisions of this bill the Government is absolutely protected against the danger of loss.

Under title II of this bill the provision would be amended to provide that loans on existing construction may be insured until the first of July 1941. The provision for insurance of loans covering new construction would be made permanent law.

Another temporary provision is embraced in title I of the bill. This provision authorizes insurance of loans for repairs, alterations, and improvement of existing structures, and for building new structures upon rural real properties. It authorized the insurance of loans up to $2,500 for the construction of new homes and for repairs, alterations, and improvements of existing structures.

The present law limits the amount of loans to be insured covering repairs, alterations, and improvements on existing structures to $10,000, and fixes the amount of loans on new homes to be insured at $2,500.

The bill now under consideration would limit the insurance of all loans to the amount of $2,500 and would limit the duration of insurance of loans to 3 years and 1 month, except loans for new construction. On new construction loans insured there is no limitation as to maturity.

Under existing law no insurance premium may be charged. The bill now before us provides that an insurance fee may be levied on all loans insured but not in excess of 1 percent per annum. Under title I of the bill losses have been sustained in the amount of approximately $12,900,000. Those losses accrued out of an operation that covered 1,800,000 loans of all types. The greater portion of those losses came through the insurance of loans other than those made for home construction.

The account down to date indicates that the total losses will be reduced as the transactions are completed, and it is confidently estimated by those in charge of the administration of the law that the 1-percent assessment fee in the bill now before the House will amply safeguard the Authority against losses under title I in the future.

Under title I rural as well as urban home construction may be financed under a plan which permits the Authority to insure mortgages on such construction.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. It is provided in this bill that title I shall be continued with respect to the underwriting of loans on homes up to $2,500?

Mr. STEAGALL. Homes and alterations.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. But not for furnishings?

Mr. STEAGALL. Not anything except such as becomes a part of the real estate, and in no instance in excess of $2,500. The extension of title I extends only until July 1, 1941.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. But the time of repayment has been extended?

Mr. STEAGALL. No. The practice has been to make maturities run about 3 years, but we have given the Authority a free hand with reference to insurance of loans for home construction. In the past such loans have had maturities of about 7 years.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I wish the period could be made longer than that. I may say to the gentleman I have found that in my State a good many young people who are establishing homes have taken advantage of title I of this act to borrow up to $2,500, but many of these young people starting out in life are unable to make so large a payment monthly as is now required in the limited time.

Mr. STEAGALL. Under the provisions of this bill the Administration may liberalize the regulations to meet the situation the gentleman has in mind.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I am delighted to hear you say that, for I believe it will be a great thing for such prospective home builders.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Even though that were the case, after 2 or 3 years there is no reason they should not put a title I loan under title II.

Mr. STEAGALL. That is true.

I do not know of any activity upon which the Government has embarked in the effort to stimulate private investment, the expansion of employment, and general economic improvement that is more desirable or better safeguarded against the danger of loss than the service that has resulted from the act creating the Federal Housing Administration. It has done a great work. It has aided home building. It has helped to improve and stabilize real-estate values. It has brought about an enlargement of the consumption of materials used in construction. It has brought idle money into circulation. It has accomplished splendid social good in making it possible for many citizens to become home owners who under former conditions could never have done so.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. LEAVY. I am in favor of the measure and intend to support it, but I note there is new language in it with reference to the premium charge for insurance, with a maximum of 1 percent fixed for that purpose. I am wondering why the committee found it necessary to report a bill requiring that the insurance premium charge be increased over what it previously was.

Mr. STEAGALL. It is highly desirable that the Administration be amply protected against loss. Once we come here with a bad showing in that respect, our whole plan will be jeopardized by opposition against the legislation on that ground. We are undertaking to make this an insurance institution which will pay its way and render this service so highly desirable without loss to the Government.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. I always enjoy listening to the gentleman from Alabama and his explanation of this bill has been very complete, but there is one phase of this whole subject that has not been touched. I am wondering whether or not the gentleman can give us information at this time about the problem I have in mind, which is the question of paying the prevailing rate of wage on construction undertaken under loans the Government guarantees or insures. In our State hundreds of thousands of houses are being built and from the information I have the prevailing rate of wage is not being paid in their construction. I believe this might be an appropriate time to indicate the position of the House with regard to the payment of the prevailing rate of wage.

Mr. STEAGALL. Of course, I may say to my esteemed friend, the question he raises will naturally arise when we consider the bill under the 5-minute rule. There is no provision on that subject in the bill at this time. Let me say now that as far as I am informed the Government has never undertaken to determine for a private institution what its practice should be with reference to the employment of labor. This is not an instance in which the Government engages in the construction of buildings; if it were, the question of the wages to be paid under the precedents that have been established by legislation heretofore enacted would, it seems to me, be one properly to be considered. What we are attempting to do by this proposed legislation is to insure loans and put some activity into this line of business.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. I know the Government is not actually doing the work, but this work is made possible because of the guarantee of our Government. The President and this Congress have indicated time and time again that we are eager to pay a living wage. If we indicate by placing such a provision in this bill that we advocate and urge the payment of the prevailing rate of wage, we will be doing a great deal toward elevating the standard of living through paying a fair wage to the workers.

Mr. STEAGALL. Let me say to the gentleman that the Government is not bearing the burden of this insurance. The burden rests upon the individual borrower who is undertaking to build a home. My view of the matter is that he is entitled to solve the economic difficulties that confront him in his own way without any effort on our part to hamper him.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield to my colleague from Alabama.

Mr. HOBBS. Am I correct in construing this bill as permitting the Government to insure a loan upon a farm home as well as on a city home?

Mr. STEAGALL. Of course, under other provisions of the bill the benefits are necessarily limited to urban activities, but under title I and title II, which provide for individual home building, the same benefits are granted to rural home builders that are granted to citizens in urban communities.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I wish to go back to the question asked by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEAVY] and ask the chairman whether it is true that section 2 of the bill, fixing the 1-percent premium charge, applies only to title I or does it apply to title II as well?

Mr. STEAGALL. Under title II the premium is not more than 1 percent nor less than one-half of 1 percent on the amount of the principal obligation.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and thirty Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE].

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, your Committee on Banking and Currency is agreed as to certain parts of this bill. They differ in judgment as to other parts of the bill. If gentlemen desire to acquaint themselves with the points at issue by reading, they may find in the report of the committee at the desk by the door the views of the minority set forth very briefly, so you can read them almost at a glance and thus acquaint yourself with the differences which will be called to your attention when the bill is under consideration under the 5-minute rule.

In the general debate it may be wise for me to refer to some of the history behind this bill. With the coming of the depression in 1932, one of the measures for relief was the home loan bank bill. Two years later there was added to the functions of those charged with the home loan bank bill the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. The two of them worked as one, and their head is Mr. John H. Fahey. In that year of 1934 it was thought best to create another agency, the Federal Housing Administration, and the head of that is Mr. Stewart McDonald. Also, there has been created the United States Housing Authority, the head of which is Mr. Nathan Straus. They are three capable, able, competent gentlemen. I have no criticism to make of any one of the three and no complaint about the conduct of their affairs, but I want you to understand what their achievements indicate as to the growth of bureaucracy in this country. Each one of these three agencies was started as a temporary institution. There was no thought then of permanence for any one of the three. They were brought forward under the stress of circumstances in order to help save the day for the country and to return us to prosperity.

Now, what has happened? Mind you, it is 7 years since the first of these agencies was established, 5 years since the F. H. A. was established. As the time for their ending approached, Congress saw fit to add 2 years to their life, and then when that 2 years had nearly expired, added 2 more years. Now you are asked to extend, in part, one of these agencies for 2 years and in some of its functions for 25 years. Yet, Mr. Chairman, we find that this bill contains one important section to the continuance of which the head of the Federal Housing Administration so firmly objected that when he drew the bill he left it out. Now your committee has put it back. The very man who knows most about it, who has operated it, who is responsible for it, had said it ought to go out. This committee has put it back.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Certainly.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. I think the gentleman is mistaken. The Administrator said it should go out unless some provision was made for it to pay its way, and we have provided a way by having a 1-percent premium.

Mr. LUCE. The gentleman and I disagree as to the interpretation of the Administrator's words.

There is another provision that is extended for 2 years against, I am convinced, the good judgment of all the committee. I may be wrong on that. I think that section is in for other reasons than the wisdom of continuing the work.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. LUCE. Yes.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. It is my understanding that the amendment putting title I back in the bill was unanimously passed by the committee. Is that true?

Mr. LUCE. I was sitting with another committee concerned with a more important problem and did not share, I think, in the vote or know its nature.

The second provision relates to existing mortgages.

In November of 1937 the President sent us a message on the subject of housing. The President, your President, you on my right, sent you a message in which he said:

> In connection with these changes I would suggest that the Congress eventually limit the insurance of mortgages to houses on which the application for mortgage insurance is approved prior to the beginning of construction.

He said "eventually." Of course, that did not limit it to any specific time; but he said you should get out of that business. Ah, but the head of the Federal Housing Administration went further. Mr. Stewart McDonald, that same day, I think it was, said:

> We desire to eliminate that old financing. After July 1, 1939, the Federal Housing Administration will drop out of existing construction, except houses which it has previously insured and of which it may be in possession and have to accept after foreclosure.

Mr. McDonald said you were to drop out of that thing in June of the present year. The President said eventually you were to drop out of it.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Yes.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Whence, then, did the suggestion of this change come, which the gentleman says was advised against by the administration?

Mr. LUCE. Not being extensively acquainted with the workings of the administrative mind, I could not disclose who suggested that change.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. The gentleman is on the committee, and I presumed he was informed as to the situation or I should not have troubled him.

Mr. LUCE. I have a strong suspicion that only the Democratic Members were informed of the source of the proposal for change. However, I do not want any politics in this thing. Our Committee on Banking and Currency has never been a partisan committee. This is not a partisan proposal.

You bring me to the next consideration. You have here a difference of opinion, a strong difference of opinion, between two Democratic agencies of this Government, one headed by Mr. Fahey and the other by Mr. McDonald, and in deciding on this particular question you will cast your votes either for Mr. McDonald's view of for Mr. Fahey's view. You will not cast them for a Republican view or a Democratic view.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. LUCE. Certainly.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. My question was not, I had hoped, to be interpreted as a partisan question, but as one that went to the merits of this case. My inquiry was not intended to arouse partisan discussion but to ascertain how this provision which, the gentleman tells us, had been very distinctly opposed by those in charge of the Housing Administration had come into the bill.

Mr. LUCE. From the Federal Housing Administration.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. How it happened to get into the bill.

Mr. LUCE. It appeared in the bill when it was introduced. Title I was not in the bill when originally drawn.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Was not this bill written by the committee?

Mr. LUCE. Title I was inserted by the committee. When the first draft of the bill was introduced it did not contain title I.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Certainly.

Mr. RABAUT. Is it not true that the H. O. L. C. agency deals with old homes, homes that have been standing for some time, and that this proposed legislation deals with new construction?

Mr. LUCE. It ought to deal with new construction, and with new construction only, but it does deal also with old construction.

Mr. RABAUT. The gentleman means title I?

Mr. LUCE. Title II. I have gone by title I.

Mr. RABAUT. Title II deals with repairs?

Mr. LUCE. No.

Mr. RABAUT. Title I deals with repairs?

Mr. LUCE. If the gentleman will wait a moment I shall excoriate title II, so that the gentleman will understand it. Let me get that off my chest.

Mr. RABAUT. The gentleman is a member of the committee, and I am asking for information.

Mr. LUCE. Very well. I am about to give it to the gentleman.

Mr. RABAUT. I would like to have it.

Mr. LUCE. I am talking now about existing mortgages, the insurance of houses built before the loan was made—a proposal that does not importantly help build new houses but does help insurance companies and other people to unload their cats and dogs on the Government. They not only want to do that now but they want to do that indefinitely. They want to be safeguarded in the real-estate business; and that is where you will find the meat in the coconut. They want to be insured against losses from bad loans. The property is appraised, and I will not criticize the appraisal; but all houses deteriorate, and presently they are worth hardly the cost of tearing down. That has been the curse of the mortgage business in this country. The lenders have waited until too late. Even the Home Owners' Loan Corporation was too liberal perhaps in the first years of its conduct. It turns out that one out of six of all the houses it has handled came back on its hands, with an average loss of about $700 on an average loan of $4,160.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I yield; certainly.

Mr. PATMAN. Does the gentleman consider that quite reasonable, in view of the fact that all those homes were delinquent in payment at least for years, and they all owed at least 2 years of taxes before the Home Owners' Loan Corporation took them over?

Mr. LUCE. I am not complaining of that at all. I am not criticizing it. I am citing it simply as proof that homes deteriorate; that it is the most dangerous field of investment open to any man.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Asking the question directly, do I understand that Mr. Fahey and the Home Owners' Loan Corporation favored this provision that is now in the bill, to which you object?

Mr. LUCE. No. Mr. Fahey objects strongly to this provision.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Well, I ask again, Where did this provision come from? Who favored it? It does not appeal to me, but who favored this provision?

Mr. LUCE. I can only reply the general supposition is that the proposal came from Mr. Stewart McDonald, and that it was approved by the President. That is the only surmise. I do not know.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. I understood Mr. McDonald said he did not favor it.

Mr. LUCE. No. 1 he did not favor.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Oh, he has changed his mind?

Mr. LUCE. He has changed his mind on the second one. Please do not get these things mixed up.

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. In just a moment. We are talking about two different things here. Title I is the small-fry section.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. I understood that thoroughly.

Mr. LUCE. It is the bill under which the little fellow pays 9.72 percent on his loan. In other words, in respect of title I the Government is a glorified pawnshop. That is the thing the committee put back. Now, the other thing, the existing mortgages is the one that the author of the bill tried to make permanent.

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I yield.

Mr. SACKS. I would like to call the gentleman's attention to this fact. When the gentleman talks about losses that might happen under existing mortgages in title II, I call his attention to the experience of Mr. Brigham, president of the National Life Insurance Co. of Vermont, in which he said that his company placed 5,777 residence loans for an investment of over $27,000,000; that the average loan was $4,800. Out of that amount in 4 years he had 16 foreclosures, 13 of which he disposed of at a profit of $140, got all their money out, and the balance, 3, are still in process of being straightened out.

Mr. LUCE. Good for him. Great work.

Mr. SACKS. And that was all under the F. H. A.

Mr. LUCE. But I happen to be myself a director of a mutual insurance company—not one of the big ones, but sound and doing a good business, and every directors' meeting I have attended in the course of the last 3 years has spent two-thirds of its time trying to get rid of sour mortgages.

Mr. SACKS. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. LUCE. Certainly.

Mr. SACKS. The gentleman will admit that the National Life Insurance Co. of Vermont is a conservative company?

Mr. LUCE. That is the reason they can make such a good record.

Mr. SACKS. They took 80 or 90 percent loans under this act. They took 5,777 residence loans in the last 4 years with Government insurance under the F. H. A., and all they have had so far is 16 foreclosures out of 5,777 loans, 13 of which have brought them back their money with $140 profit, and 3 of which are now in the process of being completed. Is that a record under this act?

Mr. LUCE. I commend Mr. Brigham.

Mr. SACKS. That is found on page 200 of the hearings.

Mr. LUCE. I commend Mr. Brigham for his good judgment, which in other matters he showed also while a Member of the House. I hope his company will be always equally well managed.

Mr. SACKS. Did he not say that the F. H. A. was the finest thing ever created to help put money out of the banks and insurance companies so it would start the wheels of real estate going again because of its low interest features and its insurance features to the big banks, savings companies and life-insurance companies?

Mr. LUCE. He said that, Mr. Chairman, but I have just given the figures of the Government agency where one-sixth of its loans went sour.

Mr. SACKS. That was the H. O. L. C., headed by Mr. Fahey, who is opposing this bill.

Mr. LUCE. There is no connection between the two facts, in my judgment.

Mr. SACKS. But the gentleman said that Mr. Fahey and Mr. McDonald were the issues in this matter, and that those who believed in Mr. Fahey would vote against this bill, because he opposes it, and those who believed in Mr. McDonald would support it. If we look at the record of the two gentlemen, we will find that one-sixth of the loans made by the H. O. L. C. under the leadership of Mr. Fahey are in default, and on the Government's hands, while the F. H. A., under Mr. McDonald, have less than 1 percent.

Mr. LUCE. Good for Mr. McDonald. Neither of those statements has anything to do with the reason I made my statement to the effect that there is nothing more dangerous in which to invest than houses.

Mr. SACKS. I call attention to the fact that whereas the reason the gentleman said we ought to consider it was because Mr. Fahey appeared before the committee and testified against it, and Mr. McDonald for it; if that is the reason, looking at the record of these men, I certainly would prefer to take Mr. McDonald's word for it rather than Mr. Fahey's.

Mr. LUCE. Has Mr. McDonald ever told the committee or anybody else that houses were a prudent investment?

Mr. SACKS. He did. Mr. McDonald appeared before the committee and said that houses were a prudent investment.

Mr. LUCE. That is contrary to the experience of every man who has ever had the misfortune to own a rented house.

Mr. SACKS. In the gentleman's own section there are houses 150 years old that are still worth their value.

Mr. LUCE. Yes; and I am trustee for a property that is only 50 years old, the value of which today is only one-third of what it is taxed for.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. McDonald is not very old in the game, but he has already experienced the fact that what he forecloses is on the average of $700 on these small units.

If the gentleman will permit a further observation let me suggest in answer to the gentleman from Colorado, to help the gentleman if I can. He wants to know why we should continue insurance on existing mortgages. The answer is: You must sell the old automobile before they will buy a new automobile.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. McDonald also gave the committee to understand that were he allowed to continue he would in time control—he did not like the word "control"—but have charge of one-third of all the mortgages on houses in the United States. That is what he will have if he is to continue this agency.

This agency employs 4,100 people. It was created only 5 years ago, and 4,100 people work in this one agency. You appropriated the other day $12,000,000 for the support of these 4,100 people. They all want to keep their jobs, they all want to see their department grow bigger, they all want to endure, and survive, and last till kingdom come. This is why I say it is time it is stopped. In the days of resuming specie payment somebody said that the way to resume was to resume. In the same spirit I tell you that the way to stop is to stop. Here is the chance to do it, here is the opening recommended by those who have studied this thing, though some of them have changed their minds. What a loss it would be individually to them perchance—but that is unkind, I will withdraw that, I will not say there is any personal motive in this at all; but it is the ambition, the purpose, and the desire of every new agency of government to live. It thinks it is doing better work for humanity than any other agency. That is only human nature. So they come here one after the other asking for more life, feeling that their particular endeavor is the one that ought to be encouraged, the one for which there should be larger appropriations, and extension of existence.

This agency, contrary to all that we have learned, is not the wise thing in a republic. It is an interference with private enterprise. This organization could not flourish if it did not offer customers more for the money, or the same thing for less money. It is a competitor with private interests, particularly it is a competitor with those organizations that are cooperative in nature, the building and loan associations. We have sought to encourage these associations, even creating Federal ones here and there throughout the country. We have made great progress in teaching our citizens the virtue of thrift; yet today they see their welfare endangered by the competition of Government. Nobody can compete with a government that can borrow for 2 percent and lend for 5 percent. No private institution can have enduring life in the face of that sort of thing.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I was very much interested in the observations made by the gentleman on the opposite side of the House a few moments ago with reference to the results of this program. Will the gentleman please comment on these official figures which have been furnished to me by the Government department? In 1921 our people in this country had $21,500,000,000 in savings, to a great extent in the savings and loan associations of this country. During the decade from 1920 to 1930 they were building and financing from 400,000 to 700,000 dwelling units per annum. Today our people have savings very close to $51,000,000,000. This Federal Housing program has been in operation during 1935, 1936, 1937, and 1938. With all the building that has been done of dwelling units I am informed by Government agencies that in 1935 only 144,000 homes were built; in 1936, 282,000; in 1937, 289,000; in 1938, 347,000.

Has this program induced the building of homes? And in thinking about this question let us bear in mind the fact that today when we have two and one-half times as much savings as we had in previous decades, and every day the percentage of savings and loan associations is being crowded out of the picture through the operation of agencies of this type, yet the number of dwelling units being built is only about half. Will the gentleman comment on that observation?

Mr. GORE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I yield.

Mr. GORE. The figures which the gentleman from Michigan cited for the years 1935 to 1938 seem to be the best answer to his interrogatory.

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I yield.

Mr. SACKS. Will the gentleman from Michigan give us the figures from 1931 to 1934? Find out how much building went on during those years and the bearing it had to the amount that went on since the act was passed.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If the gentleman will yield further I shall be glad to submit the figures from 1918 to date.

Mr. SACKS. How about those 4 years?

Mr. CRAWFORD. They will be included.

Mr. SACKS. Will the gentleman give us the figures?

Mr. CRAWFORD. The fact is that the people of this country who have savings are being crowded out of the picture. I shall be glad to submit, if I can secure permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD, a 21-page statement dealing with statistics involving this whole picture insofar as Government activities are concerned.

Mr. SACKS. Will the gentleman read the figures for 1931, 1932, and 1933?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do not want to take the time of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. SACKS. It would be interesting in the light of the figures from 1934 on.

Mr. GORE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. If the gentleman does not want to ask me about figures.

Mr. GORE. If the gentleman will answer the question in reference to those figures, will he also comment on the difference in interest rate charged on these loans?

Mr. LUCE. The hands on the dial of the clock are traveling too rapidly for me to engage in that discussion.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield 12 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I am exceedingly anxious to see that title I is extended for 2 more years. This bill, when first introduced in the House, did not carry title I; and I introduced an amendment, which was unanimously adopted by the committee, to extend this title.

The purpose of title I is for improvements and repairs to existing homes and building new homes and agricultural buildings in an amount not to exceed $2,500. I think we should see to it that the people in the rural sections and small towns should have the same financial help from the Federal Housing Administration as those in the large cities.

In my own State, as of December 31, 1938, 22,351 Georgia families had been benefited by loans under this title.

While such loans are insured by the Federal Housing Administration, the money is advanced by private lenders to local people for construction and improvement of housing by local enterprises employing local labor and using materials purchased locally.

We all recall what happened to the housing industry during the latter half of 1937. As a result of its stagnation Congress, again looking to the housing field for improvement in general business conditions, considered at the extra session in 1937 a number of new amendments to the National Housing Act to liberalize its provisions in order to encourage people to build homes and modernize and repair. I offered one of the amendments at that time to extend title I, which was liberalized to include construction of small homes up to the value of $2,500 in urban and rural sections.

Millions of our people have been aided in repairing and building homes and will continue to receive aid in repairing and building homes and agricultural buildings through character loans insured by the Government, who, otherwise, would never have had the opportunity to do so, and at the same time the ratio of losses to the large amount of business has been negligible. The loans and benefits under title I have and will benefit a large number of people in very modest circumstances, and especially a large class of farmers who are helpless in securing benefits direct from local lending institutions without Government aid.

There appeared before our committee representatives of the building industry, representing national organizations such as paint, roofing, real-estate boards, lumber dealers, plumbing and heating supplies, and others, urging Congress to extend title I, stating, in effect, that there is still millions of dollars' worth of modernization, repair, and small construction business that can go forward with such small encouragement on the part of the Federal Government.

Many Members of Congress have seen the report recently issued by Colonel Harrington, W. P. A. Administrator, in which it is disclosed that in a survey made by the W. P. A. of 8,000,000 American homes, 60 percent were found to be in need of either major or minor repairs and improvements.

It is my understanding that the average repair loan under title I runs around $402.

Title I of the National Housing Act permits the Federal Housing Administrator to insure lending institutions against loss up to 10 percent of the amount of loans made for property improvement purposes in both urban and rural communities.

These loans are different from the long-term home-mortgage loans under title II. They are shorter term and require generally no security and are usually for the purpose of modernizing, repairing, or altering existing houses, business properties, and farm buildings.

Title I was the first part of the National Housing Act to get under way in 1934. Through the end of 1938 more than 1,800,000 of these loans, with a total face value of about $735,000,000, had been insured by the Federal Housing Administration. Three hundred and seventy-five thousand of these loans amounting to $170,000,000 had been insured since the act was amended in February 1938, reviving the provisions of title I which had previously expired.

These title I loans have enabled hundreds of thousands of families to make necessary repairs on their homes and farms and to make them more modern and livable. Many families of modest income were unable to obtain credit from lending institutions because they did not have sufficient collateral. The National Housing Act made it possible for these people to obtain loans on the basis of character alone. This has proved a noteworthy adventure in finance, since losses have been very small as compared with the volume of lending transacted. The Government's faith in the character of the people has been amply justified.

Claims paid on contracts for insurance held by lending institutions numbered at the end of December 1935 about 85,000 for an amount slightly exceeding $19,000,000. A substantial part of this amount has been collected by the F. H. A. since these insurance claims were paid. It seems probable, in fact, that ultimate losses on this amount will be only about 2½ percent as compared with the 10 percent of insurance coverage provided by the F. H. A.

One other thing which title I, as amended February 1938, has made possible is loans up to $2,500 for the construction of new small homes. Thousands of these have been built in localities not eligible for mortgage loans under title II.

Another thing these title I loans have accomplished is the aid to small-business men engaged in the distribution of building materials. Large manufacturers have had plenty of credit in the past, but small dealers were often at a disadvantage in marketing building supplies because of lack of capital. Now, with Government insurance of loans for repair and modernization purposes, these small-business men have been able to compete on equal terms with the larger ones.

In extending title I we have made some changes in the limitations. For instance, we have established a limit of $2,500 on all title I loans because it was shown by witnesses who appeared before us that much less than 1 percent of the number of title I loans had exceeded $2,500 in the way of repairs. We also limit the improvement and repair loans to 3 years and 1 month, as evidence shows that 97.2 percent of all title I improvement loans in the past have been for 3 years or less. On loans for new structures for residences or agricultural purposes the commitee thought it desirable not to limit the time for payment, because the average amount of such a loan is higher than the average repair loan, and therefore a limited payment period would make the payments prohibitive.

Of particular interest to Members from the rural districts will be the amendment which includes new construction for agricultural purposes. This is designed to take care of new barns, corn cribs, silos, and so forth, up to the amount of $2,500. It is the only way that a farmer having a small mortgage on his property can finance farm buildings with a character loan over a period of years. The people in the rural sections and small communities are unable to have their loans for homes and agricultural buildings amortized except as provided in title I of this bill. I was anxious to see the amount for construction of new homes increased, but it seemed it was not possible to do so at this time.

Title II of the National Housing Act has been very successful since the new amendments were passed and took effect the first of last year, but we must provide some benefit to the farmers and citizens of small towns, and title I has been the answer to this problem.

I certain hope that the provisions of title I will be enacted.

Under the provisions of title I in the bill the eligibility of loans is limited to financing the improvement or repairs of existing structures and in building new residences and agricultural buildings.

While, as I stated, the loss to the National Housing Administration has not been great, a large percent of the loss was from equipment loans, such as refrigerators, washers, ironers, cooking stoves, scales, counters, showcases, and so forth, which are not now eligible under the provisions of this title.

Title I also authorizes the Administrator to fix a premium charge not to exceed an amount equivalent to 1 percent per annum of the net proceeds of the loan, and this is thought to be sufficient to take care of all losses and expenses of the F. H. A.

TITLE II RELATIVE TO F. H. A. INSURANCE OF EXISTING HOME MORTGAGES

Most of the discussion about the current bill seems to be over the question whether or not the F. H. A. should continue to insure mortgages on existing construction, as well as on new construction. Now, often, the only way in which a man with a large family can acquire better living quarters is by buying an existing house. The average brand-new house is either too expensive or too small for many families of moderate income, and many times the only decent shelter they can obtain is existing houses that have depreciated somewhat but still retain sound value.

The fear seems to be that the F. H. A. is going to insure mortgages on all kinds of old houses. But that would be plainly contrary to the purpose of the law and the F. H. A. regulations. The F. H. A. standards for mortgage insurance are established on a sound basis for existing homes, as well as for new houses. They do not permit the insurance of a mortgage loan on a house which is not in good condition. Moreover, the loans the F. H. A. has insured on existing construction have involved many millions of dollars of repair and modernization work. Thus, the provision for insurance of mortgages on existing construction has made a great contribution to recovery and employment.

And then there seems to be some fear because the F. H. A. plan makes it possible for people to refinance their old mortgages. There is a difference, of course, between insurance of mortgages to finance the purchase of existing houses and the insurance of mortgages to refinance outstanding or maturing mortgages. But I do not see why a man who bought a home 5 or 10 years ago and has had the courage, thriftiness, and good fortune to keep that home throughout the depression without having to have his mortgage refinanced directly by the Government through the H. O. L. C. should now be denied the privilege of obtaining the advantages of lower interest rates and better terms through F. H. A. insurance. These mortgage loans on a long-term basis, paid off easily month by month, are available to people who want to buy new shelter, but apparently there are some persons who think they should not be available to home owners who have had mortgages on their homes for some time, paying in many cases as much as 7 and 8 percent or even higher rates of interest.

As you know, the H. O. L. C. no longer makes loans. Some of the loans are being foreclosed or threatened to be foreclosed. I am quite sure the H. O. L. C. will not be disposed to oppose these borrowers in refinancing their loans, especially in view of the fact that the H. O. L. C. loans are Government loans, and, too, under foreclosure the property would not bring the loan value.

You understand the F. H. A. does not loan money but only aids lending institutions in loaning local money, as distinguished from the H. O. L. C.

Why not let a person pay off his mortgage, if he has the opportunity to better his condition, and save his home and cut down his expenses by getting another loan at better terms?

The F. H. A. has stimulated recovery and, as I have tried to stress, has been of immeasurable aid and protection to home owners and home buyers. The mortgage-insurance program of the F. H. A. is paying its own way, and there is no reason why this Congress should be concerned over any economy problem in this case. Private capital does the work, with the Government assuming only a remote contingent liability in order to encourage private enterprise and protect the home-owning and home-buying public.

There has been some opposition by the building and loan associations to extending title II to existing homes. I realize the building and loan associations have been great institutions and have rendered a valuable service in many sections of this country. I think I am the first one who suggested that some safeguard should be placed around this part of title II so as not to retard the splendid service rendered by these associations. An amendment was introduced in the committee by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE] which I think takes care of the opposition of the building and loan associations. It is included in the bill and is as follows:

(e) No mortgage which in whole or in part refinances a then existing mortgage shall be insured under this section unless the mortgagor files with the application his certificate to the Administrator that prior to the making of the application the mortgagor applied to the holder of such existing mortgage and that, after reasonable opportunity, such holder failed or refused to make a loan of a like amount and at as favorable an annual cost to the mortgagor, including amortization provisions, commission, interest rate, and costs to the mortgagor for legal services, appraisal fees, title expenses, and similar charges as those of the loan secured by the mortgage offered for insurance.

It has been suggested that if the insurance of existing home mortgages is permitted to continue, the banks will be tempted to unload their portfolios of existing home mortgages through insurance with the F. H. A., thereby increasing the possibility of later losses to the Government.

That there has been no tendency in this regard during the 4 years in which there has been opportunity to do so is indicated by the fact that the percentage of new homes to total, for not only the commercial banks cooperating under F. H. A. but also the savings banks, is almost exactly the national average of existing home mortgages to total loans for all types of institutions operating under the F. H. A.—the percentage for banks and that for building and loan associations cooperating under the plan being almost identical, as was shown during the hearings on the bill.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 20 minutes.

GUARANTEED DEBT

Mr. Chairman, this bill, H. R. 5324, again deals with the proposition of Government insuring lending institutions against loss on credit extended for the former to individuals, associations, and corporations in the sum of $4,000,000,000. Under its provisions individuals would be encouraged to obligate themselves toward $4,000,000,000 of indebtedness based on new and existing structures. The bill promotes the philosophy that it is better to have Government guarantee the debt than it is to let the full import of the obligation rest entirely on the shoulders of the lenders and borrowers.

The bill under consideration relates directly to the problem of housing—individual homes and dwelling units. The philosophy of the bill, however, goes very deep. I here have reference to other measures now pending before this Congress, wherein some Members of both the House and the Senate and trade associations and organizations contend that if the Government is to insure bank deposits and obligations relating to homes, apartments, and such, the Government should likewise insure loans to business enterprises.

The administration, through the F. H. A., requested the insurance limit be placed at $6,000,000,000, but the committee is recommending that for the time being at least the amount of insurance be limited to only $4,000,000,000. Now, let us look at some of the broader principles involved.

HOMES BUILT FROM SAVINGS

It has been observed that for decades the urban homes in this country have been built and financed out of the accumulated savings of millions of our people. The 1920 depression influenced a drop in home construction from 460,000 family units in 1919 to 300,000 in 1920. For years we had been running along on a basis of building around 500,000 family units annually. Following the 1920 depression our people, without Government insurance or subsidy in any form, proceeded to build homes. In 1921, with savings of only $21,500,000,000, we constructed 449,000 units, and in 1922 we rounded out more than 675,000.

Following 1929 home building suffered with the decline in other activities. In 1930 we built 286,000 dwelling units; in 1931 only 212,000, and in 1932 a further decline to only 74,000, and in 1933 the low mark of only 54,000 was reached. We then entered the era of pump priming, Government subsidies, insured mortgages, and in 1934 we constructed 55,000 home units. We are informed that in the years following, homes were constructed on a schedule of 144,000 in 1935, 282,000 in 1936, 289,000 in 1937, and about 347,000 in 1938.

In these figures, we have reflected some encouragement flowing from Government subsidy or insurance. We might also bear in mind that without question, participation by Government, discouraged building on the part of some who have feared Government competition in the home-owning field through the operation of H. O. L. C. and F. H. A., as well as the activities in slum clearance. When Government enters any field, taking title directly or indirectly, it is a warning to those who have built their holdings on the basis of private enterprise. No individual is strong enough financially to compete with Government ownership and operation. Our people can well afford to take full cognizance of the many activities and fields which Government has invaded in recent years.

In 1933 thousands of banks suspended payment and these closed institutions held deposits of more than $3,500,000,000. We held gold stocks of about $4,000,000,000. Demand and time deposits amounted to about $38,000,000,000 and savings of $39,900,000,000 were booked to the credit of our people. I repeat, that in that year only 55,000 home units were constructed.

It was in the fall of 1933 and the spring of 1934 the philosophy of Government insurance of mortgages on new homes took form. But let us observe that in 1935 home construction was more than 2.5 times that of 1934; in 1936, more than 5 times that of 1934; in 1937, a repeat, and in 1938, we find more than 6 times the number of home units constructed than were built in 1934.

In 1921, the savings to the credit of our people amounted to $21,500,000,000. But today they amount to almost $51,000,000,000. Our gold stocks today exceed $15,300,000,000. A recent F. D. I. C. report showed we had more than 60,000,000 bank accounts with $21,900,000,000 of demand deposits and $13,600,000,000 of savings and time deposits to their credit. These credits running in favor of the depositors are liabilities owed them by 13,705 banks alleged to be in a stronger and safer position than any country has ever before seen.

If we believe in further protecting and perpetuating the type of institutions which in prior decades furnished the unsubsidized capital that built the homes of our people, we should not go ahead with the program provided for in this bill. But if we believe in the concentration of real estate and mortgage holdings in the hands of Government; if we prefer to have our people withhold their resources and depend upon Government credit for the financing of our undertakings, then this bill should be supported and the program continued and expanded.

In 1937, we had a contraction in business and a drop in national income. But in that year our people saved $1,500,000,000 more than we did in 1929, and this, notwithstanding our national income in 1937 was approximately $13,000,000,000 less than in 1929. Today our savings are at the highest peak in the history of our people. We now have 70 percent more savings available to build homes than in the years when we were providing new homes at a record-breaking rate. Indeed, we need to take our bearings and consider the direction in which we are traveling.

SOME CONCEPTS OF OWNERSHIP

Mr. Chairman, may I submit to the Members of the House this question: Do you believe in ownership? Of course, I receive an answer in the affirmative. You believe not only in ownership, but in private ownership. Such ownership is very essential to the functioning of the legal, as well as the economic structure under which we operate. Consider the foundation upon which we base our system of industry, credit, currency, banking as well as transportation, public utilities, and that highly important element we term "taxation." This foundation is none other than private ownership. And let me remind you that all of these functions greatly relate to and affect the lives of millions of people whose degree of private ownership approaches closely to nothing. The relationship between the owning class and those who do not own is so very close that the physical destruction or a major change in the private ownership of even one single individual may seriously damage the interest of thousands of nonowners, but without the slightest personal inconvenience—other than, perhaps, mental—to the owner himself. This is the ultimate of complexity. As private citizens, we have been taught in our churches and schools and homes to look upon the vehicle of private enterprise as a means whereby we can bring to ourselves the economic benefits flowing as a result of our own industry and enterprise; in this manner the vehicle transports us to such economic security as may be. I feel that it is within the realm of truth to contend that recent policies have tended to lead our people away from such understanding as they did have concerning the primary and original purposes of private ownership. We have indeed accepted private ownership with such a complete and simple faith that few fundamental questions have been raised relative thereto. Heretofore, we have said, "This shop and the stock of goods which it contains, belongs to you. Go, be industrious, be courteous, toil and manage and economize and such rewards as may flow therefrom shall be yours. The Government will deal lightly with you to the end that you may prosper, expand, and give to others the benefit of your savings and enterprise." That has been our philosophy of private ownership and enterprise. It induced people to save and to venture into new fields, new production, and a higher standard of living. It brought to us our America and all that it is.

STREAMS OF NEW CAPITAL HAVE DRIED UP

From the First Annual Report of the Securities and Exchange Commission for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, we find that for the period September 1934 to June 1935, inclusive, the proposed use of net proceeds of new securities registered for issuance and fully effective September 1, 1934, to June 30, 1935, the $649,831,175 was applied:

Organization and development	$1,894,067
Increase in working capital	36,693,895
Purchase of assets	169,560,832
Repayment of indebtedness	440,901,368
Miscellaneous	781,013
Total	649,831,175

Here we find that 67.9 percent of the total issue was for repayment of indebtedness and that only 32.1 percent represented what we might term new capital.

Looking over the Second Annual Report of the Securities and Exchange Commission, for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1936, we find the estimated net proceeds from securities effectively registered during the year and intended to be offered for cash for the account of the registrants amounted to only $3,782,100,000.

Of the aggregate net proceeds, $2,805,400,000, or 74.2 percent, were intended for repayment of indebtedness; $213,400,000, or 5.6 percent, were intended for retirement of preferred stock; and $24,300,000, or 0.8 percent, for the reimbursement of loans used for capital expenditures. Refunding and retirement operations thus accounted for a total of $3,043,100,000, or 80.5 percent of the net total proceeds. Of the remainder, $395,600,000, or 10.4 percent, were to be used for the acquisition of securities, chiefly by investment companies; only $120,500,000, or 3.2 percent, were intended to be used for the purchase of plant and equipment; $207,300,000, or 5.5 percent, were to be added to the registrant's corporate funds, while $9,300,000, or 0.2 percent, were scheduled to defray organization and development expenses, and $6,200,000, or 0.1 percent, were to be used for various other purposes. New capital for expansion of industry is so small it is startling.

The Third Annual Report of the Securities and Exchange Commission, for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1937, shows that the estimated net proceeds from securities effectively registered during the year and intended to be offered for cash for the account of the registrants amounted to $3,492,123,000.

Of the aggregate net proceeds, $1,933,849,000, or 55.4 percent, were intended for repayment of indebtedness; $225,136,000, or 6.5 percent, were intended for retirement of preferred stock. Refunding and retirement operations thus accounted for a total of $2,158,985,000, or 61.9 percent of the total proceeds. Of the remainder, $352,097,000, or 10.1 percent, were to be used for the acquisition of securities, chiefly by investment companies; $256,979,000, or 7.4 percent were intended to be used for the purchase of plant and equipment; $633,278,000, or 18.1 percent, were to be used to be added to the registrant's corporate funds while $90,784,000, or 2.5 percent were to be used for various other purposes. Bear in mind this covers the months July 1, 1936, to June 30, 1937. Savings mounting, deposits increasing; pump priming and a growing Federal debt; gold coming in, but little new capital for building industry. One wonders if, with such a small trickle of new capital for risk or investment—the capitalistic system is to survive. Indeed, we need to dig out the wells for private capital of our fathers.

Going on to the Fourth Annual Report of the Securities and Exchange Commission for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1938, we find that out of the net cash proceeds, it was indicated that approximately $457,000,000, or 35.5 percent, would be used for new-money purposes. This is the highest ratio of estimated net proceeds intended for new-money purposes for any fiscal year since the Securities Act became effective. But it should be noted that as an absolute total it amounts to only approximately 51 percent of the new money which was expected to be raised from the sale of securities registered in the previous fiscal year. Registration statements indicated that the new money was to be allocated approximately as follows: $272,000,000—against $257,000,000 in the preceding fiscal year—for expenditures for plant and equipment and $185,000,000—against $633,000,000—for additional working capital. Of the balance of net cash proceeds indicated in the registration statements, $451,000,000—35.1 percent of all net proceeds—was intended for the repayment of indebtedness, while $348,000,000—27.1 percent of total net proceeds—was intended to be used for the purchase of securities for investment. A sorry mess of new capital for investment. Four years of recorded history—capital market yardsticks. Ample proof of something fundamentally wrong; but where and what?

HAVE WE LOST FAITH IN GOVERNMENT AND OURSELVES?

There is now a crisis of confidence. It has been running for a decade. It varies in intensity. Its meanderings are significant to students of world and national affairs. There is a reason, or a set of reasons, why we, here in the United States, have made one of the poorest showings of all industrial nations in the degree of recovery we have attained. The International Labor Office has presented some startling facts. It is important for us to inquire why our recovery has been less steady than that of any other major industrial nation. What recovery we have attained has been of a jumpy character. We go forward and then slip backward. Our base is narrow. We continue to witness thin markets. The fields of construction and durable capital have made very poor showings. We can go to the capital markets for a yardstick.

Are the fiscal policies of our Government sound? Do Government officials and economists agree on the course we have followed? Are our leaders in accord on the course we shall pursue from here? What about the philosophy of Messrs. Morgenthau, Hanes, and Harrison as against that of Messrs. Roosevelt, Eccles, and Hopkins? What influence has the ideologies of Soviet Russia, Fascist Italy, National Socialist Germany, and the New Deal had on those in our country who have been in a position to invest new capital, build additional industries, and give more employment? The sit-down strikes occurred in France and workers acquired occupancy control of the factories. There followed a stream of gold out of France. The British were withdrawing their earmarked reserve of gold from the Banque de France and our Treasury officials feverishly worked for the consummation of an agreement. From August 7, 1936, to September 25, the Bank of France lost $320,000,000 of gold, the bulk of it to the United States and to England. September 25, 1936, the Governments of the United States, Britain, and France issued their now famous statements which dealt with order in international economic relations. Having momentarily escaped from the French debacle, our high-ranking Government officials proceeded to flirt with the sit-down element in the United States and no one yet has created a yardstick whereby we can measure its temporary or permanent shock to the flow of new capital into American industry. Undoubtedly, the sit-down strikes played a very important part.

Are our people unwilling to release risk capital, to be followed by development capital, and thereby prepare the way for stability and safe investment? Have we had too much talk about the redistribution of wealth? Do our people now look more to Government for security than to individual effort and enterprise? Is the individual substance threatened by mounting taxes? Have interest rates been so reduced as to deny to capital its natural increment, and has this removed the powerful incentive our people have heretofore had to work, save, and invest? Have we elevated the state to a new prestige and authority where it is to control production, allocate markets, extend and insure credit only to the chosen few, and preempt capital markets for governmental borrowings—this all to be followed by the entry of Government directly into the business fields which have historically been preserved for the operation of private enterprise? Powerful forces are at work. One only needs to refer to the release of the Board of Governors dated April 10, 1939. The Board is fully cognizant of the presence of the forces, but their weight or influence has not yet been determined. Now, let us look at some of the activities of Government in the fields of insurance, housing, and activities related thereto.

DEBTS OF BANKS GUARANTEED BY GOVERNMENT (IN FORM OF DEPOSIT LIABILITIES)

From the last annual report of the F. D. I. C. we obtain this interesting information:

> At the close of 1937 the Corporation was insuring deposits in 13,853 banks. Daily average deposits of these banks amounted to more than $48,000,000,000 during the year, of which more than $21,000,000,000 were insured. The depositors in these banks numbered more than 50,000,000, of whom more than 98 percent were fully protected by insurance.

In looking over the balance sheet of the F. D. I. C. as of December 31, 1938, we find its capital structure carrying items made up of:

Capital stock	$289,299,556.99
Surplus adjusted to June 30, 1938	112,646,564.04
Earnings 6 months ended Dec. 31, 1938	18,598,396.63
	420,544,517.66
Miscellaneous	1,077,809.22
Total	421,622,326.88

Comparing the entire capital structure of the F. D. I. C. with its obligation to banks and depositors, clearly indicates that in the event of a set of conditions greatly straining the capital structures of the banks, one of two things would undoubtedly happen—either the Treasury of the United States would have to go to the rescue of the F. D. I. C., or the depositors would again lose through the closing of banks resulting from their inability to liquidate portfolios rapidly enough (and without loss) to meet the withdrawal requirements of demand savings and time depositors. It is interesting to observe that while the F. D. I. C. was created by the Banking Act of 1933, its net earnings, brought about almost entirely by deposit-insurance assessments against insured banks and interest earned on its assets held, amounted to only $131,244,960.67. Bank failures since the inception of F. D. I. C. have, fortunately, been few, with small losses. Should we run into a serious depression resulting in drastic decline in market values of commodities, stocks, bonds, and other equities, including Government bonds, and all followed by heavy withdrawals of deposits by demand, savings, and time claimants, the capital structure of the F. D. I. C. would be put to its first great test.

MANY COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION LOANS (GRAINS, COTTON, MISCELLANEOUS)

The February 28, 1939, statement of this agency shows loans outstanding amounting to $360,107,912.75 representing advances made on cotton, corn, wheat, tobacco, figs, peanuts and oils, prunes, raisins, butter, dates, pecans, hops, wool and mohair, turpentine, and so forth. In addition to this $360,000,000, we find there are loans which have been made by lending institutions and which are guaranteed by the Government and falling in this same class, in the sum of $408,414,868.29 and which added to the above-mentioned figure gives an aggregate of $768,522,781.04.

We should also bear in mind that other commitments are in process of being made and all in line with acts of Congress heretofore approved. It should be remembered that a genuine cotton crisis remains to be solved and that we face a new cotton crop which will begin to move around next August 1. In this connection we might keep in mind the $5,000,000,000 liability of the Treasury based on its guaranty of obligations of the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation, the F. H. A., the H. O. L. C., the R. F. C., the U. S. H. A., the T. V. A., and the United States Maritime Commission.

LOANS TO BUSINESS AND INDUSTRY

Chairman Jones, of the R. F. C., informs us his agency has authorized 7,371 loans to business enterprises aggregating $447,324,578. Banks have agreed to take participations in the amount of $61,492,756 in 1,661 of these loans, their participations ranging from 10 to 75 percent of a loan. The banks and R. F. C. share proportionately in security and repayments. Of the R. F. C. part of these loans $86,227,903 was not used and $144,192,699 remains available to the banks and borrowers when called for. Two thousand seven hundred and twenty of these loans, or 37 percent of the total number, have been for $5,000 or less—during the past 12 months 49 percent have been for $5,000 or less. Fifty-three percent of the loans have been for $10,000 or less; 83 percent for $50,000 or less.

In addition to the participations taken for their own account banks hold $57,552,558 of these loans with a take-out agreement from the R. F. C. For the take-out agreements the R. F. C. gets a part of the interest paid by the borrower. This is 2 percent per annum where the bank's participation is less than 25 percent of the loan; 1½ percent where the bank's participation is from 25 to 50 percent; 1 percent where the bank's participation is 50 percent or more.

Participation agreements and take-out commitments are executed when the loan is made, and the take-out commitment insures the bank against loss on that part covered by the agreement. It is necessary to exercise the same care in insuring part of a loan as in making the entire loan. The same investigation is required and the same expenses incurred.

In April and May 1938, R. F. C. made commitments to lend apple growers in the State of Washington up to $2,000,000. Under these commitments, R. F. C. authorized 960 loans to 716 applicants in the amount of $1,025,120, of which $991,506 was disbursed.

In addition to the foregoing loans to business, the Electric Home and Farm Authority, operated by R. F. C., buys installment contracts from business. To date, 2,573 dealers have been furnished with capital for their credit sales in this manner. The contracts carry the unconditional endorsement of the dealer.

Mr. Jones further says:

> We shall probably have a substantially larger percentage of losses from industrial loans than from any other class. Forty-six of these (representing loans in the aggregate amount of $3,009,092) have already been foreclosed and the security reduced to possession.

CHRONOLOGICAL TABLE OF UNCLE SAM'S HOUSING ADVENTURES

July 22, 1932: Federal Home Loan Bank System established. The object of the Federal Home Loan Bank System was to provide a credit reserve for the thrift and home-financing institutions of the United States. Twelve banks were established throughout the country, each under charters issued by the Federal Home Loan Bank Board. Capital stock of the 12 regional banks amounting to $124,741,000, was subscribed for and taken by the Secretary of the Treasury. The Government has invested $265,000,000 in savings and home-loan institutions largely during the 1932–36 period. Assets of all home-owners loans banks, as of June 30, 1938, were $265,770,803.87. Liabilities were $97,789,473.30. Net worth of $167,981,330.57. The accounts of the Federal home-loan banks are not subject to audit by the General Accounting Office. The Annual Report of the Comptroller General for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, states that more than three-fourths of the capital stock of the system, $161,512,205, is owned by the United States and the "balance by members of the home-loan bank system."

Uncle Sam's investment in housing via the Federal home-loan bank system—$161,512,205.

June 13, 1933: The Home Owners' Loan Act of June 13, 1933, set up the Home Owners' Loan Corporation as an emergency agency to give emergency relief with respect to home-mortgage indebtedness, to refinance home mortgages, to extend relief to owners of homes occupied by them and who are unable to amortize their debts elsewhere, to amend the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, and to increase the market for obligations of the United States, and for other purposes. This Corporation is now in liquidation and operates solely as a collection agency.

The original capital stock of $200,000,000 was subscribed by the Secretary of the Treasury. And as of June 30, 1938, was impaired by deficits of $40,893,291.81. As of December 31, 1938, the Home Owners' Loan Corporation had unmatured bonds issued and outstanding in the sum of $2,902,950,710.09, principal and interest. This does not include $10,000,000, face amount of notes and accrued interest thereon held by the Treasury and reflected by the public debt. The outstanding bonds are a contingent liability of the United States and guaranteed as to principal and interest by the Federal Government. Contingent liabilities had been authorized to the amount of $4,750,000,000 for this Corporation. The Corporation is now operating with huge deficits.

Uncle Sam's investment in housing via the Home Owners' Loan Corporation is over $3,000,000,000.

January 31, 1934: The Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation was established by act of January 31, 1934, "to aid in financing the lending operations of the Federal land banks, particularly the farm debt-financing program begun in 1933."

The capital stock of $200,000,000 was subscribed for by the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration.

With the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Corporation is authorized to issue and have outstanding at any one time bonds in the aggregate of not more than $2,000,000,000, issued in such manner and sold at such prices as prescribed by the Corporation with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. These bonds are fully and unconditionally guaranteed as to principal and interest by the United States, and are lawful instruments and security for all fiduciary, trust, and public funds, the investment or deposit of which shall be under authority or control of the United States or any officer or officers thereof. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to purchase the bonds from the sale of any securities "here issued under the Second Liberty Loan Act as amended." The Corporation has power to purchase its own bonds "in the open market at any time and at any price."

As of December 31, 1938, the Corporation had outstanding bonds in the sum of $1,396,656,315.22 under the above authority. Uncle Sam's investment in housing through the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation thus becomes $1,596,656,315.22.

FEDERAL HOUSING ADMINISTRATION

June 27, 1934: The National Housing Act created the Federal Housing Administration for the express purpose of encouraging improvement in housing standards and conditions and providing a system of mutual mortgage insurance. The Administrator of the Federal Housing Administration was empowered to use not more than $200,000,000 to "insure banks, trust companies, personal finance companies, mortgage companies, building and loan associations, installment lending companies, and such other financial institutions, which are approved by him as eligible for credit insurance against losses which they may sustain as a result of loans and advances of credit and purchase of obligations representing loans and advances of credit made by them subsequent to the date of the act and prior to January 31, 1936." The act also created a mutual mortgage-insurance fund with an immediate allotment of $10,000,000, with authority to insure mortgages there specified to the extent of $2,000,000,000 plus $1,000,000,000 additional if approved by the President. A press release issued by the Federal Housing Administration (No. 399, March 9, 1939) shows:

Insurance written—cumulative to date:
Home mortgages (premium paying)	335,099	$1,400,212,141
Rental housing projects	164	80,265,750
Property improvement loans:
Original title I notes	1,459,408	561,846,309
Feb. 3, 1938, amendments	429,837	198,849,475
Total insurance written		2,241,173,675

The expenses of operating the Federal Housing Administration have been a constant drain upon the public funds.

Page 5 of the quarterly report—January 3, 1939—of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation shows that the Corporation had made total payments to the Federal Housing Administrator, to and including September 30, 1938, amounting to a total of $66,021,074.55.

The Federal Housing Administration on December 31, 1938, had debentures outstanding in the amount of $1,277,783.22 fully guaranteed as to principal and interest by the United States.

The United States Civil Service Commission, in a report of December 31, 1938, reported the Federal Housing Administration was employing 4,523 persons. The total cost of operations for 1939, according to Budget estimates, was $14,187,220.

Uncle Sam's investment in housing through the Federal Housing Administration amounts to more than $20,000,000 in cash in form of a deficit in operations beside an assumed contingent liability of $2,241,173,675.

ACT OF SEPTEMBER 1, 1937, AS AMENDED

The United States Housing Act of September 1, 1937, created the United States Housing Authority for the purpose of promoting the general welfare of the Nation by employing its funds and credits to assist the several States and their political subdivisions to alleviate present and recurring unemployment and to remedy the unsafe and insanitary housing conditions and the acute shortage of decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings for families of low income in rural or urban communities that are injurious to the health, safety, and morals of the citizens of the Nation. The Authority has capital of $1,000,000 subscribed and paid for by the Secretary of the Treasury for the United States. An appropriation of $25,000,000 additional was authorized for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1938. The Authority was authorized to issue obligations in the form of notes, bonds, or otherwise in an amount not to exceed $800,000,000. These obligations are exempt both as to principal and interest from all taxation now or hereafter imposed by the United States or by any State, county, municipality, or local taxing authority. They are fully and unconditionally guaranteed both as to principal and interest by the United States Government.

As of December 16, 1938, the Authority had made loans and commitments aggregating $649,789,000 to cities participating in the slum-clearance and low-cost housing projects.

As of December 31, 1938, the Authority had outstanding notes in the face amount of $23,000,000 held by the Treasurer of the United States and reflected in the public debt.

As typical of the housing provided by the Public Works Administration, Harlem River houses in New York City is an outstanding example. This project, which is of the so-called slum clearance type consists of 1,959 rooms broken into 574 two-, three-, four-, and five-room apartments, built at a cost of $2,605 per room. The cost of the project is $5,104,533, and has been leased to the city of New York at an annual rental of $69,062. This represents a return of approximately 10 cents a day per room to the Government. Rentals during the period September 3, 1937, to June 30, 1938, amounted to $181,257, and the expense of operating and maintaining amounted to $150,672. An insignificant return on the investment.

Uncle Sam's investment in housing via the Public Works Administration, seems to be not only the $450,000,000 originally set aside, but also the huge sums in interest that Uncle Sam is forced to pay on the borrowed capital used in financing these projects.

It is safe to assume that Uncle Sam's adventure into housing through the medium of the United States Housing Authority will, by the end of the current fiscal year, represent an amount in excess of $825,000,000.

OTHER ADVENTURES IN HOUSING

To complete the picture of Uncle Sam's adventures in housing we bring to your attention the $5,000,000 or more expended by the Alaska Rural Rehabilitation Corporation and many additional millions spent for housing by the Puerto Rico Reconstruction Administration; and last, but not least, projects of a similar nature in the Hawaiian Islands.

TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY HOUSING

June 30, 1933: T. V. A. Act—Under authority of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933, the management of T. V. A. has spent a total of more than $7,214,637,000 in building villages to house their employees and others in the vicinity of Norris, Wheeler, Guntersville, and other dams. These properties, having no vital bearing on the operations of the Tennessee Valley Authority at this time, are being maintained and rented at an annual loss running into thousands of dollars. Just a drop in the bucket in considering Uncle Sam's total adventures into the housing field.

The wheels of bureaucratic government move on and Congress by its acts creates more and more competition by government against those who have their savings invested in building and loan association activities, life-insurance contracts, and who are dependent upon returns of interest for their necessities of life. When these resources are dissipated, largely through competition of governmental activities, the individual can, of course, take whatever a hard-pressed Government is able to allow in the way of old-age assistance.

Mr. GORE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GORE. I cannot quite reconcile the gentleman's statement that this program is a deterrent to business with the fact that the bankers of my district and the home owners and prospective home owners are all strong for this program, and that the businessmen say it is an encouragement to private enterprise.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If the gentleman will permit a personal reference, I happen to be a director of a bank. Certainly the F. H. A. helps our institution make money. But do you suppose I intend to put that bank and its interest up against the interest of the people of this country who hold in the building and loan associations $4,300,000,000 of capital and who for decades have financed the homes needed by our people?

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. Let me ask the gentleman, because I know he is informed on the subject, if it is not true that we are rapidly reaching the saturation point in housing in this country, in many localities.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If Government is to feed all of our people through subsidies, certainly we are, unless Congress desires to increase the subsidy in the way of old-age assistance and W. P. A. and P. W. A. benefits sufficient to enable the people to live at that high standard called for by this program.

Mr. KNUTSON. I do not think the gentleman got my point. What I was asking the gentleman was whether we are reaching the saturation point in new building or in housing in many localities of this country.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes; it is true that in many localities we have overbuilt. This is evidenced by vacancies in some instances and by the greatly depressed real-estate market prevailing in other cities and localities where high-grade and well-conditioned properties are selling far below the cost of replacement on a depreciated basis. Again, our increase in population is not running as great as in previous years. Then we also have a bad situation wherein whole industries and large industrial units are moving from one geographical location to another, and this movement is largely due to governmental policies which are not conducive to developing faith in the future of the man or woman who would invest. For instance, if northern industry is to be induced to move southward, what is to become of the homes now owned in industrial centers in northern cities?

The following table will be of interest to those who are watching capital movements. Savings have continued to increase since the last date shown on the table. If our capitalistic system is to survive, certainly savings will have to be invested in something more substantial than Government bonds.

[8] Preliminary.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include the tables to which I have referred.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentlewoman from Illinois [Miss SUMNER].

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I think that the fact that there is not time fully to discuss this very complex and very expensive bill is sufficient reason that thoughtful Members will wish to be very hesitant about voting for it. Hastily passed laws of this character are like shotgun weddings; they create more problems than they solve.

I did not sign the minority report because it seems to me that it cried "wolf" too faintly. Whenever a bill comes in from the Committee on Appropriations there are loud outcries against the millions that we appropriate for the relief of farmers and the unemployed—the two groups of people worst hit by every depression. Yet I see that when a banking and currency bill comes in—these bills that authorize appropriations of billions of dollars, which revolutionize and upset our whole credit structure which, like the bill involving the stabilization fund, even enable some public officers to imperil our peaceful relations with foreign nations—then there are empty seats and indifference.

I wonder if the old wolf is not taking advantage of that circumstance. I wonder if, when you stave him off from the front door, guarded by the Committee on Appropriations, he does not sneak softly, quietly in through the window—the Banking and Currency Committee. [Applause.]

I wonder if we who are elected to guard the public interest should not be very suspicious of this F. H. A. bill which authorizes another billion dollars to be used in guaranteeing real-estate loans. It arbitrarily picks out a favored portion of people and guarantees their notes to the extent of a billion dollars, notes which the Administrator admitted would not be accepted by private lenders who would not consider it safe to risk their capital for that purpose—this at a time when our country is filled with hungry people—when out of every dollar they spend for food, 20 cents goes back to the Government to pay for such activities.

It is true that an ex-college professor from one of the departments testified at the hearings that if we add another billion dollars to the capital this $3,000,000,000 Government insurance corporation already has, it would make it more efficient, so that it would not continue to lose money out of the Public Treasury. Did you notice that most of these loans will not mature for 20 years? We will not know until then the extent of our loss.

Mr. Chairman, you do not have to go to college to find out something about real estate and know that the real-estate business is highly speculative and hazardous. During the period from 1929 to 1932 the values of houses and apartments collapsed 33 percent. They had collapsed before. They will again, inevitably.

I tried to estimate how much out of this giant authorization the Government might lose. It seemed to me that over a period of 20 years the American people might, out of $4,000,000,000, lose as much as $1,000,000,000 of public money. I asked the best banker I know, and I asked the most successful real-estate operator I know. They advised me that, based upon their experience and observation of the way this activity is conducted and the way these appraisals are made, we would lose not merely $1,000,000,000 of the people's money but even as much as $2,000,000,000 of money which the people sorely need for food and rent.

Title I loans mature more quickly than title II loans. Already, the Administrator told us, it is apparent that there is a net loss under title I of $15,000,000. "Why, Miss SUMNER," one Member exclaimed when I mentioned it, "that is just chicken feed in an operation like this."

Maybe so; but that is not what we feed the chickens on in our farm. [Laughter.] I am not criticizing the promoters of this bill. In 1934 you wanted to stimulate employment. You knew that the English Government, through a government subsidized housing plan, had helped pull their country out of the depression. But you new dealers forgot to notice that in England, where the Government is always managed in a prudent, businesslike manner, the Government withdrew swiftly and wisely as soon as the activity was fairly started. You forgot to remember that politics are different in England, unfortunately for us. In England it is not cute, but criminal to reach out and filch money from the common pocketbook.

I have been told that I am wasting my breath to stand here and urge you not to plunge the American people deeper into this economic quicksand, this artificial real-estate boom. It may be, perhaps, since the F. H. A. has been very highly advertised, that today a Gallup poll would reveal that the American people either like or do not mind the F. H. A. But you and I are elected to be leaders, not followers. We must be statesmen, at our peril. It is our duty to foresee the calamities that may result from our votes here in Congress.

Last week I drove 1,200 miles in my district, which is in the center of the United States. My district has industries and farms. It is typical of all of the other districts in the United States. What benefits us benefits you. Some of our bankers told me they would not touch these F. H. A. loans. They said, "Recently the Government has repudiated some of its contracts and may do so again." Others explained, "The money is being spent; we might as well get some of it." A prospective borrower said, "Well, the lumber dealer told me I wouldn't have to make any down payment. You see the way they do it is to pad costs enough so that when you get your loan you can get your down payment out of the loan."

I tell you that about 1941 or sooner this activity will be as flagrantly discredited as the Farm Security or the W. P. A. People are growing more and more disgusted with costly governmental experiments. I worry lest the reaction will be so violent that they will want to discard the good things the New Deal has tried with the bad.

I offered some amendments in the committee. I have also endeavored to find some way that you New Dealers could meet this problem. The best solution is one which was devised by my brother, who has had considerable business and banking experience. I will put it into the RECORD in a few days.

It involves removing the strangling restrictions which prevent banks from making loans. It enables them to loan money freely up to their full capital. It also involves returning to the Congress the power to control the volume of credit which is, of course, the same as money—a power reserved to Congress under the Constitution; and, above all, it involves demobilizing all the various Government loaning agencies and using private money instead of the money of the people, private lending ingenuity instead of the favoritism of politicians. It is true that such a plan would discharge a great many Government employees and substitute one man for each hundred or so now doing similar work. They would complain to you; but better that each of you hear complaints from 100 of your supporters, who are now on the Government pay roll, than from multitudes of unemployed people, desperate employers, and taxpayers.

I will offer this proposal for solving the problem because I do not like to criticize your program without submitting some constructive plan to replace it. The plan I shall suggest is feasible. It is prophylactic. I think that perhaps it may even be dashing enough to appeal to the glamorous skipper now at the helm of the ship of state. [Laughter.]

Of course, I hope that when and if we Republicans become the majority we shall be so trustworthy that the Government will not need to hire people to invest their money. [Applause.] The proposal I shall submit is just a temporary plan to keep shoes on the feet of our citizens while they are marking time. I should be glad if the administration would adopt some such businesslike plan to encourage business. Because I believe in the future of representative government I rejoice when Members on both sides of the aisle which divides the two political parties show symptoms of nobility. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentlewoman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SACKS].

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Chairman, in asking a question of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] about the building of homes previous to the inauguration of the F. H. A. and since the F. H. A., I asked for the figures and received these from a reliable source.

I find that during the Hoover administration housing dropped to 55,000 units in the year 1934. In June 1934 the F. H. A. Act was passed. In 1935, just 6 months after that bill was passed, it rose to 144,000 units. In 1938 it had reached 346,000 units. But the most significant thing about this is not so much in the figures as to how much was built as to what it cost the public. For example, from 1931 to 1934, before the act was passed, the interest rate on first-mortgage money which allowed 50 to 60 percent mortgage value of the property was from 6 to 9 percent, and limited to a period of from 3 to 5 years.

The second-mortgage rate of interest, which included premiums and brought the mortgages up to 80 percent and 90 percent as developed under this act, added another 15 percent to 20 percent of interest. Today under the F. H. A. the maximum interest rate is 5 percent with one-half of 1 percent added for the insurance premium. This is a considerable saving to a vast number of people in this country. For this great saving alone the F. H. A. should be continued in order to keep down the interest rate and to keep mortgages within the reach of the ordinary wage earner of this country.

I have heard a lot said to the effect that this is an expenditure of $4,000,000,000. It started early in the day, during the debate on the rule. The chairman told you that not one dollar is expended. It is merely insurance. The testimony adduced before the committee showed that the loss was so negligible that this thing would be a profit to the Government.

So you see this vast benefit is not going to the bankers; it is going to the people who are buying individual homes. I heard one of my colleagues say that there would be a $2,000,000,000 loss in this administration. Mr. Chairman, if we analyze the reason why so many homes were dropped during the depression we shall find that the rate of wages and income went down but the rate of carrying charges on properties remained, as pointed out before on a mortgage of 80 percent, somewhere between 6 percent and 20 percent. There was a decrease in the individual's income but no decrease in the carrying charges of his property.

Let me point out further that this program has been the means of furnishing a great amount of employment to the skilled trades.

The statement was made by one of my colleagues that this program was in effect a throwing away of Government money, the expenditure of a vast amount of money to put the Government in competition with business.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SACKS. I do not know what type of bankers my friend represented, but in the large banking circles in the city of Philadelphia, which is quite a banking center, they have written me and told me they are for this legislation.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SACKS. I yield.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman said that this administration would probably lose $2,000,000,000.

Mr. SACKS. I did not say that.

Mr. RICH. Does not the gentleman know that this administration has already lost $20,000,000,000?

Mr. SACKS. I did not say that; the gentleman said that.

Mr. RICH. But the gentleman's administration has already lost $20,000,000,000.

Mr. SACKS. And the gentleman from Pennsylvania on the Republican side will know where we got the money after we make it through this administration. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN].

ADVANTAGES OF THE F. H. A.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, this bill carries no appropriation. The Government is providing insurance for a fee. If a corporation in America were large enough and it were authorized to carry this insurance, in the light of the experience of the past few years that corporation would be very glad to take on this burden for a reasonable fee and would expect to make money out of it; but there is no corporation in America large enough that has such power and the administration feels that it is the Government's duty to come to the rescue of the home owners of this country for the following purposes:

First. To encourage home ownership.

Second. To give employment to unemployed.

Third. To provide a reasonable interest rate.

Fourth. To give a long term of repayment.

Fifth. To take money out of hoarding and increase its velocity.

The objects and purposes of this legislation are good. It is not a matter of the Government's extending loans, that is a mistake. The Government is not putting any money into this, the Government is merely accepting fees for the purpose of insuring these mortgages, believing that the fee is sufficiently large to reimburse the Government. In this way the Government is extending to the home owners of this Nation the use of its credit. I do not know of a more worthy undertaking. In order that you may know that it has been very helpful and constructive I will take the figures for the years 1920 to date and give you the home construction during that period. From 1920 on up to 1925 and 1926 from 202,000 to 572,000 one-family structures were built each year, but from 1930 through 1933 the number went down from 572,000 in 1925 to only 39,000 in 1933—just 6 percent. Remember, this involves durable goods. You cannot have a prosperous country unless you have a movement of durable goods. We found home construction decreasing 94 percent during that period of time, so something had to be done to take this money out of hoarding.

I noticed a statement made by Mr. Marriner S. Eccles the other day to the effect that we had more bank deposits today that we had in 1929, and we had more actual money outside of banks today than we had in 1929. Mr. Eccles' statement regarding these two things was absolutely correct, but he overlooked one very material point, and that was that most of these deposits were hoarded, they were not in circulation, they had no velocity. Something must be done to entice these deposits out of hoarding and get them back into circulation.

So when the Government insures these mortgages, the Government will not take the loss. The Government will not lose and the home owners will be tremendously helped. By insuring these mortgages this hoarded money can be enticed out and put into circulation. It is not only going to help the home owners of this country but it will help the entire Nation as well.

This is not a bill to appropriate money. It is not a bill to make loans to individuals by the Government. It is far from that. It is a plan to use the Government's credit in a useful and constructive way. As I stated, the Government will not in the end lose thereby.

I know that there are many people in this country who are fighting this proposal, and I think many of them are fighting it because it establishes a yardstick for interest. It fixes a maximum rate on home loans. People who have money to lend naturally want as much for that money as they can get, and I cannot blame them for that. But if there are social reasons why the price of this money should be lowered, Congress should take that into consideration. This bill fixes a yardstick so that people will not be charged an excessive rate of interest.

A few years ago in the District of Columbia they had a foreclosure racket on homes. People would have two or three mortgages on their homes and practically every year one of these mortgages would come due. In order to get the mortgage renewed they would have to get a new appraisal and pay for a new appraisal, pay for a new abstract and for having the record brought up to date and probably a bonus in addition to that, as well as a high interest rate and attorney fees. The F. H. A. came along and said, "We are going to abolish these second and third mortgages." That is the effect of this law. It has abolished all these second and third mortgages and put all the indebtedness into one mortgage at a low rate of interest, a rate of interest that the people can pay.

Did you know that 63 percent of the loans that have been made through the help of the F. H. A. the borrower pays less than $30 a month? Why? Because the interest rate is low and there is a long time in which to pay.

Evidence before the committee discloses that the average loan is $4,600. The difference between the interest rate that is usually charged and the interest rate under F. H. A. amounts to $1,600 on one such mortgage. That is a saving of $1,600 to every such mortgagor in this Nation. A man who owes on his home will save $1,600 during the lifetime of that mortgage. That is what the F. H. A. is doing. That is one of the many things it is doing. I believe it is one of the best things that the Government has ever done. It is saving the home owners hundreds of millions of dollars a year.

The banks and the insurance companies are putting their money into these securities and this is one way we have of attracting their money. The banks and insurance companies have been reluctant to make investments in recent years except in Government bonds. The returns on these bonds were very low. Therefore, if we can attract this money through the use of United States Government insurance, through the instrumentality of the F. H. A., let us call it, why is it not a worth-while and justifiable undertaking? In my opinion, it is; and I think we should have quick and favorable action on this bill.

The measure directly concerns progress of orderly recovery in business and employment and the opportunity of American families to attain better living standards.

The measure is urgent at this time.

THE PRESENT BUILDING SITUATION

The table which presents building permits yearly since 1920 shows that residential building has been tending upward for several years.

Sustained activity in residential building is essential in restoring employment to satisfactory levels, in putting unemployed men back to work. Home building employs a large volume of labor on the site.

The production and transportation of building materials and of the equipment that goes into houses reaches into every section of the country, out into the forests, down into the mines, into our mills and factories, and throughout the length and breadth of the great transportation networks that serve our Nation.

If we are to raise our living standards, we need large numbers of new homes, not only to accommodate our growing population but to enable us to scrap the disgracefully substandard homes in which so many of our families are forced to live.

Even with the 1938 upturn, private residential building was only about 40 percent of the 1926 level, while total private building construction, including commercial, factory, and so forth, was only 35 percent of that in 1926. Even with the Government's program of public works, total construction activity in 1938 had attained a volume not over 50 percent of that in 1926.

JOBS NEEDED

Prosperity may ride to town on an automobile, but it takes plenty of good, steady jobs on the scaffold to keep it with us.

After a fair recovery in building activity had gotten under way in the fall of 1936 and the early months of 1937, a recession, especially in home-building activity, took place in the latter months of 1937.

The downward movement was reversed at about the time Congress passed the amendments to the National Housing Act in February 1938.

It took a few months before the full effect of the amendments was reflected in building, and, in view of the time it takes to organize and carry out home-building developments, positive action on the present amendments is necessary.

At the present time activity in residential construction is growing, and this is evident not only by F. H. A. mortgage insurance operations but by statistics on new residential building. The question whether this trend will continue affects the prospective means of livelihood of thousands of workers.

The latest weekly report of the Federal Housing Administration showed mortgages amounting to $29,500,000 selected for appraisal, the highest total on record; for the month of March the amount was $121,700,000, also a record.

It takes time to build up home-building volume. It was several months before the full effect of the 1938 amendments was felt in building permits, and there was a further lag between permits and employment on the job. Therefore, any delay now may result in a slack period later in the year, even if it might not lead to more serious and more extended consequences. Is Congress to take the responsibility of taking fuel from under the boiler just when our economic engine is getting up steam? It must act affirmatively and promptly, or else justify some other course.

CHARACTER OF F. H. A. FUNCTIONS

If I were speaking on behalf of a governmental agency that ran contrary to sound public policy, or to the ultimate well-being of our public and the economic institutions that serve them properly and usefully, then the Members of this body might well hesitate about continuing its full range of activities.

Happily, the Federal Housing Administration is an agency which provides for the voluntary cooperation of private industry with the strength and integrity of a well-managed branch of the Government. It aids the lender, the consumer, and industry, and in such a way that it preserves their common interests and prevents the exploitation of any one of them. In so doing, it acts as a stimulant to recovery in business and employment.

The Federal Housing Administration is a Government agency that does not rely on large Government spending to accomplish its results.

Current receipts from mutual mortgage insurance exceed its current expenses for that major activity.

The cost of handling the property-improvement loan insurance under title I is to be partly offset under this measure by the charging of a premium to be paid by the insured institutions, without any prospective increase in the maximum charge that may be made to the borrower.

The Federal Housing Administration does not in any way compel the participation of anyone in its program.

The lending institution retains discretion in selecting loans on which it applies for examination and approval for insurance. The F. H. A. affords credit insurance on mortgage loans and property-improvement loans which are found to meet its requirements.

Mortgage insurance under the 1938 amendments turned the tide of home-building activity at a critical time.

Greater stability in residential building activity and in financing residential properties is one of the great economic problems that face the country.

The Federal Housing Administration offers a constructive opportunity to attack this problem.

It protects all the groups concerned in home-mortgage financing through insistence on transactions that meet reasonable tests of soundness. We can obtain sound mortgage financing only through soundness in the vast number of individual financing transactions, and that is just what the Federal Housing Administration is accomplishing.

The continuation of the F. H. A.'s activities is important as a stabilizing influence.

IT SETS A CEILING ON INTEREST RATES TO HOME PURCHASERS

If insurance of mortgages on existing homes and the special provision regarding mortgages for less than $5,400 on new, owner-occupied, single-family homes are allowed to lapse, the maximum rates now permitted under the F. H. A. plan would not remain effective. At the present time the F. H. A. maximum rates are reasonably effective because there is a plethora of funds seeking investment under the mortgage-insurance program. But for whatever types of mortgages the scope of F. H. A. loans may be restricted, the 5-percent interest rate could not hold. There is no effective restriction of rates at anything like that figure through the Federal Savings and Loan Association or other members of the Home Loan Bank Board. The Federal Home Loan Bank Act provides merely that mortgage charges by member institutions may not exceed the lowest contract rate of interest in the States where such rates are in effect, or be in excess of 8 percent in other States. The permitted contract rates are high in many States.

FORTY-EIGHT STATES PASSED ENABLING ACTS

It provides a unique function of national scope by enabling all different types of lending institutions wherever located to make high-percentage, long-term amortized mortgage loans.

Even with the National Housing Act, it was necessary to have enabling legislation enacted in the 48 States authorizing institutions subject to State jurisdiction to make loans on more liberal terms than otherwise allowed, provided such loans are insured by the Federal Housing Administration. These enabling acts apply only to F. H. A. insured mortgages. The mortgage insurance system enables banks, building and loan associations, savings banks, life insurance companies, and other institutions serving as custodians of long-time savings funds to take part on an equal competitive basis in financing home mortgages. Granting of loans up to 80 and 90 percent of the value and with amortization periods up to 20 or 25 years is possible for most lending institutions only as a result of the National Housing Act. If provision for this insurance is allowed to lapse with respect to mortgages on existing homes, then in most States building and loan associations would remain the only institutions legally permitted to make long-term, high-percentage, amortized loans. Even building and loan associations in many cases are restricted to loans not exceeding 66⅔ or 70 percent of the appraised valuation.

IT INSISTS ON ADEQUATE PROTECTION OF HOME NEIGHBORHOODS AGAINST EARLY BLIGHT

This protection is afforded by insistence on competent layout of new subdivisions and on proper safeguards in the form of zoning ordinances or deed restrictions that will assure the good character of the neighborhood for the homes built in it.

In the case of existing homes, the character of the neighborhood and the possibilities of its decay, from whatever cause, are carefully weighed by trained members of the underwriting staff.

The Federal Housing Administration has developed property standards applicable to each of the 48 States which builders must meet to obtain mortgage insurance on their houses; the Federal Housing Administration makes sure of compliance with those standards in homes financed with insured mortgages through its trained field staff.

Above all, the Federal Housing Administration makes every effort to ascertain that the obligations assumed by each borrower are within his reasonable capacity to pay.

The mortgage is recognized as a personal obligation, with the borrower's income, character, and ability to pay as the first requisite to soundness.

RESULTS OF F. H. A. OPERATIONS

Following are figures relating to mortgage insurance on small homes during the year 1938:

Mortgage insurance under section 203 (2) (b) of title II:

Of the 149,702 mortgages for $650,160,102 accepted for insurance during the year 1938, 97,645 for $450,962,208 covered new homes.

Of the new-home mortgages, 81 percent, or 79,000 for approximately $370,000,000 were for $5,400 or less.

Of the 79,000 for $5,400 or less, 52,000, or 65 percent, for approximately $240,000,000 are mortgages for 81 to 90 percent of F. H. A. valuation; 42,000, or 53 percent, for $200,000,000 were for terms of 24 or 25 years.

SUMMARY

The Federal Housing Administration has rendered a constructive service to the American people. Its policies are sound. Its policies were never of more timely significance than at the present moment, when, in the view of many observers, the forces making for further recovery are in delicate balance with those making for a sidewise movement or even backsliding.

Failure to take affirmative action now would be of no immediate or permanent gain, on the one hand, and, on the other hand, would constitute an unwarranted gamble with the employment and well-being of our people.

Mr. BROOKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. BROOKS. I value the gentleman's judgment very much. In my home town there is a section known as Cedar Grove in which live the working people who earn small salaries and wages. Restrictions have been placed around the assistance in that particular portion of my home town. May I ask the gentleman, is there anything in this law as at present on the statute books or in the amendment which would prevent the use of this system to extend help to those people who work on small salaries and on wages?

Mr. PATMAN. That is one of the objects of this law to extend help to people in the class described by the very able gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. PATMAN. The building and loans are not catering to the people who are earning less than $1,446 a year. The F. H. A. is helping many people who are earning much less than $1,446. Besides, the building and loans are not operating all over the Nation. They are operating only in the cities and of course some of the towns, but the F. H. A. covers the entire country. I do not consider the F. H. A. objectionable from the standpoint of competition, but very desirable from the standpoint of the people and especially the home owners or the would-be home owners.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Is it not true that a number of loans were made under title II where the monthly payments are only $10 a month?

Mr. PATMAN. Only $10 a month. Certainly, your people could come under that.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 25 minutes, the balance of my time, to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I intend to enliven this debate a little. It is impossible for me to believe that a billion dollars at hazard cannot possibly interest the House more than is indicated by the number now present. I recognize the ballyhoo that you received in the mail this morning, if it was similar to what I had. I should think people would be writing you from the four corners of the country under the spell of this high-pressure salesmanship.

I am sorry that my own chairman hinted this afternoon that judging from my remarks yesterday I am politically prejudiced. I cannot believe he meant that. When this bill was passed originally I supported it and tried to get the bankers in my vicinity to make use of it. I succeeded partially by getting them interested in title I, but none of the banks in my locality seemed to be interested in title II, in the taking of 80- and 90-percent mortgages. They know that this is not sound business. But I was doing my very best to help in this real estate recovery. I thought I knew something of the subject, and felt that we needed to do something to help revive the building industry. I should certainly not be considered as having been against this proposition, in its early stages.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Chairman, will my distinguished friend yield for a question?

Mr. GIFFORD. I am taking the 25 minutes for the gentleman's benefit.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Is it not true that the mutual savings banks in the gentleman's district loan up to 80 percent now and always have?

Mr. GIFFORD. The cooperative banks have been privileged to loan 80 percent and they often did. Our savings banks were limited to 60 percent. The cooperative banks learned their lesson as to 80-percent loans, I can assure the gentleman.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. But they did loan 80 percent?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes; much to their sorrow.

I have been genuinely interested in this matter, and there is nothing of a political nature in my remarks today. It is the duty of the minortiy—and sometimes it is a very unpleasant duty—to try to remedy and amend legislation shown to be against the public interest. I try not to dodge this duty. I explained yesterday what happened in the city of St. Louis. It is in the RECORD for your perusal. I pay high tribute to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN], one of the finest men I have ever known, who, although he was somewhat stirred at first, later agreed fully with everything I said, as you will see if you read his remarks, following my own of yesterday.

Twice today it has been asked, "Why did I criticize so much yesterday and yet praise the F. H. A. officials"? I said over and over again that they had done the best they could under a law which permitted these practices. I still say so. I sympathized with them, and Mr. McDonald sympathized with himself before the committee. His assistant, Mr. Colean, said in the record, "Yes; there are one or two tricks in this business." I complimented them because of the $750,000,000 of applications presented they had approved only $71,000,000, in spite of all the pressure brought to bear on them.

I never had any desire to paint black any official of this Government. In all my tirades, as some of you are wont to call them, can you point to one instance, except perhaps in regard to my friend, Mr. Hopkins, when he was at the head of the W. P. A., wherein I ever attempted to fix blame on an individual. No. I have often said that if my trail led to a personality I would retrace the trail. It does not lend confidence to our people to learn of wrongdoing by their officials. Rather let us remove the cause of it. Here is a case of bad judgment, and the report I made to you yesterday was fully agreed with by the St. Louis Representatives.

I have here this morning reports of another situation in Louisville, Ky., where land values were marked up even much more, and where high-priced lawyers in Washington, with certain valuable connections helped organize the corporation and received exorbitant fees. Read about that project and I believe you would blush a little more than you did yesterday.

I am favorable to title I, but it is my duty to remind the gentleman from California that I have here several letters from real-estate organizations in his State stating that title I is causing great disturbance there because they are building little shacks of houses for $1,000 to $2,500 under that title, without any mortgage on them, and building them in communities where decent homes are already constructed, thus disturbing and even wrecking the values of adjoining properties. The F. H. A. officials have to tell us, do they not, that when they agree to insure a financial institution they have no supervision of the loans under title I? If the applicant can qualify under most stringent regulations listing every dollar that he may owe in the world, his assured monthly income, and answer all the other searching questions, he can qualify for the loan, and then there is no further supervision by the F. H. A. officials.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] will offer an amendment to strike out the section authorizing the continuation of the insurance of existing mortgages. What the proponents of this legislation originally pleaded for was to get the axe and the hammer once more at work, and they stated that insurance of only new construction was desired. But we have allowed the F. H. A. to insure existing mortgages for the last few years. They promised emphatically last year they would not ask a continuation of that after July 1, 1939.

There is only one justification which they offer, and I will read to you Mr. McDonald's testimony on that:

Why should we continue to insure existing mortgages?

I think this is highly interesting.

After a lot of consideration I feel the Federal Housing Administration should be extended to old houses on the same basis as new houses. I did not feel that way sometime ago. However, a serious situation has developed. I am carrying nearly one-half million dollars of new unsold houses, and it would seem natural for me to want to favor them, but we are finding it necessary to take in trade so many old houses in order to dispose of our new houses that the old houses become a real problem in financing.

They must get an 80-percent insured mortgage on the old house so that the new buyer will have the money to put into the new structure.

Therefore, he asks that the insurance on existing homes be continued.

Yes, a new automobile cannot be sold unless you have all the allowance possible on the old automobile, but when I trade in my old automobile it is not 80 percent of its real value. It is nearer 20 percent. The broker is now in a fortunate position. He gets a fee for placing the insurance on the old house and another fee for placing it on the new house, and other fees and commissions on the sale of both houses.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. Gladly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Under those circumstances what is going finally to happen to the old house, the new one having been completed and occupied?

Mr. GIFFORD. I assume in many cases they simply want the 80-percent mortgage to get cash for the new purchase. We will finally take possession of them and sell them for what we can get. If we insure $4,000,000,000. I feel that we are certain to lose $1,000,000,000. This is a new venture and we cannot foretell the losses during the future years. Real-estate values collapse suddenly at times. Mr. Fahey, with 1,800,000 foreclosures, with an average loss of about $686 on each house, knows the situation, and he came before the committee and strongly opposed this continuance of mortgages on existing houses. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] will prevail.

There will be an amendment offered by the committee to curb the so-called switching of mortgages from building and loan institutions. This ought to help greatly. There are many conservative members on this committee. They plainly see these possible dangers in this legislation. It is not pleasant for them to advocate continuance of this Government liability. I pay tribute to these able and conservative men among the Democrats on this committee. Unquestionably they do not like to do many things which they seem forced to do under the lash of this administration. They are good servants of the administration. Their loyalty cannot be questioned.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Under what lash is the gentleman opposing this bill?

Mr. GIFFORD. Under the usual lash. Do you not know what it is?

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Yes; I know exactly what it is.

Mr. GIFFORD. I once saw the gentleman called from the committee to the White House and when he came back he had had his mind completely changed in a very short period of time. You well remember it, do you not?

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Yes; I do.

Mr. GIFFORD. The lash was certainly applied in short order and very effectively.

I took this 25 minutes especially for the gentleman from California and for others who might desire to ask questions. If the gentleman from Massachusetts fails in his amendment, we shall be somewhat reassured by the Spence amendment whereby these mortgages on existing structures cannot be switched until they first approach the mortgagee and offer him the opportunity to meet the terms offered by the F. H. A. mortgage. That is a saving clause, to say the least.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Was there any opposition to that in the committee?

Mr. GIFFORD. No; certainly not. If we fail in our amendment which we shall offer, we shall certainly support that amendment and appreciate it very much.

This broker switching of mortgages has annoyed the building and loan associations in the country.

They unanimously appeal to you that you now stop insuring existing properties. They assure us that there is plenty of money available and that they are willing to loan at a reasonable and a less rate of interest than formerly. Why force them to get under this Government umbrella? Continue this for 2 years more and there may be such a clamor for everybody's mortgage to be insured that there will be no alternative for them but to get under this safe umbrella, provided that the credit of the Government remains secure. The virus of this thing has taken hold of the country. The reformers are still clamoring for more, and I suppose, Mr. Chairman, we shall have to give them a hearing on the bill for 12 regional banks in the country, capitalized for a billion dollars each, to insure the business loans made by the commercial banks. That is now openly advocated on the floor of both branches of this Congress, over national hook-ups, and is, indeed, insistently demanded.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Does the gentleman know any way in the world that we could refuse to go along insuring industrial loans if we are to perpetuate a policy of this kind?

Mr. GIFFORD. Each step leads to another. Every man in this country will demand his share of the pelf; and if you do it for one, you must do it for all. But unless you take the road back—take it immediately and run like the devil—the future of this Nation is in jeopardy.

Mr. CRAWFORD. And if this system of Government subsidy insurance is accepted, the Government eventually becomes, when it forecloses, both the owner and the seller. Is not that right?

Mr. GIFFORD. Absolutely.

Mr. CRAWFORD. And therefore it becomes a competitor of every man who owns goods, chattels, or property.

Mr. GIFFORD. And as I have shown, the Government will be the competitor of every businessman in the country. He is competing with his own money. The Government is mopping up the savings of the people in the banks, and the banks are buying bonds with their own money. They furnish the Government with all the capital they have, and it goes into competition with themselves. When will the people arouse themselves and become vocal? I predict that in 1940—and I say it to every Democrat, even though the nomination means certain election—if he has an opponent in the Democratic primary, there will be a sign written in bright letters across the sky, "Kick the spenders out." And unless you can prove that you have advocated economy, many of you will not be here in the next session of the Congress. In Massachusetts they are marching on the State house. They have started a march of taxpayers to Albany, as you will have seen in the New York Times this morning. The people are indeed aroused, and they will be further aroused and will not submit to a continuation of this reckless spending and the risking of their Nation's credit.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes. I have said that my time is the gentleman's.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. I am wondering about Massachusetts. Does the gentleman want the figure on F. H. A. loans there?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. The gentleman's people up there in Massachusetts had 3,695 loans insured under title II, amounting to $18,634,000, and there were 53,296 borrowers under the old title I.

Mr. GIFFORD. I said that our banks used title I, and I think, especially after the hurricane season, that title I was a good thing. I have endorsed it from the start, and I do so today.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Any on new construction?

Mr. GIFFORD. I do not know a single house in my congressional district of new construction that has been called to my attention, and I have visited my banks often and have said to them, "Why do you not take advantage of title II?" They will not use it, although a Vermont life-insurance company is taking mortgages in Texas and other far-away places.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Of the 3,695 loans, 1,339 were on new houses.

Mr. GIFFORD. Out of more than 3,600 loans, only 1,339 for new houses. That is not a very satisfactory proportion, is it? Read the figures for Los Angeles and see what the Government has done for the people out there.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Does the gentleman want them? There is over $100,000,000 in F. H. A. there, about 40–60 on existing and new.

Mr. GIFFORD. About 50 times as much as Massachusetts has taken.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Well, Los Angeles and California are much greater than Massachusetts, in my judgment.

Mr. GIFFORD. Most of the banks did not want title II. They may have to use it sometime, because they will lose their business unless they get under this so-called umbrella.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I seem to be getting the impression this afternoon that there is a philosophy at work on the floor to the effect that the only way for our people to operate is to be subjected, or, we will say, driven through desperation to Government ownership and Government subsidy. Does the gentleman really believe that that is the only way out for the capitalistic system, that it first must be put through the wringer by Government operation in order to teach it a lesson?

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, by Government operation you have kept the railroads and every other sort of thing out of the wringer. Temporarily it has been kept from going through it. They have been kept from going through the wringer by all manner of subsidies and loans by the Government. Only a few years back the word "subsidy" was a real red flag to a Democrat. I can only assume that much should have gone through the wringer long ago.

Mr. CRAWFORD. As evidenced by what we saw on the front page today with reference to bartering cotton for these other goods—rubber, for instance—what will the man do who makes rubber toys? Is he going to hold the raw material and goods in process and finished goods against the Government ownership of rubber? What about the man who makes things out of tin? Have we got to resort to that to save the capitalistic system; or does that destroy it?

Mr. GIFFORD. I hardly know what to think. But rubber and tin are to be bought now because they are war materials, to be held 5 years before being sold, in return for purchases of wheat and cotton, to any nation that will take and hold them for 5 years. This is the latest and newest proposal. We are not yet able to understand it fully, but it is claimed as a step toward peace between nations as a profitable venture. But we do know that wheat was recently sold to Germany at a loss of from 30 to 40 cents per bushel to the taxpayer. We know that that happened, do we not? But that was probably an administration gesture of peace toward Germany.

Mr. CRAWFORD. In the name of peace.

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes. I do not blame the gentleman from Michigan for making the speech he did today. I am almost persuaded to go the whole way with him. The philosophy of the bill is wrong and he cannot vote for this bill if amended. I would go so far that I would vote for title I, where loans are limited to $2,500. I would vote for section 203, where the units are so small that we can have proper supervision. But I am against the insurance of these large loans running into the millions. Perhaps we ought to get behind the gentleman from Michigan and say, "Stop; and stop now." But my Republican chairman said today that he is going along with all phases of this bill and that statement breaks the solidarity of the minority. He is an extremely able man. He is well worthy of holding the position of ranking member on our side of the Banking and Currency Committee. But I fail to understand his attitude on this bill. I think he fears, as he suggested, that it would be called political if he opposed it. He suggested that in my own case, the philosophy of this activity is probably wrong and there are some others like the gentleman from Michigan who will oppose it entirely from that standpoint, to their great personal credit. Their stand is certainly not taken from a political viewpoint.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes; I yield again to the gentleman.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Let us take the philosophy now, for instance. Prior to the F. H. A. the loaning of money was in the hands of people who loaned it at 8 to 10 percent, and they loaned it for 3 years.

Mr. GIFFORD. That was probably in Los Angeles, not Massachusetts.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. All right. Five or six percent. They loaned it for 3 years, and they came in and got a refinancing of it. Under this law we have stopped all that, and we have given the man who owns a home an equal opportunity to borrow money with the man who is building a home, and put them all on the same basis, 5 percent, the lowest interest rates we have had in this country, as a general thing, in all of our history.

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes. You brought every citizen of the United States under the same sort of umbrella, with his own money.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. The police power of the United States Government ought to extend to protecting mortgaging of homes as well as to stealing from homes.

Mr. GIFFORD. Keep on loaning the credit of your Government and loaning the money of the people through these agencies, and there will be an end some time I fear rather sooner than some now imagine. You are living in a psychological atmosphere at this very moment. No one knows when the break is going to come.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Oh, I have enough confidence in the people of the United States to know that it is not going to break as long as we have a great leader in the White House called Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes; I have heard of him. [Laughter.] In fact, I have a cartoon here that was sent to me by a friend of mine. If any of you want to see it, it speaks volumes. Come and see me after the debate. [Laughter.]

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. GIFFORD. Again?

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. I am going to make a statement to you, and it is true. If the F. H. A. had been in operation in 1929, 1930, and 1931 you would not have needed the H. O. L. C.

Mr. GIFFORD. Perhaps not, but if we had not had that election——

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. But your party did not have the courage to put it in.

Mr. GIFFORD. But if we had not the result of that election in 1932, which frightened the public out of its wits for 4 long months, things would have been far different today.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. KEEFE. Listen to this debate——

Mr. GIFFORD. This is not now a debate. This is a diversion from the debate.

Mr. KEEFE. Listening to this colloquy, if you call it such, I observe that some of the gentlemen on the Democratic side take great pride and credit in reducing interest rates to mortgagors in this country. I am glad that interest rates have been reduced, but I wonder if they forget that there are millions and millions of people who have had their money tied up in banks, who used to get 2 and 3 and 4 percent interest on their savings, who today are lucky if they get 1 percent. I wonder if they have forgotten that the insurance companies have lost their savings and their ability to earn money, so that dividends on insurance policies have been reduced, so that insurance is costing more money, and that, as a matter of fact, there always is a repercussion in the matter of this lowering of interest rates which benefits one class and is a detriment to another class. There are thousands of people in this country who retired on investments, but who find their income today, due to a decrease in interest earnings, so small that they cannot exist. Trusts and charitable institutions find themselves in a similar situation.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I will answer the gentleman's question, since it is directed to me. Well do they understand, but they care not. They are wholly for the so-called have-nots. Protection for those who have, even if they have only a little, is not the aim of this administration. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired. All time on the minority side has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARRY].

Mr. BARRY. Mr. Chairman, during the 4 years I have been in this body the main criticism I have heard directed toward the Democratic Party was that it was constantly passing legislation to stifle initiative, to throttle business, and do everything possible to discourage private enterprise. I say to you that if one piece of legislation more than any other has encouraged the expenditure of private funds in private enterprise it is the Federal Housing Administration Act.

Over $1,800,000,000 has been put into circulation by lending institutions in the building industry. In addition to this, there is the equity of the home owners, which will make the total reach more than $2,000,000,000. With this approximately $2,000,000,000 I believe we have made a very substantial contribution to the stimulation of the capitalistic system we are trying to maintain and carry on in this country. This result in itself is sufficient to warrant my support of this bill. This stimulation has resulted in increased private employment to the extent of many thousands of jobs. The building-materials industry that was lying dormant has been given new life, and we have created a new and active real-estate market, a business which had been dead since the depression of 1929.

Much criticism has been aimed at that feature of the bill which provides insurance of old construction. The testimony before our committee was that in 62 percent of the cases where a mortgage is refinanced on old construction there are major improvements put on the structures. As a result of this refinancing, therefore, there has been considerable contribution to employment and to private industry.

Listening to the arguments of some of my distinguished colleagues on the Republican side who serve on this committee with me, it seems to me their concern is more with the profit of the building and loan associations than with the risk or contingent liability of the Government or the interest of the little home owner who is purchasing these thousands of homes.

So I say to you any one of these reasons is sufficient to warrant support of this particular legislation. Another feature which I consider to be important in spite of what I have just heard on the floor is the reduction of interest rates. We know that throughout this country—perhaps not in Massachusetts and some of the New England States—but we know there are portions of this country where interest rates of even 7, 8, 9, and 10 percent have been charged. They never seem to have heard of the word "usury." The F. H. A. Act has had the very beneficial effect of reducing these interest rates throughout the country and particularly in those areas where these exorbitant rates prevail.

The pending bill provides for a continuance of only 2 years. So far as old construction is concerned, if at the end of that time we have our system going in high gear again, then I, like some of my Republican colleagues, would be in favor of withdrawing from this business and letting private initiative take it over.

Mr. RICH. Does the gentleman have any idea that in 2 more years of the same kind of operation his administration will be in any better situation than it is now, when in the last 6 years they have gone $20,000,000,000 in debt?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, there are no further requests for time on this side.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subsections (a) and (b) of section 2 of the National Housing Act, as amended, are amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. (a) The Administrator is authorized and empowered, upon such terms and conditions as he may prescribe, to insure banks, trust companies, personal finance companies, mortgage companies, building and loan associations, installment lending companies, and other such financial institutions which the Administrator finds to be qualified by experience or facilities and approves as eligible for credit insurance, against losses which they may sustain as a result of loans and advances of credit, and purchases of obligations representing loans and advances of credit, made by them subsequent to the date this section, as amended, takes effect, and prior to July 1, 1941, for the purpose of financing alterations, repairs, and improvements upon or in connection with existing structures, and the building of new structures, upon urban, suburban, or rural real property (including the restoration, rehabilitation, rebuilding, and replacement of such improvements which have been damaged or destroyed by earthquake, conflagration, tornado, cyclone, flood, or other catastrophe), by the owners thereof or by lessees of such real property under a lease expiring not less than 6 months after the maturity of the loan or advance of credit. In no case shall the insurance granted by the Administrator under this section to any such financial institution on loans, advances of credit, and purchases made by such financial institution for such purposes subsequent to the date this section, as amended, takes effect, exceed 10 percent of the total amount of such loans, advances of credit, and purchases. The total liability which may be outstanding at any time plus the amount of claims paid in respect of all insurance heretofore and hereafter granted under this section and section 6, as amended, less the amount collected from insurance premiums and deposited in the Treasury of the United States under the provisions of subsection (f) of this section, shall not exceed in the aggregate $100,000,000.

"(b) No insurance shall be granted under this section to any such financial institution with respect to any obligation representing any such loan, advance of credit, or purchase by it (1) if the amount of such loan, advance of credit, or purchase exceeds $2,500, or (2) if such obligation has a maturity in excess of 3 years and 32 days, unless such loan, advance of credit, or purchase is for the purpose of financing the construction of a new structure for use in whole or in part for residential or agricultural purposes, or (3) unless the obligation bears such interest, has such maturity, and contains such other terms, conditions, and restrictions as the Administrator shall prescribe in order to make credit available for the purposes of this title."

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I make this pro forma motion merely for the purpose of asking a couple of questions about the bill. Will the chairman or some member of the committee please tell me the significance of this provision with regard to the rate of interest on title I loans, and also with reference to the length of time for repayment of such loans?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Missouri. The gentleman understands, of course, that as the law now stands there is no premium payment in operation under title I.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. My question was not about the premium payment but was about the rate of interest. I want to know how the rate of interest is determined under title I.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Missouri. There is no limitation in the law as it now stands with reference to the rate of interest under title I. The rules and regulations of the Administration provide for the discounting of approved loans at from 3 to 5 percent per annum, which means an annual rate of interest of about 9.7.

So far as new construction loans are concerned they have been discounted at the rate of 3½ percent per annum, which means an annual interest rate of about 7 percent or a little less.

This bill is not intended at all to change that arrangement.

Out of the interest rate the lending institutions are paid the 1-percent premium per annum on the loans.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. How about the length of time these loans are to run? There is a good deal of feeling in my section of the country that title I loans should be allowed to run 10 years instead of 7, which I understand is the time limit at present.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Missouri. Under the practice which has been followed under the present law this amendment places a limitation on approved loans of 3 years and 1 month; 3 years, in fact, on loans for improvement purposes. There is no limitation so far as loans on new construction are concerned, and the practice of the Administration has been to make such loans for a period of 7 years. I understand there has been considerable demand to extend this period to 10 years. That, however, is in the discretion of the Administration.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Does the gentleman feel that might be done in certain cases?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Missouri. Of course, I cannot answer what the Administration may do about it, but I think perhaps that would not be a bad idea. My own personal opinion is it would not be a bad proposition to extend these loans to a period of 10 years. It would give those who want to borrow money to build a rather modest home a longer period within which to pay back the money. That is my own individual opinion. The gentleman understands there is no limitation in the law with reference to those loans at all and none in the amendment so far as the new structures are concerned.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield to my distinguished and able colleague from California.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. As I conceive it, there is no reason why a man who takes one of these title I loans for the construction of a building and carries it for probably 3 years cannot put it under title II and get a 90-percent loan on his building for the balance of the time, getting it for the long period that operates under title II.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Is there any provision in this bill, either express or implied, which would make it possible for the F. H. A. to make inspection of new construction under title I?

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. That is why the 1 percent was put in.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Does that mean that section 2 of this bill carries an implication, in view of the fact this premium charge of 1 percent is made, that thereby the F. H. A. will have an obligation or at least the power to make an inspection of these buildings?

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. I may say to the gentleman that heretofore they have not done that because there was no premium of any kind received for that work. It is the intention of the F. H. A. to practically subject title I to the same regulations that they operate under with reference to title II, with some modifications.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, in the minute or two that remains, I merely want to point out that we are today living in an age of abundant accumulated capital and we are also living in an age when certain features of the past are still with us. One of them is the kind of halo around 6-percent interest. May I say to the gentlemen on this side of the aisle who have been objecting to this legislation, and it seems to me so grossly misrepresenting its purposes and provisions, that it certainly is a function of government in this day and age to be effective in reducing the rate of interest on pure money in order to encourage investment in productive enterprise.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JENSEN: Page 3, line 11, after the word "purposes", insert "Provided: That if such loan advance of credit or purchase is not in excess of $1,000 (one thousand) the obligation to be eligible for insurance under this section may be for a period not to exceed 10 years."

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, the reason I have offered this amendment is because of having been in the lumber business 24 years. I have had considerable to do with the F. H. A. A lot of poor folks have come to me since the F. H. A. was instituted and asked how they could borrow a little money to start a home. I tried in every way I could to help those folks and a lot of them were mighty fine people. Some of them were young; some of them were folks 40 or 50 years old or older. But regardless of how we tried to get them under the Federal Housing Act we could not do it.

Many of them wanted to borrow only five, six, or seven hundred dollars. They did not expect indoor plumbing. They were willing to have just the common kind of a home consisting of two or three rooms. Some of them had an old house that they wanted to tear down and put up a new one in its place. They were defeated, because they could not qualify under this act.

Most of them wanted to build on the outskirts of the town where they could have a garden. I understand that this bill as written and amended will permit the Administrator to increase the length of time. Up to the present time the average has been 5 years under title I.

I hope my amendment will be agreed to, because I am sure if this Administration under title I will extend the time to 10 years on these small loans these folks will then have an opportunity to pay eight or nine dollars a month; then those folks who earn from forty to sixty-five dollars a month will have a chance to finally have a home of their own. Not only that, but this applies to new construction exclusively; it will also apply to farmers who may want to build a hog house or barn.

Mr. STEAGALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. STEAGALL. Let me suggest to the gentleman that the amendment which he has offered, it seems to me, would defeat the purposes the gentleman has in mind. Under the bill as drawn, the Administrator is clearly authorized to fix the maturity on mortgages covering home construction for 10 years or more if he sees fit. I have no doubt that in many cases that will be done under the bill as presented to the House. The gentleman's amendment, however, specifically provides that the Administrator may fix maturity at 10 years where the loan does not exceed $1,000.

I respectfully suggest to the gentleman that from his viewpoint it is best to leave the bill just as it is.

Mr. JENSEN. I am pleased the committee chairman has spoken. What I wanted to bring to the attention of this august body is the simple fact that the poorer folks in the past have not had an opportunity to come under this act. I hope the Administrator will take cognizance of the wishes of this body and as long as this act is in force will give his attention and concern to those who really need attention in this respect.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENSEN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. The gentleman has made the statement that the average is 5 years.

Mr. JENSEN. That has been the average.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I am somewhat in sympathy with the amendment just offered as far as the time limit is concerned. I, too, have received many complaints that under title I the limit has been approximately 5 years.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. The gentleman misunderstands the character of this provision. There are no limitations on the time at all. One loan might be for 15 years, one might be for 20, one might be for 7, and one might be for 10. It depends on the borrower. I believe the gentleman is wrong in seeking to tie the Administration down because it is sometimes safer to extend loans of 20 years to some people than loans of 7 years to others.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. That feature appeals to me, too. However, I do believe the Administrator ought to take notice of this so suitable loans can be extended to 10 years, and I believe we should make it 12. If we do not wish specifically to liberalize the law, I do hope we may liberalize the administration of it.

I have here a letter from a prominent citizen of Arizona who calls attention to the fact that under the past administration of title I the time has been too limited, in his judgment. The payments are thereby made too large for the prospective small-home owners whom we want to benefit by this legislation. I will not press the matter further, but I do wish to call this phase to the attention of the Committee and at the same time approve the pending legislation in general.

I noted the words of my friend the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] who spoke concerning the halo around 6-percent interest. Throughout the West, where I grew up, the prevailing rate varied from 8 percent to 12 percent. Practically all my life I have paid 10 percent and only the banker saw the halo. Too long have we been permitting one group of businessmen to charge a high rate of interest and thereby benefit their business at the expense of the poor class of people who were not able to establish homes. I have here a sheaf of letters commending just such legislation as we have before us now. It is true these letters are from lumber companies and businessmen who supply building materials, but I also have here letters from three of the largest banks of Arizona. All these business institutions some weeks ago asked that the life of this legislation be extended as this bill now proposes. I know you may say, "Certainly, these lending institutions want it extended because they are making a profit out of it." About $14,000,000 worth of business under this original act has already been done in the State of Arizona and more than 15,000 families have been served. Ours is a new and growing community needing aid.

I know of many young couples who are now permitted to have homes and who except for this legislation would not have had them. I also know of some young people with good salaries who are unable to pay the rates because under title I the time limit has been cramped down to 5 or 6 or 7 years when it ought to be 10 years. So I am pleased to see now that the Administrator under title I has the power to extend the period of the loan to 10 years, I believe. Is that not correct?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Missouri. There is no limit on it at all. There is no limit on the time to which he may extend these construction loans.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. With that in view, again I hope we are not only liberalizing the legislation but liberalizing the Administrator as well. Therefore, I heartily support this legislation. I believe it is a humanitarian effort to aid business and at the same time aid in housing that third of our population which has never been able to call any dwelling place a home.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. JENSEN].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. JOHNS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JOHNS: On page 2, line 4, after "July 1", strike out "1941" and insert in lieu thereof "1940."

Mr. JOHNS. Mr. Chairman, I believe we need this housing program today in order to stimulate business in this country. I feel, however, that 1 year is sufficient for this purpose. This is a dangerous thing the Government is going into. It is bad enough for the Government to be borrowing the billions of dollars it is borrowing today, let alone guaranteeing other billions that somebody else is borrowing. That is the danger I see about this. I can see no difference in this respect between the Government and an individual. If I were a banker and some man came to me who was in business and borrowing money, and I found that he was endorsing other individuals' notes, I would watch him very closely to see that he did not lose his credit with the bank with which I happened to be connected.

If we are going to have prosperity in this country, we can have it in the next year as well as in the next 2 years. If we are not going to have it, this Congress will be in session a year from now and we can then extend this time. If we do not have prosperity, let us get out of this idea of guaranteeing the obligations of somebody else.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNS. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. The gentleman knows this guarantee of an additional billion dollars is subject to the President's say so? It is not mandatory. They do not get $4,000,000,000 unless the President finds it necessary.

Mr. JOHNS. I did not say anything about the amount. The principle is the same if it is $5,000,000,000 or $4,000,000,000. It does not make any difference about that. The principle is that we should not do it. It is poor business. You can talk to anyone and he will tell you the same thing. There is no reason we in this country should be guaranteeing anybody's obligations today.

We have $3,510,000,000 lying idle in the banks today, and nobody will borrow it simply because they have no confidence in present conditions in this country, and, of course, if somebody would guarantee this $3,510,000,000, then they might be able to lend it, but that is the only way they will lend it.

You can go to a bank if you want to and borrow money today if you believe you have confidence enough in the present conditions to go ahead and operate a business, but I would not invest any money today myself in any business where I was going to enlarge it. I have not that confidence, and we must restore such confidence in this country if we ever expect to get any place again.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNS. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Would the gentleman say that applies to industry generally?

Mr. JOHNS. That applies to industry, as I understand it, and talking not only of the bankers but businessmen everywhere, and I happen to be a businessman.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Then industry must be very funny, because in the last few years they have averaged 8.3 percent, and that is good for industry.

Mr. JOHNS. Let me tell the gentleman, as he may have noticed, 740 business organizations in this country that were reported on by the Chase National Bank showed that a large percentage of them did not make anything but lost millions of dollars last year.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. I am quoting the National City Bank.

Mr. JOHNS. The National City is the same as the Chase National. They both have the same obligations, and I would like to see the National City figures that the gentleman speaks about.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. The gentleman will find them in the RECORD.

Mr. JOHNS. There is no question about the fact that what we need in this country is confidence. We have the greatest resources of any country in the world and we have the money here. We do not need any more money to operate with in this country if we just could have confidence to invest what we have.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNS. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Does the gentleman know of anything that is more fundamental to confidence on the part of people in this country than knowledge that there will be an adequate flow of consumer buying power in the hands of the people of this country to purchase the goods that industry can create?

Mr. JOHNS. There is not any question about that, and there is no question but that the only place or the only thing we have any confidence in today in the United States is Government bonds, and that is because they are guaranteed by the United States Government. Just look at your bank statements and you will find that 25 percent of their deposits are now invested in United States bonds, and 60 percent of their resources.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Wisconsin may proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNS. That is true also of the insurance companies. They are investing in United States bonds and today United States bonds are the only investment that any organization that has money to invest will invest in, because there are not any commercial loans of any kind that are worth while, and that is the reason for it.

We still have faith in the Government and I have faith that the time is coming, and is not far away, when we are going to see a change in this country, but it is going to be at a time when the President of the United States and the Democratic Party are going to say to the people of the United States, "Now, we are through with experimenting, we are now going forward and transact business as we used to transact it in this country."

There have been many fine things that have been done, but there have been so many nonsensical things done that the American people are sick and tired of it, and they are not going to tolerate it any longer. [Applause.]

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I think I am accurate when I make the statement that the general support of title I of this bill is greater than with reference to any other provision. Certainly it is the most important provision in the bill so far as we hope to extend the benefits of the measure to the rural sections of the country. The adoption of this amendment would discriminate against those sections and destroy the benefits intended for them. The provision for the insurance of homes at larger cost is to be made permanent law under this bill. We are only asking to extend title I for 2 years. Certainly we should not stop short of that time if we are to give sympathetic consideration to the rural communities of the United States. I hope very much that the amendment will not be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. JOHNS) there were—ayes 57, noes 80.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOLCOTT: Page 2, line 10, after the word "tornado", insert the word "hurricane."

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. Section 2 of such act, as amended, is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"(f) The Administrator shall fix a premium charge for the insurance hereafter granted under this title, but in the case of any obligation representing any loan, advance of credit, or purchase, such premium charge shall not exceed an amount equivalent to 1 percent per annum of the net proceeds of such loan, advance of credit, or purchase for the term of such obligation, and such premium charge shall be payable in advance by the financial institution and shall be paid at such time and in such manner as may be prescribed by the Administrator. The moneys derived from such premium charges shall be deposited in an account in the Treasury of the United States, which account shall be available for defraying the operating expenses of the Federal Housing Administration under this title, and any amounts in such account which are not needed for such purpose may be used for the payment of claims in connection with the insurance granted under this title.

"(g) The Administrator is authorized and directed to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this title."

SEC. 3. Section 6 of such act, as amended, is hereby repealed.

SEC. 4. The provisions of sections 1, 2, and 3 of this act shall take effect on the first day of the second calendar month after the date of enactment of this act.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOLCOTT: Page 4, line 19, add a new section, as follows:

"Section 202 is hereby amended by striking out the word 'create' and inserting in lieu thereof the word 'created.'"

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, the Government Printing Office or the enrolling clerk inadvertently left out the letter "d" from the word "created." This is to correct that error in existing law and to avoid the possibility of anybody contesting the validity of a mortgage.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. Subsection (a) of section 203 of such act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 203. (a) The Administrator is authorized, upon application by the mortgagee, to insure as hereinafter provided any mortgage offered to him which is eligible for insurance as hereinafter provided, and, upon such terms as the Administrator may prescribe, to make commitments for the insuring of such mortgages prior to the date of their execution or disbursement thereon: Provided, That the aggregate amount of principal obligations of all mortgages insured under this title and outstanding at any one time shall not exceed $3,000,000,000, except that with the approval of the President such aggregate amount may be increased to not to exceed $4,000,000,000: Provided further, That on and after July 1, 1941, no mortgages shall be insured under this title except mortgages that cover property which is approved for mortgage insurance prior to the completion of the construction of such property."

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the section.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LUCE: Page 4, strike out section 5.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, this is the section that provides for continuing the insurance of existing structures for 2 years longer. It is the heart of the criticism of the bill. It is the one provision in the bill to which objection is made by the representatives of the building and loan associations. It is favored by the large insurance companies. The building and loan associations—and I say this simply because there may be some gentlemen present who were not here earlier in the day—see in this section competition by the Government which will deprive them of an important field for the investment of their money. The choice lies between 6,000,000 members of these thrift institutions on the one side and on the other the spokesmen for the large insurance companies. A vote for the amendment is a vote to continue the opportunity for growth of an organization which had its foundation more than a hundred years ago, which grew through the century until it reached the point where Congress decided to supplement it by encouraging the organization of Federal associations of the same sort throughout the country. This growth of thrift associations can stand side by side with that of the savings banks. They were an eastern institution, and even at this time there are but nine between Ohio and the Pacific Ocean, and none in the South. Savings banks and building and loan associations were the only opportunities for the encouragement of thrift and for the building of homes by amortized payments.

That idea of amortization has now been taken over by the national banks, the State banks, trust companies, and other similar institutions. A good idea, but the building and loan associations began it, and have been using it for a hundred years. These organizations are the best things we have in this country for encouraging people to save money and to use that money, if they desire, in the building of homes. About one-fifth of the members are home builders. The other four-fifths are depositors. At great expense very widely the Government has advertised the desirability of using these institutions, but here it comes along and gives the opportunity to other banking institutions to take away the chance to invest the money of the thrifty people of small incomes. Because of their fear, they wish to be let alone. They do not wish to have to compete with a Government that can borrow money for 2 percent, loan it out for 5 percent, and so destroy any competitor. I join in their hope that we may not pass the legislation as it stands, but may continue the law to the state in which it is now.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Undoubtedly, if the work of the Authority is to continue, it is necessary that there shall be an increase in the amount of insurance liability to be incurred. That is one of the new provisions in the section which is covered by the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE]. The provision only permits incurring additional liability in the amount of a billion dollars, upon approval of the President, which is intended to take care of the necessities and developments that may be faced before there can be further legislation on this subject.

In this connection, it should be said again that the Government is not making loans on homes or other real property. What is undertaken to be accomplished by this legislation is to set up machinery by which loans may be insured, at the expense of the borrowers, but in a way that will stimulate a revival of building activities, induce capital to make investments of this kind, and to afford citizens opportunity to become home owners. If we strike from this bill the provision which extends authority to insure loans on existing structures, we shall be confronted with many instances where such loans are inseparable and indispensable to new construction and the building of new homes. It is similar to the case of new and second-hand automobiles. In many of the States legislation has been passed to permit citizens to avail themselves of this legislation.

Under statutory regulations in the States lending companies, banks, building and loan associations, and other lending agencies find themselves handicapped by restrictions as to the portion of the value of the property upon which loans may be made, 60 percent being about the highest. The States have passed legislation taking out of these restrictive statutory provisions loans that are insured by the Federal Housing Authority. If the Federal Housing Authority withdraws from that field of service, citizens of those States will find themselves back under statutory restrictions, limiting the amounts of loans to be made, which will leave them under the old system of second and third mortgages, with all the incidental expenses to be incurred.

This provision of the law would be extended under this bill for only 2 years, and we have a provision in the bill which prohibits the insurance of a loan for refinancing an existing mortgage except where the applicant files a certificate that prior to the making of the application he applied to the holder of the existing mortgage and that the mortgagee refused to make a loan of a like amount and at as favorable annual cost as that of the loan secured by the mortgage offered for insurance. It is limited in operation to only 2 years. This legislation has accomplished a great measure of relief to existing home owners who would otherwise suffer unjust discrimination as between them and citizens engaged in the construction of new homes.

I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LUCE) there were—ayes 64 and noes 76.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, whatever uses F. H. A. had during the first days of the depression, the billions of funds in private institutions, which are now available, make those uses a thing of the past. Our position now, the present amendment having been voted down, is just simply this: If it is safe and wise to make loans for 25 years at 90-percent valuation, then our laws should be changed to permit private institutions to make such loans. If it is unsafe and unwise for such loans to be made, then our Government should not guarantee them. Insofar as funds available for building are concerned, I wish to read a telegram which I have just received:

For 72 years Columbus building loan and savings associations annually have financed more homes in Columbus than all other lending agencies combined. Today they have surplus money, running into the millions, which is available for home loans. Interest rate varies from 5 to 6 percent, depending on security offered, repayable on monthly plan running from 10 to 15 years, no commission or bonus charged. Loan fees lowest in history—one-half of 1 percent on existing property, 1 percent on construction loans, including inspection.

The reason that F. H. A. loans take the business away from these home institutions is the publicity and propaganda that goes on. If there is anything unsafe about the loans which F. H. A. is making, they should not make them. If the provisions of their loans are safe, then these institutions should be permitted to make them. There is no sense or necessity for extension of the present F. H. A. provisions.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. And if the interest rates generally down through the years tend downward your local building and loan associations will meet the situation and keep those rates comparable to the rates charged by the Government lending agency?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. That is correct. Up to now we have only had usury laws and have not needed competing Government institutions by which the Government attempted to jump in and regulate rates of interest on private construction loans.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I concur in what the gentleman has said.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. RICH. And if the Federal Government would give private institutions and national banks the same privilege it has given the F. H. A., then these banking institutions would lend a lot of the money themselves, would they not?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. They would, except that they know a 90-percent mortgage loan is not safe for any man's money or any government's money.

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. SACKS. If the telegram the gentleman read is correct, under this particular bill a man would have to keep his loan with the building and loan association and could not get it from the F. H. A. because the committee adopted an amendment providing that where the terms were equal the F. H. A. could not insure the mortgage, that it must remain with the building and loan association.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. That amendment refers only to refinancing of existing mortgages, and has no reference to loans for new construction.

[Here the gavel fell.]

By unanimous consent, the pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. Paragraph (3) of subsection (b) of section 203 of such act, as amended, is amended by striking out the words "until July 1, 1939."

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VOORHIS of California: On page 5, line 15, after the period, add a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 7. Paragraph (5) of subsection (b) of section 203 of such act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"'Bear interest (exclusive of premium charges for insurance) at not to exceed 4 percent per annum on the amount of the principal obligation outstanding at any time, or not to exceed 5 percent per annum if the Administrator finds that in certain areas or under special circumstances the mortgage market demands it.'"

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, this amendment simply reduces by 1 percent the rate of interest on title II loans, reducing it from 5 percent to 4 percent, or from 6 percent to 5 percent in case the Administrator deems such a rate necessary.

The reason for the amendment is as follows:

It means a net realization on the part of the banks of 3½ percent interest after subtracting 1 percent for the insurance premium charge. This 3½ percent return is on a guaranteed loan on which the bank takes no risk. This is as gilt-edged as a Government bond. The reduction of 1 percent will mean to a great many people the possibility of their being able to finance a home.

On a number of occasions during this debate reference was made to the British experience, but always without mentioning the fact that the rate of interest in Great Britain over the period of the last few years has been universally considerably lower than ours, and that one of the thing that caused the increase in housing activity was the fact that the rate of interest on housing loans in Britain was held to a 3½ or 4 percent rate pretty consistently.

Furthermore, if this rate of interest is reduced by this modest amount I have suggested, it will mean in effect that it will be easier for people to pay out their mortgage, it will mean less chance of foreclosure, less likelihood that there will be any difficulty on the part of the borrower to pay out his loan.

In my opinion, as I stated a little while ago, it is generally true that the lower you can keep the rate of interest on money the greater will be the likelihood of people investing in productive enterprise instead of purchasing bonds, mortgages, or other evidences of debt. In this particular instance we have a long experience, and to my mind a very successful experience, with this F. H. A. program. To my mind this would be a logical step for us to take. I believe it can be demonstrated that it is perfectly sound and possible, and I think that for the lending institution to realize 3½ percent on a perfectly safe proposition is ample under the circumstances.

One Member this afternoon said that perhaps we had too much building. As a matter of fact America is short at least 2,500,000 homes that she needs. As a matter of further fact, the more people of a nation who can live in homes that they themselves own, the better the morale of the nation is going to be. I am not impressed at all with the argument that this is a matter of Government paternalism, and so on, and so forth. It is simply a matter of the Government's going along in a day of abundant accumulated capital and channeling investment into productive fields, giving the protection that can be given by Government and nobody else, and taking the steps that they ought to take in order to protect a system of free economy. Believe me, Mr. Chairman, if you go back to the "good old days" when you tried to adjust these things by means of bigger and better bankruptcies and when you abandon all the efforts that are now being made and have been made to increase the consuming purchasing power of the people of America, I hesitate to think how bad the result is going to be for the very business people that you profess yourselves desirous of protecting.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Have not the building and loan associations for years told us that the best way to build up the morale of our people was to enable them to have their own homes?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Indeed they have.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Does not the gentleman believe in this day of preparedness that to have more of the people of the country home owners is a desirable thing?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I certainly do.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. And that this legislation will enable more extended home ownership on the part of those who have never had an opportunity to have homes? Is not that the object of this legislation?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Exactly.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I think probably it is pretty well known that I and several others are very much concerned about the interest rate. Last year when this bill was before the House a very valiant fight was made to reduce the interest rate. I am sure the gentleman from California must have joined in that fight.

It developed that this was not an agency which lends money. It is an agency which insures loans made by private institutions.

The gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] may say that they are getting a gilt-edged insured mortgage at 3½ percent, but I do not think the gentleman means that. If the gentleman is sincere in wanting to give this act the full effect of which it is capable, he will not press his amendment, for it is pretty well known that the administrative cost to any bank or building and loan association or other lending agency is a little more than 1 percent.

Now, whose money do they lend? They lend the depositors' money and, if the interest on their earnings is reduced so that there is only a spread of one-half of 1 percent between what they pay in interest and what they collect as interest on these insured mortgages, then there will be no inducement whatsoever on the part of the banks and other lending agencies to lend money on real estate. The depositors are the ones who suffer. We thereby defeat the whole purpose of the act.

Let us put ourselves in the position of a board of directors of any bank or lending agency. We have the choice between a 3½-percent mortgage with the expenses attending foreclosure, if any, getting the title in shape to turn over to the Federal Housing Administration, the carrying charges on our books and the administrative cost, and an investment in a 3½- or 4-percent municipal or State bond. If we were practical bankers, we would say: "Let us fill our portfolio with good, attractive municipal bonds at 4 percent rather than take a chance on these houses burning down and the insurance companies not being solvent enough to pay for them, or the carrying charges will eat up all of the profits."

"In other words, we are taking a chance on these F. H. A. insured mortgages, but we are taking no chance on these gilt-edge municipal bonds. After all, why do we not reduce the interest rate that we pay our depositors and invest all our capital and surplus to protect the liability of our depositors in Government bonds?"

It is a simple matter for the banks to say to the depositors: "We can only afford to pay you 1 percent because we have been forced into a situation where we have to invest only in Government bonds which only pay 2, 2¼, or 2½ percent and the spread is so narrow we cannot afford to pay you more than 1 percent."

I like to feel when I stand up here and advocate that the gentleman's amendment be defeated that I am doing so in the interest of the home owner, in the interest of the man who wants to borrow this money at a reasonable rate of interest. If the gentleman is sincere about this, and I hope he is, why will he not offer an amendment to title I where the interest rate is not 5½ percent but 9.7 percent? Why does he not offer his amendment to title I where the interest rate is 9.7 percent instead of to title II where the interest rate is only 5½ percent?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] has said, I believe, everything to be said in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS]. There is no one here who is more interested in reducing the interest rate to the home owners of the country than I am, but at the same time we have to look at this from a practical viewpoint. If we put in this bill the requirement that the interest rate be reduced to 3½ percent, it will absolutely kill the effect of the legislation. The lending institutions and building and loan associations of this country are already complaining about the low rate of interest. They are complaining about the F. H. A. taking away their business now. If we put in a provision of this kind it will add to that claim and will more or less absolutely destroy the effect of the bill.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. Subsection (b) of section 203 of such act, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof a new paragraph, as follows:

"(8) Any contract of insurance heretofore or hereafter executed by the Administrator under this title shall be conclusive evidence of the eligibility of the mortgage for insurance and render the validity of such contract of insurance incontestable in the hands of an approved mortgagee from the date of such execution, except for fraud or misrepresentation on the part of the insured mortgagee."

SEC. 8. Section 203 of such act, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof a new subsection, as follows:

"(e) No mortgage which in whole or in part refinances a then existing mortgage shall be insured under this section unless the mortgagor files with the application his certificate to the Administrator that prior to the making of the application the mortgagor applied to the holder of such existing mortgage and that, after reasonable opportunity, such holder failed or refused to make a loan of a like amount and at as favorable an annual cost to the mortgagor, including amortization provisions, commission, interest rate, and costs to the mortgagor for legal services, appraisal fees, title expenses, and similar charges as those of the loan secured by the mortgage offered for insurance."

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. SPENCE: Strike out all of section 8 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 8. Section 203 of such act, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof a new subsection, as follows:

"'(e) No mortgage which in whole or in part refinances a then existing mortgage shall be insured under this section unless the mortgagor files with the application his certificate to the Administrator that prior to the making of the application the mortgagor applied to the holder of such existing mortgage for such refinancing and that, after reasonable opportunity such holder failed or refused to make a loan of a like amount and on as favorable terms as those of the loan secured by the mortgage offered for insurance after taking into account amortization provisions, commission, interest rate, mortgage insurance premium, and costs to the mortgagor for legal services, appraisal fees, title expenses, and similar charges.'"

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to prevent the raiding of the portfolios of the independent, uninsured, lending institutions by those who are the beneficiaries of these insured mortgage loans. I may say that the amendment has the approval of both the Housing Administration and the uninsured lending institutions. It merely provides that where a man desires to refinance his mortgage, before he can obtain an insured mortgage he must make an affidavit that the present holder of his mortgage refuses to give him as favorable terms, as he can obtain from an insured institution.

This is a matter of vital importance to the uninsured building and loan associations, as well as the uninsured other lending institutions of the United States.

While I am in favor of this legislation generally and believe it is beneficial, I am also confident the future of America and her prosperity lies along the lines of encouragement of private enterprise. I believe we should encourage the local uninsured lending institutions. The building and loan associations in my community, and I presume most of the Members have had the same experience, have encouraged a community spirit, they have encouraged thrift, they have encouraged home building, and I believe they should be assisted in every way in order to continue the useful functions they have performed in the past.

This amendment makes very little change in the present section except that it strikes out the words "at as favorable an annual cost" and substitutes therefor "as favorable terms" inasmuch as the Housing Administration officials said they would have difficulty in administering the act under the "as favorable annual cost" provision. There is also added the words "mortgage insurance premiums," so all the elements of the cost of an insured mortgage are taken into consideration in this amendment. If after taking into account all those costs, the present holder of the mortgage fails to make as favorable a loan as can be made under the insured mortgage provision, the mortgagor is then at liberty to obtain an insured loan.

I do not suppose there will be any objection to this amendment because it meets with the approval not only of the lending institutions but of the Housing Administration. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the Committee amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE].

The Committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. Subsection (a) of section 204 of such act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 204. (a) In any case in which the mortgagee under a mortgage insured under section 203 or section 210 shall have foreclosed and taken possession of the mortgaged property in accordance with regulations of, and within a period to be determined by, the Administrator, or shall, with the consent of the Administrator, have otherwise acquired such property from the mortgagor after default, the mortgagee shall be entitled to receive the benefit of the insurance as hereinafter provided, upon (1) the prompt conveyance to the Administrator of title to the property which meets the requirements of rules and regulations of the Administrator in force at the time the mortgage was insured, and which is evidenced in the manner prescribed by such rules and regulations, and (2) the assignment to him of all claims of the mortgagee against the mortgagor or others, arising out of the mortgage transaction or foreclosure proceedings, except such claims as may have been released with the consent of the Administrator. Upon such conveyance and assignment the obligation of the mortgagee to pay the premium charges for insurance shall cease and the Administrator shall, subject to the cash adjustment hereinafter provided, issue to the mortgagee debentures having a total face value equal to the value of the mortgage and a certificate of claim, as hereinafter provided. For the purposes of this subsection, the value of the mortgage shall be determined, in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the Administrator, by adding to the amount of the original principal obligation of the mortgage which was unpaid on the date of the institution of foreclosure proceedings, or on the date of the acquisition of the property after default other than by foreclosure, the amount of all payments which have been made by the mortgagee for taxes, ground rents, and water rates, which are liens prior to the mortgage, and special assessments which either become liens after the date of the insurance of the mortgage or which are noted on the application for insurance, insurance on the mortgaged property, and any mortgage insurance premiums paid after either of such dates, and by deducting from such total amount any amount received on account of the mortgage after either of such dates, and any amount received as rent or other income from the property, less reasonable expenses incurred in handling the property, after either of such dates: Provided, That with respect to mortgages which are accepted for insurance prior to July 1, 1941, under section 203 (b) (2) (B) of this act, and which are foreclosed before there shall have been paid on account of the principal obligation of the mortgage a sum equal to 10 percent of the appraised value of the property as of the date the mortgage was accepted for insurance, there may be included in the debentures issued by the Administrator, on account of foreclosure costs actually paid by the mortgagee and approved by the Administrator an amount not in excess of 2 percent of the unpaid principal of the mortgage as of the date of the institution of foreclosure proceedings, but in no event in excess of $75."

SEC. 10. Subsection (g) of section 204 of such act, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "The power to convey and to execute in the name of the Administrator deeds of conveyance, deeds of release, assignments and satisfactions of mortgages, and any other written instrument relating to real property or any interest therein heretofore or hereafter acquired by the Administrator pursuant to the provisions of this act, may be exercised by the Administrator or by any Assistant Administrator appointed by him, without the execution of any express delegation of power or power of attorney: Provided, That nothing in this subsection shall be construed to prevent the Administrator from delegating such power by order or by power of attorney, in his discretion, to any officer, agent, or employee he may appoint."

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COCHRAN: After line 11 on page 9 insert a new section to read as follows:

"SEC. 10 A. Subsection (c) of section 207 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following proviso: 'Provided, That in estimating the value of the property or project for the purpose of determining the amount of insurance eligible under this section, the Administrator shall determine the value of the property as of the date of the application for insurance, and in no case shall he estimate the value of the property or project for insurance under this section to be in excess of the value of the property at such time plus the value of the proposed improvements thereon.' "

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, yesterday there was a lengthy discussion in reference to two projects in the metropolitan area of the city from which I come, St. Louis. It was pointed out by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] how land values had been written up in making up the 20 percent that it is necessary under the law for the promoters to advance. My amendment does not touch anything except the land value at the time the application is filed. The amendment is offered for the purpose of preventing a recurrence of what happened in my city. As the gentleman from Massachusetts well pointed out, it was not the fault of the Federal Housing Administration but the fault of the law. If this be so, it is our duty to change the law.

Paragraph (c) of section 207 of the act, which I seek to amend, gives the Administrator the power in this way:

And not to exceed 80 percent of the amount which the Administrator estimates will be the value of the property or project when the proposed improvements are completed.

This shows the F. H. A. acted within the law. My contention is that we should change the law.

What happened? Promoters in my city purchased land for $44,000 in the name of a stenographer of a firm and the next day they wrote the value up in excess of $170,000 without spending one cent on it. That was included in the 20 percent. On another project the purchase price was about $170,000 and that was written up to about $300,000.

Do we mean what we say, that the promoter shall put up 20 percent before the Government will guarantee the mortgage of 80 percent? Remember now the write-ups were before one dollar had been spent in improvements. In the end it is admitted by F. H. A. the promoters spent none of their own money inside the property line. My amendment provides that the Administrator shall make the appraisal of the value of the property at the time the application is made. If the property is purchased 6 months in advance and $100,000 in improvements made thereon, certainly the promoter should have the right to add that $100,000 he has expended.

I appeal to my Democratic colleagues to support my amendment. I can say to you there has been no criticism of the Roosevelt administration that has been more severe in the city of St. Louis than there has been in connection with these two projects. The newspapers have been full of it. This is the way to stop it. I repeat, if we mean what we say, that 20 percent should be advanced by the promoters, then 20 percent should be advanced and they should not be permitted to write up land values as they did in my city. Not only the papers and real-estate operators protest, the general public protested and voiced their disapproval.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. If this amendment had been written into the law previous to this time, what occurred at St. Louis could not have happened.

Mr. COCHRAN. It never could have happened. They would have been required to have placed the land value in on the basis of what it cost. I say if they make any improvements after they buy the land and before the application is filed they are in a position to add that to the cost of the property under my amendment.

This is a fair amendment. I say it is our duty to change the law, when those in control of the Banking and Currency Committee admit that it was the law and not the Federal Housing Administration that was responsible. I again appeal to my colleagues on the Democratic side of the aisle to support this amendment so there will not be a recurrence of what has happened in my home city and save our administration from criticism. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

If I had not paid one tribute this afternoon to the gentleman from Missouri I would pay him one now. We rejoice in the amendment. I rejoice that what I said yesterday has now been fully confirmed and acknowledged. We had thought of offering some such amendment from this side, but had decided to offer an amendment to strike out the entire section. However, like the Spence amendment, this amendment does help a very great deal. We are pleased enough that they acknowledge the situation which we claim exists and have gone at least halfway to correct it.

Again I am glad to comment on it and extend another word of praise to my highly respected friend from Missouri. Who could afford not to vote for his amendment? Has it come to pass that so-called watered stock is actually defended? [Applause.]

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, let me say at the outset that no citizen in the district that I represent will ever receive any possible benefit under section 207 of this bill; certainly not any direct benefit. It is a provision the benefits of which are limited to cities, and I am sure, I will say, that I have no less interest in the provision because of that fact. I merely call attention to the situation in order that Members of the House may know what is involved.

I have stood here this afternoon to plead for an extension of the benefits of this legislation to the rural sections of this country. I think it is right. I am sure other Members of this House feel as I feel about it, whether they come from urban or from rural districts. But Members of the House from our cities should understand that if this provision of the bill is destroyed or its usefulness curtailed, the loss will fall upon citizens in the urban centers of the Nation.

Mr. Chairman, the fact is that Congress cannot administer laws of this kind. We must simply pass the legislation and set up the best possible methods for the administration of the law. There may have been some mistakes made in the administration of the Federal Housing Act. I do not believe I have ever heard of any complaint except in this one particular instance, and which, it seems to me, is quite a tribute to the officials who administer this law. Mr. Chairman, there can be but one true test by which to appraise property from the standpoint of the lender, and that is to see what sort of security is to stand back of the loan. In determining this the appraiser must look at the value of the property out of which the money is to be derived in case of foreclosure, and that means that the solvency of the mortgage must depend upon the value of the property at the time of default. This being the case, there can be no fast and hard rule such as is attempted by this amendment to eliminate consideration of improvement in value.

Everybody knows that where a project, involving millions of dollars, such as contemplated by this provision of the bill, is undertaken in any section of a city, vast enhancements in value will take place in that community. It is inevitable. There is no good reason why the people who live there should be penalized and deprived of the benefits of that development. It simply discriminates against loans of this kind. No such measure is laid down in making appraisals in any other instance. As the bill now provides loans are permitted to only 80 percent of the value of the property, whereas in other loans insurance is allowed up to 90 percent of value. Certainly the Administrator should be left free to appraise the value of property of this type of loans fairly and equitably and from the standpoint of the security and protection afforded the Authority that insures the loan.

The provision offered by the gentleman from Missouri would chain the people of a community where a development takes place to existing values in the present depressed status of real-estate values. All of us would like to see values restored to normal at the earliest possible day, and that is one of the purposes of this bill.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. I will say to the gentleman from Alabama that as far as the majority of the people of St. Louis are concerned, they want no more projects of this character, if you are going to permit them to write up the land values as they have done in the two projects we already have. [Applause.]

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I respectfully insist that the gentleman's statement is not warranted. There is no writing up of values so far as we have information in this instance, but an orderly, regular ascertainment of the value of the security back of the loan as in other cases, and there is no good reason why a discrimination should be made in loans of this type.

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

At this late hour I am not going to take the entire 5 minutes, but in view of the fact this St. Louis matter has been brought up, I may say that I was shocked myself when I first heard the facts, but when Mr. Brigham, the gentleman I mentioned earlier in the day was testifying before the committee, we specifically asked him about this St. Louis matter. As a matter of fact, he testified that the reason he looked up that very project was because my good colleague the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] had talked to him about it, and we asked him by a direct question what he thought about it. He said that as far as the land is concerned the act protects the public, because it states that although it can lend up to 80 percent, the total amount of the loan can be no more than the actual cost of the construction of the building. Now, the only thing that the promoter of the project would get would be some stock, the income from which is also limited by this act. If the property is paying and the Government risk is relieved, then he has the property. If, on the other hand, he defaults, the Government gets the property at the value on which it lent the money, which is not more than the cost of the actual construction, and whether you write the value of the land at $150,000 or $30,000, the Government in addition to getting this property gets also the land and the improvements, while they lose everything.

Now, how is this added cost made up? It is made up, as testified, in cash for architect fees, sewers, and other things, and, for example, when a piece of land is bought and improved, it certainly becomes more valuable.

Take, for instance, any other manufacturer or producer of some article, say, an automobile. He buys his raw materials and puts them together and he is allowed a profit on that property. The same should be given to the promoter of a project, and the Government is protected because it gets the first lien and its 80 percent insurance cannot exceed the actual cost of the construction of the property.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SACKS. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN. If the 20 percent was put up in actual money rather than in water, that would be reflected in the cost in the end, and it would be reflected in the rent, and the public would get the property for cheaper rent than they would when you put in a lot of water and paper and not money, and I say to the gentleman that there was not 1 cent spent on that land prior to the time that they wrote up the value. It was bought one day and written up the next.

Mr. SACKS. But the Government in committing itself bases it upon the finished product. The rent was not affected, and it was so testified before our committee, because the Government limited the amount of income, and limited it within the wage group that is supposed to rent the property. The trouble has been that we are looking at this thing as a simple property that is bought and then offered for resale at a higher price, and the value increased. That is not true in this project. Under this section its investment is based upon an insurance by the Government on a loan, which is based on the actual cost of construction. The rent, which of course added to it, goes to the Government only in default, and the stock is only as good as the project is itself.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. I very much hope that the House will adopt this amendment. If we are not careful the effort of the Government to help in these projects is going to wind up in a lot of national scandals despite the best our administrative officers may do. How it comes about that anybody would want the Government to put up guaranty of any more than 80 percent of the cost of the project, holding the price of the land at its value at the time application is made, I cannot understand. When we consider who is the Government, in this matter, who is guaranteeing these payments, it is all of the rest of the people. Here comes an individual who wants to build some houses for profit. He does not put up all of the money himself. That money is provided indirectly by the people who do not share in his profit. If as a matter of fact a Government activity in a community does increase the value of property, then the Government—the rest of the people—ought to have the advantage of it, in the reduction of their guaranty, in the reduction of the probability or possibility that they will be left to hold the bag. The rest of the people who are putting up the guaranty ought to have the advantage resulting from their guarantee which makes the project possible. We know, as a matter of practical knowledge, that some, if not many of these projects, are so jockeyed that the Government puts up all of the money—guarantees it, which is the same thing in effect, insofar as Federal liability is concerned. I hope we adopt the Cochran amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, in accordance with what the distinguished chairman of our committee said, I can say this, that I, perhaps, come from the most rural district of any man in this entire Congress. There never will be a single individual in my district who will be able in any way to enjoy the benefits of these projects erected under section 207. There certainly has been more misunderstanding about this section and the projects erected under it than anything else that has been discussed here this afternoon. The F. H. A. has made a remarkable record with reference to the handling of these projects. So far there has not been one single cent of loss, and it must be remembered that these projects are being conducted under a limited dividend corporation, which prevents the loss of any money to the Government and prohibits the making of profits by the stockholders in the concern. Until all installment and interest payments are made, until all repairs are paid for, until the taxes are paid, and until the insurance is paid, until the operating expenses are paid, there is not a possibility, under the supervision of the Administrator and under the jurisdiction of a limited dividend corporation, for the so-called promoters to get one dollar out of it. Then why all this talk about somebody writing up the false value of the property? That is the fact. Under this law and under the provisions in it, everything must be taken care of before the stockholders can get anything.

What is the equity in one of these projects? The equity represents the difference between the appraised value fixed by the F. H. A. and the amount of the mortgage. That equity is made up of land values; it is made up of architect's and builder's fees; it is made up of cash advanced; it is made up of outside improvements such as streets, sidewalks, sewer and water connections; it is made up of all those things—highways that are built, schoolhouses that are constructed in the community, trading centers that are established, and all that. This amendment seeks to limit the value of that land to its original value before any improvements were made, notwithstanding the fact that everybody knows that every other landholder in that community will have his land increased perhaps 50 percent by reason of these improvements. They are going to deny the man who has the energy, the ability, and the foresight and courage to undertake the development of one of these projects any increased value in his land, by reason of his interest in it and his improvement of it, and at the same time every other one in that community whose land has been increased by reason of that improvement will reap the benefits of it. You have only to go across the river into Virginia to find that. Right over at Colonial Village that land was bought and valued at a very modest figure, but since the Garden Apartments were put up the surrounding land has increased 10 times in value. Those people who own the adjoining land get the benefit of the improvement in increased value of their land, yet this amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] would prohibit any increased value of the land owned by the sponsors of the project by reason of the improvements that have been put upon it by their enterprise and by the expenditure of their own money and at their risk to give employment to labor and furnish low-rent housing for those of modest income. It is unreasonable. It is unworkable. It will destroy the program. It will increase unemployment. It is unfair to those who want to engage in this enterprise. Not only that, it will absolutely and completely destroy the action of the F. H. A. under section 207. The adoption of this amendment will play into the hands of a few real-estate dealers who have old apartments to rent for which they charge unreasonable and exorbitant rent. As I say, as far as I am personally concerned and the people I represent, it will never make one cent of difference to me or them, but in the interest of this program, in the interest of fairness and justice to those who are undertaking this work and in the name of men who want work and who desire to live in modern quarters and enjoy some of the comforts and conveniences of life at a reasonable rent, do not kill this project by voting this amendment. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

It just occurred to me that this amendment is striking at a situation very similar to that of a man who owns a stock of baled cotton, we will say, and he wants to borrow money on it with the idea that he will manufacture it into cloth and the cloth into shirts, and sell those at retail at about 100 times the price per pound of the raw cotton. Under the present regulations he could reasonably expect the Government or a very generous banker with his loans guaranteed by the Government to lend him money not on the value of his cotton, which is 8½ cents a pound, but upon the value of the finished product, the increased value of the cotton, the increase which he proposes to make by reason of the loan which is advanced to him.

Now, if there ever was a banking institution that could exist and lend money on any such basis as that, it has escaped my observation, or else I would be borrowing from that institution and engaging in that kind of financing rather than serving in this body.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POAGE. I yield.

Mr. PATMAN. Is it not more like desert land that is worth 25 cents an acre until a contract is made that provides water for that land, and then it is worth $1,000 an acre?

Mr. POAGE. There is not any desert land in my viewpoint that would ever increase from 25 cents an acre to $1,000 an acre by reason of any contract that was ever entered into. There is desert land that has been increased in value by reason of bringing water to it, and when the water was on it the land was worth more than it was before there was any water on it. After these houses are on this land, after these buildings are there, the land undoubtedly does increase in value, but the loan must be made, if we are to call it a loan and not a gift, on land values as they exist and not on values which someone hopes to create. The loan is being made upon the land, and if this Government is going to attempt to lend money to people with the idea of going out and creating value that is not there, lending on a speculative value, a purely fictitious value, a problematical value, I might say, a value that does not exist but which somebody simply hopes will exist at some future time; then we are headed to the proposition of buying up these projects rather than talking about making any kind of loans whatever.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POAGE. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman knows, however, in this instance that the money that improved the land inside the property line did not come out of the 20 percent that the promoters will put up. It came out of the 80 percent that the promoters got through the F. H. A. That is what I am complaining about.

Mr. POAGE. Certainly, and it is exactly what I want to help you stop, because it never was sound banking to loan 100 cents on the dollar on any kind of development.

Eighty cents on the dollar is a good deal higher than any of our commercial organizations ever felt they could safely lend. There never was a private banking institution or land-lending institution that felt it could safely lend 80 cents on the dollar of actual existent value. The Government is being extremely generous. I am glad it is; I am glad to see it go to a reasonable extent; but we are extremely generous when we guarantee 80 percent of the money necessary to provide the construction. When, however, we open it up and say that we are going to let you put in not the value that is there but the value that you hope may be there at some time in the distant future, then we have gone far beyond the realm of reasonable banking and into the proposition of pure subsidy; but it is a subsidy not to home owners, not to the people we want to help, but to real-estate speculators, and I cannot think it is the policy of this Government to go into the business of subsidizing real-estate speculators.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POAGE. I yield.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. As I understand it, the gentleman from Missouri, who just addressed the House, said that this project increased the price which the people who want to buy homes had to pay for land in the neighborhood of these projects.

Mr. POAGE. Of course it does; of course it increases the price to the people who want to buy; and usually the speculator who is borrowing the money will be the man who will own that vacant property. He is going to reap the reward of the increased price, not only on the adjoining property but also on the rental from the property built by a Government-guaranteed loan. It is true, as some of the gentlemen have said, there is a limit on the rate of return. But this very rate of return is calculated on the entire investment, including any water. If there is a real value of $100,000 and a $100,000 write-up; and the promoter is limited to a 6-percent return, his return will still be just twice as large and the cost to the tenants will still be just twice as great as if the promoter had been confined to actual value.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I am glad to see this thing get a thorough airing. It was aired quite thoroughly in the committee, and in consequence those who contended that there was something bad about it later complimented the Administrator, believing, I assume, that it was as much the fault of the Congress as the Administrator.

I think we should appreciate what we would be doing if we adopt this amendment. We will confine the activity of the F. H. A. to the insurance of mortgages on single dwellings, or at least to dwellings to house not more than four families. If in anticipation of the construction of a $5,000,000 project by an institution legally chartered by a sovereign State a municipality spends thousands of dollars in the construction of sewers, waterworks, roads, sidewalks, what is crooked, what is unfair about the Federal Government's insuring 80 percent of the value of that property? What is the difference between that property at that stage when this insurance applies and a home built on a lot to which there has already been built a sidewalk, a street, a sewer, and water mains?

Those gentlemen who would scuttle the F. H. A. should vote for this amendment. There is something ironical in the fact that I, a simple—perhaps a simple-minded—Republican representing a district largely rural without a section 207 project in my district, am standing here defending this bill because I think that it is perfectly safe and sound. How many of you Representatives on the Democratic side will stand by your administration, will stand by your Administrator, will stand by the promises which have been made to the people of this Nation that they are going to have clean, sanitary homes in which to live, will stand by the workers in the building trades of this Nation to whom you said that you had set up F. H. A. to give them employment? Gentlemen, here is the test as to how sincere you were when you passed the United States Housing Authority Act, when you originally passed this act to give employment in the building trades. Gentlemen, if you vote for this amendment, you defeat the very purpose of the F. H. A. You will have not only your conscience to answer to but you will have to answer to the people who sent you here upon the promise that you would give them decent, safe housing and substantial employment.

Mr. Chairman, I do not feel too keenly about this; as a matter of fact, when the country can stand it—and I hope it will be within the next 2 years—I will vote to eliminate any such activity on the part of the Federal Government. But this is a condition we must face. Unless you want to demoralize the real-estate market, you have got to get out gradually; you cannot jump out. I hope that 2 years from now this administration will have eased out of all of these activities, because I do not want to disrupt the economy of this Nation.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. As I understand the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri, it provides that the value of the proposed improvement shall be included. I understood the gentleman to mention the cost of sewers, streets, and so forth.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Certainly; because when a mortgage is placed on property it is placed with relation to its entire value, the value of the land on which the house stands, not the value of the land before the house is built; the value of the property when it is improved. If the property is improved, the actual land value increases. What is crooked about taking into consideration consequential increases in value in determining the amount of the mortgage? I may have a field planted with corn or cotton, and it may be worth 50 cents an acre. Surely the Federal Housing Administration would not come along and insure a loan on that field for $5,000,000; but if I put improvements on it making the land more valuable, they would insure the loan on the basis of the actual value after the improvements have been completed.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, this is a question of whether watered stock will turn quickly into wine. It is now pleaded that when a house is built on the land the water will turn at once into wine. Why not wait and increase the mortgage when the fact has been established?

May I say, in answer to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WILLIAMS], that, of course, the owners of the stock cannot make any money until the proposition makes money. The promoter makes his money on the mortgage he gets to construct the house, or he would not generally be interested. If you adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri perhaps there will not be quite so many promoters.

The promoter may afterward become the manager. The common stock may be worth nothing except to control the management. I will try to relieve the discussion by asking, "What is a stockholder?" He buys a clay pipe and a 10-cent plug of tobacco. But the manager does the smoking. The stockholder says, "What can I do?" The manager says, "You can spit," and that is what the minority stockholder usually does when the manager is in control.

Now, there is a peculiar situation when this House will say that watered stock to this degree will be condoned. I do not say this business is crooked. You cannot blame a promoter too much. The law allows it if the F. H. A. will approve. The gentleman from Missouri says, "Let us base values on actualities and not on imagination." It is amazing that so many of the Committee members will try so hard to block this amendment. They should not expect Members to subject themselves to such censure as would follow approval of a write-up of this sort.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman certainly will admit that the promoters are going to make a great deal of money when they construct the building out of the 80 percent that they receive through the guaranty of the F. H. A.

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes; and we may expect that they may not be interested after the construction, unless they are made managers and can milk it. I showed you yesterday how they could do that if they wanted to be dishonest. We should not need to comment further on that. I am sure the House now understands the purpose of the amendment.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, we have just listened to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts tell us how this proposition could be milked. When he makes the statement that the proposition can be milked in the course of its being built up, he simply casts an aspersion on the entire F. H. A. organization. On the contrary, they check every piece of lumber and every bit of plumbing, every bit of brickwork and every bit of concrete that goes into the building before they pass on any of it. So, as far as the structure is concerned, you can depend on the fact that the F. H. A. inspection gives a first-class structure.

Let us analyze this situation about the lot. If the building were erected on a million-dollar lot and a million dollars worth of improvements put on it, it would still not produce any more than a similar building on a $50,000 lot. The F. H. A. makes the loan; the insurance company puts its money in a proposition that will show, when completed, that it will pay interest, principal, or amortization, insurance, taxes, and, in addition, about $50 per room to be set aside each year to take care of replacements and as a reserve. After all that is paid the man who owns an equity can get not to exceed 6 percent on that equity. If he gets over 6 percent, it goes toward amortizing the loan. They are always under the management, control, and direction of the F. H. A., and they cannot make a move without approval of the Administrator of the F. H. A.

Mr. SPENCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. SPENCE. I want to read this amendment so that it may be properly considered. The amendment is as follows:

SEC. 10–A. Subsection (c) of section 207 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following proviso: "Provided, That in estimating the value of the property or project for the purpose of determining the amount of insurance eligible under this section, the Administrator shall determine the value of the property as of the date of the application for insurance, and in no case shall he estimate the value of the property or project for insurance under this section to be in excess of the value of the property at such time plus the value of the proposed improvements thereon."

Is it not a matter of fact that there is an increment in the value of the land by reason of the construction of improvements?

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. That is true.

Mr. SPENCE. Not only the banks but every private developer of land understands that is the fact.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Absolutely.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman yield for a correction?

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. No.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman's statement is misleading.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. It is not misleading.

Mr. Chairman, I am informed that the major opposition to this particular project in St. Louis, which is the bone of contention, is made by a group of men who at the depth of the depression bought a lot of apartment houses in St. Louis for about 10 cents on the dollar. Now they are trying to collect rents based on 100 cents on the dollar and they are opposed to this. They are doing everything in their power to discredit it because it will cut in on the profit they would make from the poor devil who built the places in the first place.

Mr. GORE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GORE. May I read one statement out of the hearings, as follows:

It may be noted that an appraisal independently made by the New York Life Insurance Co. before making the loan compared within $16,000 of this figure.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Yes.

Mr. Chairman, under the law the F. H. A. made the loan because the law said that it should lend 80 percent of the completed income to produce the structure, and that is what they have done. If you agree to the amendment that is being proposed, you might as well throw that title completely out of the window because it will stop right there.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

The question was taken; and the Chair being in doubt, the Committee divided and there were—ayes 100, noes 79.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed as tellers Mr. STEAGALL and Mr. COCHRAN.

The Committee again divided, and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 113, noes 78.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOOD: Page 9, after line 11, insert the following:

"SEC. 11. Section 207 (b) (1) of the National Housing Act is amended by deleting the words 'Federal or State, instrumentalities, municipal corporate instrumentalities of one or more States, or.'"

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. RANKIN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the Committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 5324, to amend the National Housing Act and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

AUXILIARY VESSELS FOR THE NAVY

Mr. DELANEY, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following privileged resolution for printing in the RECORD:

House Resolution 135

Resolved, That immediately upon adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of S. 828, a bill to permit the President to acquire and convert, as well as to construct, certain auxiliary vessels for the Navy. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

ALTERATIONS AND REPAIRS TO CERTAIN NAVAL VESSELS

Mr. DELANEY, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following privileged resolution for printing in the RECORD:

House Resolution 136

Resolved, That immediately upon adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of S. 829, a bill to authorize alterations and repairs to certain naval vessels, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

AUTHORIZING THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY TO PROCEED WITH THE CONSTRUCTION OF CERTAIN PUBLIC WORKS

Mr. DELANEY, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following privileged resolution for printing in the RECORD:

House Resolution 137

Resolved, That immediately upon adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of H. R. 2878, a bill to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to proceed with the construction of certain public works, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. TREADWAY, Mr. RANKIN, and Mr. SPENCE asked and were given permission to revise and extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. KITCHENS and Mr. HARRINGTON asked and were given permission to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. BOLLES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time I was granted to address the House this afternoon may be deferred until Thursday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that business in order on Calendar Wednesday, tomorrow, may be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT APPROPRIATION BILL, 1940

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 4630) making appropriations for the Military Establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference requested by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. SNYDER, TERRY, STARNES of Alabama, COLLINS, KERR, POWERS, ENGEL, and BOLTON.

CIVILIAN CONSERVATION CORPS

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, today is the sixth anniversary of the Civilian Conservation Corps, which I believe is one of the most meritorious agencies of this administration.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to include as a part of my remarks at this point a letter I have addressed to the editor of Happy Days, the authorized weekly of the Civilian Conservation Corps, in which I tell of my high regard for the work being done by that agency.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, the letter to which I have referred is as follows:

MARCH 20, 1939.

Mr. RAY HOYT,
Editor, Happy Days,
Daily News Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR HOYT: I want to take this opportunity to extend my sincere congratulations to the Civilian Conservation Corps upon the sixth anniversary of its inception.

I have visited many of the C. C. C. camps and always my admiration has been increased for the program which is so successfully being carried forward. This is the type of work which can effectively be carried on under Government guidance and control. The conservation program, from the material side, means that through Civilian Conservation Corps activities we are building a better land in this Nation. On the human side, the program has certainly gone far toward building better men.

I believe the investment made in the Civilian Conservation Corps has been a wise one. It is my considered opinion that it should be carried on. I shall cooperate enthusiastically in support of the permanent establishment of this worth-while agency.

With personal good wishes, I am

Very sincerely yours,

JENNINGS RANDOLPH.

FAVORITE SON VERSUS FAVORITE STATE

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, it is fine to see so many Members together on the floor of the House this afternoon. Let us consider a practice that has grown up and now deprives the people of this country of much of the highest use, choice leadership, character, and brains; the practice indulged in by both our leading political parties of nominating the party standard bearer with an eye and ear to geographical position rather than personal qualifications.

It is a great and glorious thing to be made President of these United States. It is no mean thing, whether or not successful, to be nominated by a major political party for President or for Vice President. But with 130,000,000 people, with its 3,000,000 square miles of area, its near 2,000,000,000 acres of land, has not the day come to America when she can look simply to the man to be chosen and to the program his selection should indicate?

Every 4 years the officials and effective adherents of each of the leading parties hold a great convention. All eyes are turned to the city of meeting and all ears attuned to the loud voice of pronouncement and proclamation. A platform is presented to the people of the United States, and then comes the naming of party standard bearers, candidates for President and Vice President.

How is this done?

Election results for the past 4 to 8 years are carefully studied, and the more highly populated States, with patronizing consideration of central location, as well as political border-line history, are given the overwhelming odds. Far into the night are figures compiled, results noted, and trends followed. Experts—who never agree among themselves—are called together. They cast about as to what will be the vote-getting probability of nominating a man from this State or that State. This always highly speculative and hectic session results in a small handful of States coming out with the ball. Then comes the matter of choosing the most likely two sons—never yet have they turned to a daughter—from remote points among these States.

Now, we have 48 States in this country—48 of them. Each State gets 2 Senators and its quota of Congressmen. Each State may choose these from Democratic, Republican, other party, or nonpartisan; but, as to the average State, what chance has it at getting its representative in the White House? State X may have the best man in the party or in the political field, the man of the hour, a "natural," were it not for the fact that this man of the hour is not the man of the State.

Presidents and Vice Presidents have been elected under our party system for 150 years and in that time Presidents have been elected from only 14 States, 8 from Ohio. Thirty-two different Presidents have been elected, not to mention second termers.

Mr. THOMAS of Texas. Will the gentleman from Alabama be kind enough to name the States from which these Presidents have come?

Mr. PATRICK. Yes; I think I can name them: Vermont, Virginia, Massachusetts, South Carolina, Tennessee, New York, North Carolina, Louisiana, New Hampshire, Pennsylvania, Kentucky, Ohio, New Jersey, and California.

Mr. SOUTH. Can you name the States of the Vice Presidents?

Mr. PATRICK. My answer is "No; not right offhand." You boys expect too much of a new Congressman.

Virginia, South Carolina, Tennessee, and Louisiana have enjoyed the distinction in the past, but are apparently out of the picture nowadays. Virginia, once called the Mother of Presidents, has, since she saw John Tyler elected in 1841, been forced to be satisfied with past history. Two of her bright sons did move into other States and later became Chief Executives—Zachary Taylor and Woodrow Wilson—it is true. The best she can now do is to land an occasional Cabinet member.

Somebody somewhere was able to sell the idea that if a man is nominated President from a State that State will vote with the party presenting such native son. If this is true, the pay-off is brief indeed. Every one of the eight men elected to the Presidency from Ohio were Republicans—Democrats have diligently nominated Ohioans but never elected one—yet the past two elections have seen Ohio go Democratic while Maine, which never enjoyed the honor, was one of the two Republican States to hold out faithful during the past two Democratic victories. Is it not, in this day of rapid transit and radio, conceivable that the people of the land will vote for the man who stands tall in camp and carries the true colors, and that they will do so without thought of what geographic subdivisions of the country claims him?

Of our 48 States, 34 have never presented to us a President. Would it not be more democratic were this practice abandoned? Would it not insure fairer leadership and better executive government?

The party first to abandon it will have a much stronger point of appeal to those 34 States, together with States who have in the past elected sons to the Presidency but who are now in the outer garden. Why this practice holds so strongly is a mystery. Perhaps the last question the average group found in any part of the United States discussing political activity will call up is any leader's State or nativity. It is nothing more than a case of oversalesmanship and gullibility but a case that took and has held.

It is our sincere hope that when delegates and left-outs among the 48 States next get together to choose the party representatives for the two chief offices of state they can remember that when they vote for a representative of the select group they are voting against their own interests, unless the representative is the best in point of individual merit and program. Of course, it would be equally foolish to refuse to support a strong, capable, and representative person coming from within this area, but there remains little reason why the preference should further be given.

It has a hollow tone when a likely name is mentioned and you hear this sort of remark, "Oh, he'd be the best man in the field if he were from Ohio, Indiana, or New York." What is the reaction of Arizona, Georgia, Oregon, North Dakota, Texas, to that sort of philosophy in a democracy?

It is a chance to get closer to all the people in the Nation, closer than we have ever been. Andrew Jackson found American politics in the parlors of the few and left it in the country grocery store and crossroads post office, where it belongs if we are truly to be a democracy. Every move toward the people is helpful. How many a boy has heard his teacher say, "You may some day be President," a thought that has inspired so many thousands of American boys? How many a boy failed to realize when the teacher made this statement that the door of opportunity was forever shut to him unless he moved far away?

The Republicans had great trouble in proving Hoover had any, except the remotest country connection at all. They were able to deduct that he was born in Iowa and lived for awhile in California—well, California was an either-way State with a strong popular vote. Enough! Hoover was nominated and elected, but—and imagine it—California shot right back with a wide Democratic victory on the next deal and left her native son standing on the bleak Sierra Nevada mountainside. This should be a plain lesson. This should clearly prove our case, but from the talk we hear we fear they are still oversold on the old, old border-line State gag. The man to be nominated should be a man who can be heard because he has voice enough and can be seen because he stands tall enough. If he is the best man in the land, the whole people are entitled to get a chance to make him their President.

Our idea of popular sovereignty is that all the people—East, West, North, and South—shall have an equal voice in the National Government. Under this practice now prevailing our conventions—Democratic and Republican—this very idea is defeated. The proper thing to do in convention is this plain and simple thing: Bring forward the very best, and leave the geography to the children in school.

I thank you.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a letter I have received from the National Retail Lumber Dealers' Association.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a brief statement from the Colorado State Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein some resolutions adopted by the National Rivers and Harbors Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] is entitled to recognition for 15 minutes.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, the Federal Government, through its various independent offices and agencies, now operates the world's greatest publicity and propaganda bureau.

The offices and agencies of the Government not only supply press and information service for the newspapers of the Nation but they also carry forward propaganda to sell the New Deal to the people.

The agencies supply not only the usual press releases and printed copies of various reports provided for by Congress but they in some instances go a step further and provide clip sheets and summaries of press information for private users. A typical clip sheet of this character is put out weekly by the Federal Housing Administration. Immediately above the notice, "Supplied without charge," is the following:

All information in this clip sheet is for immediate use in your real-estate section, business pages, home-building issues, or for any other related use. Mats of illustrations or actual photographs of homes are available without charge on written or wired request. Special articles on Federal Housing Administration operations will be prepared, also on request, without charge.

It was from this clip sheet of the Federal Housing Administration that notice was brought to the attention of the Banking and Currency Committee of this House that the Administration was representing itself to the public as a permanent agency of the United States Government, when, in fact, it is only a temporary agency subject to continuation by legislative action by the Congress.

To operate this huge publicity and propaganda bureau, to furnish those interested with mats, photographs, and prepared articles, as well as other materials, requires the use of moneys which have been appropriated by Congress for other purposes.

In none of the appropriation acts before this Congress has there been a request for funds to furnish mats, photographs, or to prepare special articles for private parties who may be interested. There have been appropriations for printing and binding, in considerable amounts. The work is presumed to be a function of the Government Printing Office, but notwithstanding this fact several agencies have set up complete printing and publishing plants, out of appropriated funds to carry out the work of propaganda.

A specific instance where the authority to divert funds to such uses has been challenged may be found in the operations of the Tennessee Valley Authority's reproduction plant at Chattanooga, Tenn., which have been questioned by the General Accounting Office.

The sum involved amounted to about $60,000 and later run up to $80,000 a year, for paper and materials used in turning out and binding folders, speeches, pamphlets, circulars describing education, recreational, athletic, and social activities and other printed matters.

The General Accounting Office protested these expenditures as not authorized under the law. The matter is still unsettled. The money has been spent and is gone forever. The wisdom of continuing such activities remains in doubt.

Practically every department has its high-power publicity staff and an information section as well.

To check up on the workings of the publicity and to find out whether or not the propaganda is effective a great deal of time and money is being spent every year in operating clipping bureaus in the various agencies.

Magazines, newspapers, and all forms of printed literature are gathered, read, and clipped. The Works Progress Administration alone has a press-clipping bureau employing three or four men at an average annual salary of $2,000 according to the recent statement of Colonel Harrington.

The Tennessee Valley Authority has been spending sums in excess of $10,000 a year for subscriptions to newspapers and periodicals. This item was also challenged by the General Accounting Office. But the spending goes on.

Mr. Speaker, every day in the year hundreds of press releases and mimeographed copies of speeches about to be made by New Deal officials find their way into the hands of the press representatives and the publicity agencies. Copies are frequently sent to Members of Congress, but the record is strangely missing as to what all these activities are costing the taxpayers of the United States.

In operating these propaganda bureaus there is a great danger to our democratic ideals and fundamental principles. Without this Government participation, hundreds of capable newspaper men forced to subsist through the medium of such subterfuges as the Federal Writers' Project would probably find employment with private news-gathering agencies.

Without these propaganda bureaus the public would get a fair, unbiased picture of Federal activities on all fronts. There can be no bureaucracy more dangerous to the American way of doing things, than these Federal propaganda bureaus, operated under the guise of information sections, which operate only to put out information favorable to the continuation of the greatest spending spree in the history of the world.

Let us put an end to propaganda, let us put an end to these clipping bureaus in the Federal Government agencies. Let us turn over to the gentlemen of the press the function of informing the American people on the operations and the spendings of their Government.

Mr. Speaker, the materials I have assembled here are part of the bulletins prepared by the Division of Press Intelligence, an activity of the National Emergency Council during the past year.

The National Emergency Council was created by Executive Order No. 6433 A, dated November 17, 1933.

The Council maintains headquarters in the Commercial Building at Fourteenth and G Streets NW., in the city of Washington. Their rentals for office space last year amounted to $46,754. This year they are asking for $50,260. Now, part of this office space is rented to house this Press Intelligence Division, which is nothing more nor less than a huge clipping bureau, ostensibly operated for the United States Government.

The funds by which the National Emergency Council operates were appropriated by Congress. Previously they were set aside from emergency appropriation acts by Executive order.

Title 5, section 54, United States Code, provides:

> No money appropriated by any act shall be used for the compensation of any publicity expert unless specifically appropriated for that purpose.

While the Press Intelligence Division is not mentioned in the United States Government Manual under the heading of "Activities," a two-line notice describing the organization of the National Emergency Council furnishes the information, "The Press Intelligence Division maintains a daily file of press material for the use of all Federal Government agencies." Nowhere in the United States Government Manual is the fact made known that the Press Intelligence Division issues a daily bulletin. They simply say they maintain a file. Now, maintaining a file and issuing a daily bulletin, costing the taxpayers of the United States thousands upon thousands of dollars, are horses of different colors. Furthermore, there is nothing on this Press Intelligence bulletin to identify it as coming from or through the National Emergency Council, much less to show that it was prepared by their authority.

Last year the National Emergency Council spent $28,480 for supplies and materials, according to the Budget. A lot of this money I believe was used to purchase mimeograph stencils, mimeograph paper, and ink, used in the preparation and issuance of this Press Intelligence bulletin. Yesterday I requested a bid on what the cost of cutting the stencils, mimeographing, and gathering and assembling 500 copies of this Press Intelligence bulletin as now being regularly issued would be.

An expert stenographer who does this kind of work regularly submitted a price of $333 per day. On the basis of this estimate, the bare mechanical cost of producing this daily bulletin for only 303 days out of a year would amount to exactly $100,000. I recently received a letter from the head of the press-intelligence section informing me that the section employed 64 persons at total annual salaries of $101,520. If we add to the salaries just one-half the estimated cost of producing this daily bulletin by a private individual, we find the total probable cost for this year will amount to $152,121. Now, this is the story of only one division of Uncle Sam's scissors brigade. They have other units in practically every department and agency of the Government. I wonder just how many Members of Congress find use for this kind of service. I wonder just how many Members of Congress know that all this money is being spent to check up on how the New Deal propaganda is taking with the press and the people. I wonder just how long we are going to continue appropriating money without knowing how and where and why it is being spent.

Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, this truckload of mimeographed indexes, about 100 pages each day at a cost of over $150,000 a year, and I dare say that not 1 Member in 20 knows what it is all about, not 1 in 20 knew that such an agency has been created by Executive order. A waste of the taxpayers' money. A political organ used by the New Deal. A disgrace to our form of government; a folly of the New Deal. Why not stop the waste? Why not get some sense and revamp this Government?

Mr. Roosevelt and the Democratic Party had this statement in their platform of 1932:

The Democratic Party solemnly promises by appropriate action to put into effect the principles, policies, and reforms herein advocated, and to eradicate the policies, methods, and practices herein condemned. We advocate an immediate and drastic reduction of governmental expenditures by abolishing useless commissions and offices, consolidating departments and bureaus, and eliminating extravagance to accomplish a saving of not less than 25 percent in the cost of Federal Government, and we call upon the Democratic Party in the States to make a zealous effort to achieve a proportionate result.

We favor maintenance of the national credit by a Federal Budget annually balanced on the basis of accurate Executive estimates within revenues raised by a system of taxation levied on the principle of ability to pay.

* * * * * * *

We condemn the improper and excessive use of money in political activities.

We condemn paid lobbies of special interests to influence Members of Congress and other public servants by personal contact.

Why does the party not carry out its promise made in good faith to the American people? It was a sensible statement; it would be honorable to carry out the promise to our people.

Mr. Roosevelt also made the following promises to our people, and he has repudiated them:

For 3 long years I have been going up and down this country preaching that Government * * * costs too much. I shall not stop the preaching. (Franklin D. Roosevelt, acceptance speech, July 2, 1932.)

* * * * * * *

I propose to you, my friends, that Government * * * be made solvent and that the example be set by the President of the United States. (Franklin D. Roosevelt, acceptance speech, July 2, 1932.)

Mr. Roosevelt made some noble promises to the American people before he was elected. He has repudiated them. Oh, what a pity he did not do as he said he would do. He has with the rubber-stamp Congress that he dominated, increased our national debt in a period of a little over 6 years and 1 month over $20,000,000,000 until our national debt on April 7 amounted to over $40,066,000,000. Since July 1 of last year we have gone in the red $2,547,351,685.37. That means over $9,000,000 a day. That means over $379,000 an hour. That means over $6,400 a minute. A horrible situation for future generations to face—children yet unborn—they will be burdened by the debt of this New Deal administration all their lives. It shows the fallacy of the New Deal laws, the New Deal propaganda. Let Mr. Roosevelt put this promise of his made in 1932 into effect. He has the power. Why does he not do it?

The people of America demand a reduction of Federal expenditure. It can be accomplished not only by reducing the expenditures of existing departments but it can be done by abolishing many useless commissions, bureaus, and functions; and it can be done by consolidating many activities of the Government. (Franklin D. Roosevelt, Brooklyn, November 4, 1932.)

Oh, Mr. President, you promised America security. You are breaking the backs of those who worked and want to work, and making a haven for loafers and spineless people. Real Americans want jobs to earn a livelihood, not a dole. You have 12,000,000 unemployed and if you do not get new and sensible advisers and follow the principle of Thomas Jefferson you will wreck this Nation. Will you do it, Mr. President? We want it so bad; we need it.

Now to the Congress. Men, use your heads; change some of the laws you have enacted; stop the Government from trying to do everything; get the Government out of business; give the American people a chance before it is too late. We need opportunity, we need more freedom, we need less Government regulation. Give the people a chance and they will create jobs and the mills will give people employment; the farmers will plant more, creating jobs; the worker will have a job, a happy home; the full dinner pail will again be the password.

America will not be at war when the President takes his next fishing vacation and all will be happy.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. CELLER, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. EVANS (at the request of Mr. HART), for 1 week, on account of illness.

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 12, 1939

The Senate met at 2 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God, forasmuch as without Thee we are not able to please Thee, mercifully grant that Thy holy spirit may now guide and direct our thoughts; and may the words of our mouths and the meditation of our hearts in this sacred, holy service be acceptable unto Thee, O Lord, our strength and our redeemer. Amen.

FUNERAL OF SENATOR LEWIS

The casket containing the body of the deceased Senator had been previously brought into the Senate Chamber and placed in the area in front of the desk, surrounded by many floral tributes.

The committee appointed by the Vice President, on the part of the Senate, to take order for superintending the funeral of the deceased Senator, consisting of Senators LUCAS, BARKLEY, MCNARY, BORAH, ASHURST, PITTMAN, KING, CAPPER, GEORGE, WAGNER, VANDENBERG, BAILEY, AUSTIN, CLARK of Missouri, GERRY, and MINTON were seated to the right of the Vice President.

The committee appointed by the Speaker of the House to attend the funeral of the deceased Senator, consisting of Messrs. SABATH, MCANDREWS, PARSONS, BEAM, KELLER, KELLY, SCHUETZ, ALLEN of Illinois, DIRKSEN, KOCIALKOWSKI, SCHAEFER of Illinois, ARENDS, CHURCH, MCKEOUGH, MITCHELL, REED of Illinois, ARNOLD, FRIES, MASON, BARNES, CHIPERFIELD, JOHNSON of Illinois, MACIEJEWSKI, MARTIN of Illinois, SMITH of Illinois, WHEAT, and Miss SUMNER of Illinois, entered the Chamber and were seated to the left of the Vice President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The invited guests of the Senate will be escorted to the places assigned them.

The Members of the House of Representatives, preceded by the Sergeant at Arms and the Clerk and by the Speaker, entered the Senate Chamber. The Speaker was escorted to a seat on the left of the Vice President, and Members of the House were given the seats provided for them.

The members of the Diplomatic Corps entered the Chamber and were seated to the left of the Vice President's desk.

Members of the Supreme Court of the United States, accompanied by the Marshal and the deputy clerk, entered the Chamber and were seated in the area to the left of the Vice President's desk.

The Chief of Staff of the Army, the Chief of Naval Operations, the Major General Commandant of the Marine Corps, and the Commandant of the Coast Guard entered the Chamber and were seated in the area to the left of the Vice President's desk.

Mrs. Lewis and relatives and friends of the deceased Senator entered the Chamber and were seated in the area below and to the left of the Vice President's desk.

Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., Chaplain of the Senate, and Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., Chaplain of the House of Representatives, took their places at the Secretary's desk.

The President of the United States, accompanied by his military and naval aides, and the members of his Cabinet, preceded by the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate, entered the Chamber and were seated in the area in front and to the right of the Vice President's desk.

Mr. Arthur O'Brien, representative of Hon. Henry Horner, Governor of the State of Illinois, and five Members of the Senate and six Members of the House of Representatives of the General Assembly of the State of Illinois, appointed to attend the funeral of the deceased Senator, were seated in the west reserved gallery.

Miss Helen Howison, of the city of Washington, sang Lead, Kindly Light.

Lead, Kindly Light, amid the encircling gloom,
Lead Thou me on!
The night is dark, and I am far from home—
Lead Thou me on!
Keep Thou my feet; I do not ask to see
The distant scene—one step enough for me.

I was not ever thus, nor prayed that Thou
Shouldst lead me on.
I loved to choose and see my path; but now
Lead Thou me on!
I loved the garish day, and, spite of fears,
Pride ruled my will; remember not past years.

So long Thy power hath blessed me, sure it still Will lead me on,
O'er moor and fen, o'er crag and torrent, till
The night is gone;
And with the morn those angel faces smile
Which I have loved long since, and lost a while.

The Chaplain of the Senate recited from the Episcopal burial office as follows:

I am the resurrection and the life, saith the Lord. He that believeth in Me, though he were dead, yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth and believeth in Me shall never die.

* * * * * * *

I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that He shall stand at the latter day upon the earth, and though this body be destroyed, yet shall I see God, whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another.

* * * * * * *

We brought nothing into this world, and it is certain we can carry nothing out. The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord.

* * * * * * *

Lord, let me know mine end and the number of my days, that I may be certified how long I have to live.

Behold, Thou hast made my days as it were a span long, and mine age is even as nothing in respect of Thee; and verily every man living is altogether vanity.

For man walketh in a vain shadow and disquieteth himself in vain; he heapeth up riches and cannot tell who shall gather them.

And now, Lord, what is my hope? Truly my hope is even in Thee.

Deliver me from all mine offences, and make me not a rebuke unto the foolish.

When Thou with rebukes dost chasten man for sin, Thou makest his beauty to consume away, like as it were a moth fretting a garment; every man therefore is but vanity.

Hear my prayer, O Lord, and with Thine ears consider my calling; hold not Thy peace at my tears; for I am a stranger with Thee and a sojourner, as all my fathers were.

Oh, spare me a little, that I may recover my strength before I go hence and be no more seen.

Lord, Thou hast been our refuge: from one generation to another.

Before the mountains were brought forth, or ever the earth and the world were made: Thou art God from everlasting, and world without end.

Thou turnest man to destruction: again Thou sayest, Come again, ye children of men.

For a thousand years in Thy sight are but as yesterday: seeing that is past as a watch in the night.

As soon as Thou scatterest them, they are even as a sleep: and fade away suddenly like the grass.

In the morning it is green, and groweth up: but in the evening it is cut down, dried up, and withered.

For we consume away in Thy displeasure: and are afraid at Thy wrathful indignation.

Thou hast set our misdeeds before Thee: and our secret sins in the light of Thy countenance.

For when Thou art angry all our days are gone: we bring our years to an end, as it were a tale that is told.

The days of our age are three score years and ten; and though men be so strong, that they come to four score years; yet is their strength then but labour and sorrow; so soon passeth it away, and we are gone.

O teach us to number our days: that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom.

Glory be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost. As it was in the beginning, is now, and ever shall be, world without end. Amen.

(St. John 14: 1)

Jesus said,

Let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in Me. In My Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also. And whither I go ye know, and the way ye know. Thomas saith unto Him, Lord, we know not whither Thou goest; and how can we know the way? Jesus saith unto him, I am the way, the truth, and the life; no man cometh unto the Father but by Me.

(Romans 8: 14)

As many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God. For ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear; but ye have received the Spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father. The Spirit himself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God; and if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with Him, that we may be also glorified together. For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us. For the earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God. We know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to His purpose. What shall we then say to these things? If God be for us, who can be against us? He that spared not His own Son, but delivered Him up for us all, how shall He not with Him also freely give us all things? Who is he that condemneth? It is Christ that died, yea rather, that is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God, who also maketh intercession for us. Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? Shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword? Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors through Him that loved us. For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord.

Here endeth the lesson.

O love that wilt not let me go,
I rest my weary soul in Thee;
I give Thee back the life I owe,
That in Thine ocean depths its flow
May richer, fuller be.

O Light that followest all my way,
I yield my flickering torch to Thee;
My heart restores its borrowed ray,
That in Thy sunshine's blaze its day
May brighter, fairer be.

O Joy that seekest me through pain,
I cannot close my heart to Thee;
I trace the rainbow through the rain,
And feel the promise is not vain
That morn shall tearless be.

O cross that liftest up my head,
I dare not ask to fly from thee,
I lay in dust life's glory dead,
And from the ground there blossoms red
Life that shall endless be.

One sweetly solemn thought
Comes to me o'er and o'er;
I am nearer home today
Than I've ever been before.

Nearer my Father's house,
Where the many mansions be;
Nearer the great white throne,
Nearer the crystal sea.

Nearer the bound of life,
Where we lay our burdens down;
Nearer leaving the cross!
Nearer gaining the crown!

But lying darkly between,
Winding adown through the night,
Is the silent, unknown stream,
That leads at last to the light.

Father, be near when my feet
Are slipping o'er the brink
For it may be I am nearer home—
Nearer now than I think.

Amen.

Let us pray.

O merciful God and Heavenly Father, who hast taught us in Thy holy words that Thou dost not willingly afflict or grieve the children of men, look with Thy loving, tender pity upon the sorrows of these dear ones, and especially of her for whom our prayers are offered unto Thy tender, loving mercy. O may she ever know that, though she pass through the waters, Thou wilt be with her; and through the rivers, they shall not overflow her; though she walk through the fire, she shall not be burned; neither shall the flames kindle upon her. For Thou art the Lord her God, the holy one of Israel, her Saviour.

Deal tenderly with her, gracious Father; have her in Thy holy keeping; and may she go from strength to strength under the benediction of that peace which the world can neither give nor take away, that peace which passeth understanding. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

O Lord, Jesus Christ, who by Thy death didst take away the sting of death, grant unto us Thy servants so to follow in faith where Thou hast led the way that we may at length fall asleep peacefully in Thee and awake after Thy likeness through Thy mercy, who liveth with the Father and the Holy Spirit, one God, world without end. Amen.

O Almighty God, who hast knit together Thine elect in one communion and fellowship, in the mystical body of Thy Son, Christ our Lord, grant us grace so to follow Thy blessed saints in all virtuous and godly living, that we may come to those unspeakable joys which Thou hast prepared for those who unfeignedly love Thee. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Almighty God, with whom do live the spirits of those who depart hence in the Lord, and with whom the souls of the faithful, after they are delivered from the burden of the flesh, are in joy and felicity, we give Thee hearty thanks for the noble and gracious example of our beloved friend, Thy servant, who hath but yesterday fallen on sleep. Grant that we, with all those who are departed in the true faith of Thy holy name, may have our perfect consummation and bliss in Thy eternal and everlasting glory. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

O God, the God of the spirits of all flesh, in whose embrace all creatures live in whatsoever world or condition they be, we beseech Thee for him, Thy blessed child, whose name and dwelling place and every need Thou only knowest. Lord, vouchsafe him light and rest, peace and refreshment, joy and consolation in paradise, in the companionship of saints and loved ones, in the presence of Christ, in the ample folds of Thy great love. Grant that his life, so wonderful here, so full of love and tenderness, may yet unfold itself in Thy sight and find sweet employment in the spacious fields of eternity.

If in aught we can minister to his peace, be pleased of Thy love to let this be; and so keep us from every act which may deprive us of the sight of him as soon as our trial time is over or mar the fullness of our joy when the end of the day hath come.

Pardon, O gracious Lord and Father, whatever is amiss in this our prayer, and let Thy will be done, for our will is blind and erring, but Thine is able to do exceedingly abundantly above all that we ask or think; and we only ask in the name and for the sake of Jesus Christ our Lord and Saviour. Amen.

And now, Lord, support us all the day long of this troublous life until the shadows lengthen and the evening comes and the busy world is hushed and the fever of life is over and our work is done. Then in Thy mercy grant us a safe lodging, holy rest, and peace at the last. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Miss Helen Howison sang the following three verses from the hymn Abide With Me:

Abide with me! Fast falls the eventide;
The darkness deepens: Lord, with me abide!
When other helpers fail, and comforts flee,
Help of the helpless, O abide with me!

I need Thy presence every passing hour;
What but Thy grace can foil the tempter's power?
Who, like Thyself, my guide and stay can be?
Through cloud and sunshine, Lord, abide with me!

Hold Thou Thy cross before my closing eyes;
Shine through the gloom, and point me to the skies:
Heaven's morning breaks, and earth's vain shadows flee:
In life and death, O Lord, abide with me!

The Chaplain of the House of Representatives pronounced the benediction, as follows:

And now unto Him who is able to keep you from falling, and present you before His glory with great power: Unto the only wise God our Saviour be glory and majesty, dominion and might.

Now may grace, mercy, and peace from God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost abide with you and keep you always. Amen.

At 3 o'clock p. m., the funeral ceremonies having been concluded, Mrs. Lewis and relatives and friends of the deceased Senator, the committee of arrangements of the two Houses, and the invited guests retired from the Chamber.

Following the adjournment of the Senate, the body of the deceased Senator, accompanied by Mrs. Lewis, relatives, and friends, the Chaplain of the Senate, the Sergeant at Arms and Secretary of the Senate, the Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives, and the committee on arrangements of the two Houses, was conveyed to Abbey Mausoleum, Arlington, Va.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the order previously made by the Senate, and as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased Senator from Illinois, the Senate now stands adjourned until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 12, 1939

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, Thou art the life and the light of the world; we beseech Thee to have compassion upon us; forgive our sins of indifference and our barren promises. Set our hearts to seek Thy will and obey Thy commandments, blessing us with great gentleness and with wise understanding. We praise Thee for the assurance of Thy presence: "Emmanuel"—God with us. Oh, may He be enthroned in every walk of life. Bring forth the immovable giants of righteousness and justice, the prophets of the new morning that their advancing light may irradiate this sick world. Lead us, blessed Lord, to the realization that nothing is foreign to God which is essential to man—the cup of water, food for hunger-bitten lips, and clothing for the chilled and worn bodies. Inspire us with the sweep of the Master's horizon that we may lay hold of the life that is life indeed. In the blessed name of our Redeemer. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

H. J. Res. 246. Joint resolution making a further additional appropriation for work relief and relief for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed concurrent resolutions of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. Con. Res. 7. Concurrent resolution authorizing the Joint Committee on the Investigation of the Tennessee Valley Authority to have printed additional copies of the hearings held before said committee; and

S. Con. Res. 9. Concurrent resolution authorizing the printing of additional copies of Senate Document No. 56, current session, entitled "Report of the Joint Committee of Congress Appointed to Investigate the Tennessee Valley Authority."

EUTHANASIA

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, in the morning newspapers it is stated that euthanasia, or mercy killing, has been suggested as a solution of the relief question for our good, aged citizens who are not self-supporting. This suggestion was made yesterday here in Washington City by Maj. Edward L. Dyer, of the United States Army, retired. Major Dyer, according to the records, has been on the Government pay roll practically all of his adult life. Most of these old people, of course, have never been on the Government pay roll. They have worked and paid the taxes which made possible Major Dyer's income. They have really built the country, although they do not now own any of it.

INHUMAN PROPOSAL

I do not share the views of Major Dyer. I consider the suggestion one of the most inhuman, unmerciful, and un-Christian proposals that has ever been advanced in connection with a social or economic problem.

The old people do not receive as much as $25 a month each from the Federal Government either directly or indirectly. Many people who are also on the inactive list receive 10 times that much each. This cruel suggestion does not come with good grace from a man like Major Dyer, who is receiving $243.75 a month retirement pay from the Federal Government. If we are going to look at such matters solely from the standpoint of money and finance, which I am opposed to, and if we are going to save the most money for the most people, we could well consider starting on the retired majors first. [Applause.]

THE SPEAKER'S BIRTHDAY

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the minority membership of the House, and I think also in this instance I could speak for the majority, I extend to you our felicitations on your birthday. We all recognize in you, Mr. Speaker, a man of eminent fairness, one of the highest integrity. You are performing a splendid service in a way which has won the admiration and respect of the entire House. May I express the sincere wish of every Member of the House the happiest returns of the day. May you live long, be always happy, and gather the fullest measure of prosperity. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Mr. Minority Leader and Members of the House of Representatives, I am of course profoundly grateful to my friend the distinguished minority leader of the House for his very kindly and cordial sentiments upon this my natal day. I shall not undertake to elaborate unduly my appreciation of those generous remarks. The position of Speaker of the House, while generally regarded to be one of high responsibility and honor, nevertheless is filled with a number of exacting conflicts which one encounters in the performance of that trust. I am pleased to express my high appreciation to my Democratic and Republican colleagues and those of independent political faith in the House for their uniform kindness and consideration, and particularly for the generous forbearance they have exhibited toward me in the discharge of the exacting duties of this office. My one great desire in undertaking to discharge the functions of this trust has been primarily within my intellectual limitations to uphold the high and honorable traditions of the great men who have been my predecessors in this office, and in addition to that I have made a very earnest effort to be fair, impartial, and just in all of my decisions and recognitions. I feel it would be very unworthy of any Speaker of the House of Representatives to be punitive toward any Member or to be unduly partial to any Member of this great body. I thank my friend from Massachusetts and all Members of the House for this renewed mark of their cordial good wishes. [Applause.]

IMPORTATION OF FOODSTUFFS

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Speaker, I have here a copy of a resolution of the General Assembly of Pennsylvania stating their general opinion in regard to the importation of farm products and the effect of that importation on the farmer. This resolution speaks for itself, and I ask unanimous consent to insert it in the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Resolution 27

The American farmer, upon whose prosperity depends the prosperity of the Nation, is being deprived of his opportunity to earn a living by means of not being able to compete with the cheap imports from other countries.

Crops can be grown and cattle raised abroad at much lower cost than can be done here, where the standard of living to which the American farmer is accustomed demands a larger compensation for labor.

The importation of cheaply grown grains, foodstuffs, cattle, and meat products from abroad has done much to deny to our farmers the prosperity their efforts deserve: Therefore be it

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this House of Representatives of the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania that action should be taken by the Federal Government to prevent the importation of such grains and foodstuffs, cattle, and meat products, the sale of which in the American markets contributes so largely to the economic plight of the American farmer either by the imposition of a high tariff on such importation or the closing of our ports of entry to such articles; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be immediately transmitted by the chief clerk of this house to the officers of the Congress of the United States and to the Members of the Senate and House of Representatives in that Congress from the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to insert therein an editorial by Hon. Luther B. Johnson, of Randolph, Vt.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks on the subject of compulsory pay deductions and include therein a letter from James B. Yancey, of North Little Rock, Ark.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD at this point and to include therein a very short but intelligent letter on the subject of reciprocal-trade agreements as affecting importations of woolens.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The letter is as follows:

NEW YORK, April 10, 1939.

HON. WALTER G. ANDREWS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: This is probably the most urgent appeal that I could possibly make to our governmental representatives in Washington. This, in my opinion, involves the entire future welfare of American industry.

You know, of course, a good deal about the reciprocal-trade treaty, but do you know about the great havoc which it is creating in some industries? The woolen and worsted manufacturing business is on the road to ruin. Throughout the past decade our industry has struggled desperately in the attempt of continuing to exist. Our efforts now appear to be futile, for the climax was capped when the Department of State, through the reciprocal-trade treaty, reduced further the duties on imported woolens. To put this to you bluntly, the Secretary of State has sold our industry out. I say this for the following reason:

Please do not think that the Department of State was not informed by our industry as to our status. Please do not think that we didn't lay before the Department every essential fact which showed that our industry needs protection and not reduction in tariffs. Please do not think that we failed to struggle to maintain our existence—we did. We laid every conceivable fact before the Department of State, but were these facts regarded? No. Was our industry given any consideration at all? No. In spite of our pleas the Department of State went right ahead. We were simply sold out.

Duties on some woolens have been reduced as much as 41⅔ percent. Think of it. Think of this in the face of the lower labor costs existing in foreign countries. Do you believe that American woolen manufacturers can compete with manufacturers in Great Britain when British labor costs are three times lower than ours? Do you think that we can compete with labor costs of Italy that are approximately six times lower than ours? Do you believe that we can compete with Japanese manufacturers whose costs run as much as 23 times lower than ours? Do you think anybody could or would believe so?

The answer is obvious. The figures for the first month since the tariff reduction became effective on January 1 show an increased importation of approximately 200 percent in the value of wool goods and approximately 100 percent in the value of worsteds imported. These figures are compared with the same month in the previous year.

Do you believe that putting the American woolen and worsted manufacturers out of business will be of benefit to this Nation? I don't. Thousands of employees in the woolen industry are consumers of every other commodity, and they simply will have no purchasing power if they have no employment.

I need not go further in describing the horrors of this outrageous action of our Department of State. The answer is too obvious, but the point is this: The treaty is effective. It is to run for 3 years. I feel confident that long before the 3-year period terminates there will be no woolen manufacturing industry left in this country.

Can you and will you do something about this? Will you convey to the Department of State your objections? Will you help in some manner to have the Department of State get us out of this horrible dilemma?

In New York State alone there are more than 7,000 employed by woolen mills; that is, manufacturers of cloth, blankets, yarn, and other wool goods. There is a huge amount of capital invested in the woolen industry in New York State. There are approximately 50 manufacturing concerns with plants and factories in New York State. Their investments will be lost, their capital will disappear, and employment for employees will soon become nonexistent.

The only manner in which our industry could survive under the existing regulations would be to lower the wages we pay to conform to the low foreign wages, and this in turn would mean lowering the standard of living of American workers to the level of foreign workers, and surely no one could possibly want such a thing to occur. The only remedy, therefore, is to have the terms of the agreement which affect duties on woolens and worsteds revoked.

This is a serious matter. It is deserving of your closest investigation, and it is deserving of your help. In my opinion, it is your duty to help avoid the destruction of our industry. You owe it to your constituents; you owe it to all the people of New York State and to all the people of this Nation.

I sincerely trust that you will protest to the Secretary of State, and I sincerely hope that you will endeavor to have Congress immediately do something to curtail the power that has been placed in the hands of the Department of State which enables the Department to arbitrarily destroy American manufacturing industry in such a manner.

Very respectfully yours,

SYLVAN STROOCK,
President, S. Stroock & Co., Inc.

REGENT OF SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the provisions of title XX, section 43, United States Code, the Chair appoints as regent of the Smithsonian Institution the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COLE] to fill the unexpired term of the gentleman from Maryland, Mr. Goldsborough.

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 5324) to amend the National Housing Act, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 5324, with Mr. RANKIN in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Committee rose yesterday there was an amendment pending offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WOOD].

The gentleman from Missouri is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment read again?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

There being no objection, the Clerk again reported the amendment offered by Mr. WOOD.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, this amendment seeks to prohibit furthering the policy that has been pursued in some instances by the Federal Housing Administration of promulgating plans of housing as represented by what is known as the Fort Wayne plan.

The city of Fort Wayne set up a municipal housing authority which had for its purpose the housing of reliefers. The plan provided that the city was authorized to borrow vacant land from landowners in the city of Fort Wayne for a period of 10 years, I believe, the stipulation being that if the owner of the vacant land would accord the city the use of that land for 10 years, or a certain period, that land would be tax-exempt. The authority was established in Fort Wayne and they constructed some $60,000 or $70,000 worth of these small houses, prefabricated houses, constructed for the use of relief workers and reliefers. These houses are, of course, of shoddy design. They are not designed to be of any great durability. They are not constructed as we would want houses constructed that would bring about the necessary slum clearance. But these fabricated houses consist of three rooms. One is constructed for a cooking and living room and laundry purposes, and so forth, and two small bedrooms. Under the plan, after 10 years, if the landowner wants his land back, then the city will move these houses somewhere else, and the owner will have the land and, of course, along with it the unearned increment for 10 years. These lots are tax-exempt.

In the first place, this plan not only tends to further impoverish the finances of the city, through failure to collect taxes on this property, but it puts the relief workers in a class by themselves. It deprives the children of those relief workers who are living in these prefabricated houses of the opportunities afforded children of other people. It seemed as though it would deprive the relief workers and their children of incentive and of their pride. It sets them off in a segregated class, to be pointed at by parents and children of other families, "There is where the reliefers live. They live in those little shoddy prefabricated houses." It is not good for the morale of the relief workers or their children. It is unfair that because a wage earner should happen to be unfortunate enough to have to apply for relief work he will be segregated from the rest of the people, to be an object to be pointed at by the parents and children of other families as a relief worker. They live in those houses. It is bad policy. It does not encourage real Americanism and patriotism and it is bad in every aspect.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD. I yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. I am a little confused about the gentleman's amendment. I think it should be B–1 rather than C–1.

Mr. WOOD. No. That applies to section 207.

I hope the Committee will adopt this amendment.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

My distinguished colleague from Missouri [Mr. WOOD] is always to be commended for his energy and zeal in behalf of the working people of this country. He is one of the outstanding labor leaders in America. He is always mindful and watchful of the welfare of the laboring people. In that I share his viewpoint. I think the gentleman is under a misapprehension as to the operation, in some respects at least, of F. H. A. in connection with public housing authorities that have been created for the purpose of furnishing low rentals to the low-income group. In the first place, this Fort Wayne project about which the gentleman is speaking involves only $45,000. There have been 50 of those little houses constructed over there, at a cost of $900 each, and they rent for $10 a month. So far as the title to the land upon which they are located is concerned, the law itself requires the mortgage to be a first-lien real-estate mortgage. The owner of the lot can only get it back after he pays off the existing mortgage against it and, of course, when that is done neither the F. H. A. nor anyone else can lose anything in the enterprise. It is not confined to relief workers alone. Anyone who is not living in anything like decent or comfortable quarters has an opportunity to rent one of these little houses.

If a project such as this will furnish decent, comfortable, and safe housing to the lowest-income group of our people, it is in my opinion one of the most valuable activities that has yet been undertaken. We authorized the United States Housing Authority last year to expend $800,000,000, and I understand they are coming back for $800,000,000 this year. Much as their activity has been heralded to the country, the Authority is not doing the job, even though the entire expense is being borne by the Government, subsidized by public credit and public money. Suppose there should happen to be some loss in connection with one of these little projects as compared with the other—and I may say in passing there is no indication that there will be any loss, because those that have been constructed and are in operation are now 100-percent occupied—the loss could not be great. I was informed this morning that so far as these Fort Wayne houses are concerned there are 600 applicants on the waiting list now.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. WOOD. Does not the gentleman know that the encouragement of the building of these prefabricated houses by the city tends to bring about further unemployment among the building trades of that city? Does not the gentleman believe it is time for the cities to quit going into private business? The city is in business when it rents these houses to relief workers. I believe the municipalities ought not to engage in private business.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 1 additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Missouri. So far as the cities' going into business is concerned, the question of clearing slums and furnishing low-cost housing is a city problem, in my opinion, not a national one. It is a local problem primarily; it is their responsibility rather than that of the National Government. In the next place, so far as labor is concerned, no one questions but what the building program has given employment to thousands and hundreds of thousands of people. That, of course, is a desirable thing, but it must not be forgotten that this legislation is primarily housing legislation. We are engaged in an effort here to try to furnish houses to the low-income group. If we do that without material loss to the Government, and at the same time put labor to work, we shall have done a wonderful job, and our efforts here will be entitled to the lasting praise and abiding gratitude of those unfortunate people who have not been able to obtain decent housing. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 11. Section 210 of such act, as amended, is hereby repealed: Provided, That the Administrator is authorized to insure under said section any mortgage for the insurance of which an application has been filed with him prior to the effective date of this act.

SEC. 12. The last sentence of subsection (b) of section 301 of such act, as amended, is amended to read as follows: "If the Administrator is of the opinion that the establishment of such an association is desirable to provide a market for mortgages insured under title II and is in the public interest, that the incorporators transmitting the articles of association are responsible persons, and that such articles of association are satisfactory in all respects, he may issue or cause to be issued to such incorporators a certificate of approval, and the association shall become, as of the date of issuance of such certificate, a body corporate by the name set forth in its articles of association."

SEC. 13. Paragraph (4) of subsection (c) of section 301 of such act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"(4) To conduct its business in any State of the United States or in the District of Columbia, Alaska, Hawaii, or Puerto Rico, and to have one or more offices in such States or in the District of Columbia, Alaska, Hawaii, or Puerto Rico, one of which offices shall be designated at the time of organization as its principal office."

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. RANKIN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 5324) to amend the National Housing Act, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 155, he reported the same back to the House with sundry amendments adopted in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the Cochran amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Cochran amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COCHRAN: After line 11, on page 9, insert a new section to read as follows:

"SEC. 10 A. Subsection (c) of section 207 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following proviso: 'Provided, That in estimating the value of the property or project for the purpose of determining the amount of insurance eligible under this section, the Administrator shall determine the value of the property as of the date of the application for insurance, and in no case shall he estimate the value of the property or project for insurance under this section to be in excess of the value of the property at such time plus the value of the proposed improvements thereon.'"

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and the Chair being in doubt, the House divided, and there were—ayes 76, noes 53.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is not a quorum present and I make the point of order that there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has just counted the membership. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 199, nays 143, not voting 88, as follows:

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania, for the balance of the week on account of illness in family.

To Mr. STARNES of Alabama, on account of important business in his district.

To Mr. BLAND (at the request of Mr. BURCH), for 1 day, on account of public business.

To Mr. DUNCAN (at the request of Mr. COCHRAN), on account of illness in his family.

To Mr. CROWE, for 3 days, on account of important business.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address delivered on yesterday at Pittsburgh before the Ohio Valley Improvement Association.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON]?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial taken from the New York Journal-American of Tuesday, April 11, 1939.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. MICHAEL J. KENNEDY asked and was granted leave to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. SECCOMBE. Mr. Speaker, yesterday I made a request to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an address by Mr. Williams, president of the Ohio Chamber of Commerce. I am informed by the Public Printer that this address will take two and a half pages of the RECORD and the cost thereof $113. Due to the importance of this address, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include this article therein regardless of the estimate of the Public Printer.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SECCOMBE]?

There was no objection.

Mr. IGLESIAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a statement of representatives of some agricultural associations of Puerto Rico.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the Resident Commissioner from Puerto Rico [Mr. IGLESIAS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein two short editorials on the bill just passed by the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH]?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a radio address delivered by myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a brief statement with respect to the Federal Housing Administration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN]?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, it was my intention at this time to ask unanimous consent that the House stand in recess subject to the call of the Chair. My attention is called to the fact, however, that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDRESEN] has a special order permitting him to address the House. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDRESEN] may, pursuant to the special order heretofore entered, address the House at this time.

I believe it would be proper at this time for the Chair to make a statement with reference to the arrangements for the state funeral to be held in the Senate Chamber.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] that the time heretofore allotted to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDRESEN] at the conclusion of the legislative business in order for the day may be used at this time?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it proper to state that he has been advised by the majority leader that at the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDRESEN] he will ask unanimous consent that the House stand in recess until 2 o'clock.

The Chair thinks it proper to state further, at the suggestion of the Sergeant at Arms, that all Members desiring to attend the funeral services in the Senate Chamber be on the floor promptly at 2 o'clock or a little before in order that we may form the procession to go over to the Senate Chamber. It has been requested that the House of Representatives, as a body, be at the entrance to the Senate Chamber at 2:15 p. m. promptly.

The Chair trusts that all Members will govern themselves accordingly.

The Speaker and the Sergeant at Arms will form at the outer door, to be followed by the majority and minority leaders and the other Members in order.

The committee on funeral arrangements has been requested to meet in the Senate Chamber prior to departure of the Members of the House to the Senate Chamber.

RECESS

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the address of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDRESEN] the House stand in recess until 2 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN]?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under a previous special order the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDRESEN] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein a table of statistics from the Department of Commerce.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

LET US MAKE GOLD WORK FOR AMERICAN CITIZENS

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, the Roosevelt administration's monetary and foreign-trade policies have left American farmers, laboring men, and manufacturers holding "the pig in the poke." New Deal promises to bring domestic recovery via reciprocal trade and through the payment of large subsidies for foreign gold and silver, have utterly failed in objective. The theoretical visions of New Deal economists became pipe dreams for the American people, and profitable actualities for foreign producers, speculators, and international bankers. In other words, the administration elected to carry the ball for America, ran to the opponent's goal, and scored a touchdown.

Although conditions in this country have just about reached a jittery breaking point, it is not too late for the administration to about face in its policies and give to American citizens some of the juicy plums now being so happily eaten by our foreign friends at our expense. Stubborness on the part of our skipper to change his course, after 6 years of uncharted sailing, will surely lead to our destruction upon the rocks of despair and bankruptcy.

I am selfishly interested in the welfare of my fellow Americans. Therefore, in urging a reversal of New Deal policies, I do so after honest deliberation in the belief that at least one of the schemes can be made to work beneficially for our American farmers, laborers, and businessmen.

NEW DEAL GOLD AND SILVER POLICY

Within the next few days the House will consider H. R. 3325, a bill to extend the power in the President to alter the amount of gold or silver in the dollar. This bill is the most important piece of legislation to be considered in the Seventy-sixth Congress. I propose to offer an important amendment to the bill, and have taken this time today to explain in detail the workings and effect of my proposal. The amendment reads as follows:

That section 3700 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 31, sec. 734) as amended by section 8 of the Gold Reserve Act of 1934 (73d Cong., H. R. 6976), is further amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3700. With the approval of the President, the Secretary of the Treasury may purchase gold in any amounts, at home or abroad, with any direct obligations, coin, or currency of the United States authorized by law, or with funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, at such rates and upon such terms and conditions as he may deem most advantageous to the public interest: Provided, That no payments for gold so purchased shall be made by the Secretary of the Treasury or by any officer of the United States acting in his behalf, to any foreign vendor (including foreign governments) or to any domestic representative or agent of any foreign vendor, unless and until such vendor or his representative or agent in the United States shall guarantee to the Secretary of the Treasury as a condition precedent to receiving such payment: (1) That so much of the net payment received in exchange for gold transferred hereunder as will equal the difference in the price paid and the price that would have been paid at the rate of $20.67 per ounce, shall be used exclusively for the purchase of commodities or articles produced, grown, or manufactured in the United States or its possessions; and (2) that at least one-half of the commodities or articles so to be purchased shall be merchandise classified as agricultural goods, products, or services by the United States Department of Commerce; and (3) that all such commodities or articles so to be purchased will be contracted for within 1 year from the date of receipt of payment from the Secretary of the Treasury and paid for within 2 years from the date of payment by the Secretary of the Treasury; and (4) that the Secretary of the Treasury shall withhold from all payments to such foreign vendor or his agent or representative an amount equal to that specified under (1) above, until receipt of satisfactory evidence that such conditions have been complied with; any provision of law relating to the maintenance of parity or otherwise limiting the purposes for which any of such obligations, coin, or currency may be issued, or requiring any such obligations to be offered as a popular loan or on a competitive basis, or to be offered or issued at not less than par, to the contrary notwithstanding. All gold so purchased shall be included as an asset of the general fund of the Treasury."

The purpose of this amendment is to definitely earmark all future subsidies paid on foreign purchases of gold by the United States Treasury and require that such subsidy—$14.33 per ounce at the present time—be used by foreign gold vendors to buy American farm and manufactured products. If the subsidy is not used for this purpose within 1 year from the date of the sale of foreign gold to the Treasury, it will not be paid. Then the foreign vendor of gold will only receive $20.67 an ounce for his gold, which is the amount now paid to American citizens who offer old gold dollars to the Treasury.

The earmarking of gold subsidies paid to foreign gold speculators will require them to spend 50 percent of the subsidy for American farm products and 50 percent for American manufactured products. This plan simply puts into compulsory operation the New Deal monetary theory that our export business would be revived by the payment of a subsidy on foreign gold. The administration's gold policy did not work because no strings were tied to the subsidy payments. And the foreign gold speculators were too slick for our Treasury experts. I propose to make the theory work for the benefit of American producers, and not against them, without any additional cost to the Treasury, or, in other words, to the American people.

In 1934, when the Gold Reserve Act was passed, administration experts claimed as one of the main objectives for the law that if this country would pay a subsidy for foreign gold and silver there would be a large increase in our export business of farm and manufactured products; farm and other commodity prices would materially rise, and recovery would be achieved for agriculture and industry in the United States.

In early 1934 the theory was put into actual practice and the price on foreign gold was boosted by the President from $20.67 an ounce to $35 an ounce. This price was fixed for all foreign gold and newly mined gold in this country, and maintained at this figure for the past 5 years. The results have been disastrous for the American people. Instead of increasing exports and raising prices on farm products in this country, exports declined, imports increased, and the prices today are the lowest in history when you consider the purchasing power of a 59-cent dollar.

Export and import statistics of the United States Department of Commerce from January 1, 1934, to February 28, 1939, tell a graphic story of the disastrous effect upon the American people of the administration's monetary policy. The total exports for this period, including gold and silver, amount to $13,740,313,281. Imports for the same period, which include merchandise, silver, and gold up to April 12, 1939, are estimated to be $21,174,681,825. This leaves a dollar exchange balance against the United States and in favor of foreign governments and individuals in an amount of $7,434,368,544. Instead of becoming a creditor nation on exports and imports, we have become a debtor nation to the tune of more than $7,000,000,000. This sum is available as dollar exchange which may be used by foreign nations to purchase American products, or it may be withdrawn at any time. This money is now on deposit in American banks and invested in American securities purchased by foreigners in the markets of this country. It is believed by many that foreign investors in American securities can break our market at any time.

While all farm products have slumped in export, the most striking picture is found in the case of cotton, our leading export crop for the past century. Prior to the New Deal, the 10-year annual average of cotton exports amounted to 8,000,000 bales. For 1938, exports of cotton dropped to 3,800,000 bales, and it is estimated that for the crop year of 1939 approximately 3,000,000 bales will be exported. Our foreign market for cotton has been largely lost due to New Deal experimentation. The foreign market for cotton and other farm products must be recovered, and my amendment to the gold stabilization bill will do the business.

UNCLE SAM HAS BECOME UNCLE SANTA CLAUS FOR FOREIGN GOLD SPECULATORS AND FOREIGN GOVERNMENTS UNDER NEW DEAL GOLD AND SILVER POLICY

The United States Treasury and the Federal Reserve banks now own approximately $15,500,000,000 in gold, or about 65 percent of the world's supply. In 1934 the President boosted the price for foreign gold 69 percent—from $20.67 an ounce to $35 an ounce. As stated before, the Treasury fixes and maintains the price of gold for the entire world. World production of gold has doubled since 1934, and from January 1 of that year up to April 12, 1939, the net imports of foreign gold are estimated to be valued at $8,663,049,230. The United States Treasury purchased this gold at $35 per ounce.

The question is asked, Why did all of this foreign gold come to the United States? The answer is simple. The United States Treasury offered to buy all foreign gold at a premium of 69 percent. In other words, the United States Treasury subsidized foreign gold speculators and foreign governments $14.33 an ounce on all gold shipped into this country.

To say nothing about the subsidy paid on silver, the American people will be surprised to learn that the United States Treasury has made an outright gift or subsidy to foreign gold speculators and foreign governments in an amount of $3,551,850,184.30. During this same period our American farmers have been paid approximately $2,509,251,410 in parity and benefit payments. Foreign gold speculators got the best of this deal.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. Am I to understand that if an American citizen sells gold to this Government he gets only $20.67 an ounce, whereas a foreigner selling gold to this country gets $35 an ounce?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The gentleman is absolutely correct. To cite further my authority for that statement, I may say that last week I received a letter from a constituent in my district who made this statement:

I have a $20 gold piece I received back in 1890 as a wedding present. How much is that gold piece worth?

I called up the Director of the Mint and he told me first that there is approximately an ounce of gold in a $20 gold piece, lacking 67 cents. He said, "If your constituent brings the gold to his bank or to the Treasury or to the Federal Reserve System, he will get only a $20 bill for it."

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Let me finish this picture.

I asked him further, "Suppose my constituent takes this $20 gold piece to Canada or some other country, how much can he get for it?"

He said, "He can get about $35 for that $20 gold piece for which the Treasury will pay him only $20 in this country."

I now yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GIFFORD. The gentleman has answered one of the questions I had in mind, but I shall ask the other one. It has been claimed on the floor several times that the Treasury has $15,000,000,000 worth of gold. The gentleman is very careful to say that the Treasury and the Federal Reserve banks have it. When the gold certificates are issued by the Treasury to the Federal Reserve, is that not a deed of the gold and have we not relinquished title?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The Treasury issues gold certificates to the Federal Reserve System for the gold, and the Federal Reserve System pays for the gold in good American legal tender, as we still call it, to pay these foreign gold vendors for their gold. As I understand, a $10 gold certificate held by the Federal Reserve System simply means that one of these days the Federal Reserve can claim that gold, so in truth and in fact the gold now buried in the ground at Fort Knox is the property of the Federal Reserve System. The statement of the Treasury for April 6 shows there is only $682,000,000 worth of gold in the general fund, and the only other gold the United States actually owns that does not have any pawn broker's ticket attached to it is the gold in the stabilization fund.

Mr. GIFFORD. May I continue? I wish to thank the gentleman. Oh, I thank him so much. He is making it so clear. This is absolute proof of the conditions. Now, why should we have to listen to that proclamation of so many of the monetary fellows who say that the Treasury has $15,000,000,000 worth of gold? The Government can only make a seizure again to get it.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I thank the gentleman from Massachusetts. I am afraid he overemphasizes my knowledge of the monetary question. You know, there are three things a man can go crazy about, and one of these is money. I hope I am not crazy about the monetary problem, at least, and I do not want to be classed in that category.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I see the gentleman is on his feet. I know he is interested in domestic gold and silver, but I am dealing only with foreign gold purchases and foreign silver purchases, and trying to make gold work for the interest of the American people. I will yield at the conclusion of my remarks.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. The gentleman mentioned domestic gold purchases. I understood the gentleman to tell the House that the domestic gold producer is getting only $20.67 an ounce for his gold.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The gentleman did not hear me correctly. Let me repeat. Old gold held by American citizens is bought by the Treasury at $20.67 an ounce. Newly mined gold produced by miners at the present time is paid for at the rate of $35 an ounce, just the same amount as is paid to a foreign citizen. However, a very small amount of domestic gold comes into the Treasury, as I will show the gentleman.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. The holders of old gold get only $20.67 because they should have surrendered it at the time of the passage of the act. The gold is held in violation of the law.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Let me thank the gentleman for mentioning that. It is a crime for any American citizen to have gold in his possession, except mining companies that mine newly mined gold, but it is lawful for foreign citizens to have all the gold they want to and bring it into this country and sell it to the United States Government for $14.33 an ounce more than you can get for it as individuals here.

I cannot yield any further.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I should like to ask the gentleman a question about the 59-cent dollar.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I will tell the gentleman about that afterward.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. In my understanding, it is a $2 dollar for farm products.

Mr. KNUTSON. It is a $5 dollar on an agricultural price basis.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield just for a suggestion?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. No. I will yield at the conclusion of my statement.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? That, in effect, is a subsidy to the international bankers.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Oh, there is no question about that.

In addition to the subsidy on gold foreign producers of farm and manufactured goods have also been given a good share of our domestic market.

Mr. Morgenthau, the Secretary of the Treasury, now states that we have too much gold in this country, and that we must distribute a good share of it to other nations by permitting them to ship into the United States large quantities of competitive farm and manufactured products. He proposes to pay gold for these imports. This new idea will bring additional distress to American farmers and laboring men and conclusively proves the failure of the New Deal's monetary experiment.

FOREIGN GOLD PURCHASES BY UNITED STATES TREASURY

While foreign gold has been purchased from all countries in the world at $35 an ounce, it is significant to point out that during the past 3 years the Treasury has purchased $453,032,591 in gold from Japan. A subsidy of $183,743,462 was paid by the United States on this purchase. A large part of the dollar exchange received by Japan was used to purchase war supplies in this country so as to successfully carry on their outrageous hostilities in China.

Russia sold the Treasury $30,695,351 in gold and received a subsidy of more than $12,000,000.

Foreign purchases of gold and silver up to the present date, according to statistics from the Department of Commerce, disclose the following figures: Gold, $8,663,049,230; silver, $982,736,408.

ANDRESEN AMENDMENT TO AID AGRICULTURE AND INDUSTRY

If my amendment had been made a part of the Gold Reserve Act of 1934, the $3,551,850,184 would have been used to purchase farm and manufactured products produced in the United States. My amendment will compel the spending of all future gold subsidies paid to foreign gold speculators for American farm and manufactured products. This will be of material aid to both industry and agriculture. It will only take $660,000,000 of the subsidy to export 11,000,000 bales of cotton at 12 cents a pound, and only $100,000,000 to export 100,000,000 bushels of wheat at $1 a bushel. All farm products will be eligible for purchase under the earmarking of the gold subsidy. If the administration and the Congress will approve this amendment and put it into operation, I am satisfied that we would dispose of our surplus farm commodities and raise domestic prices to parity levels and thus bring back prosperity to agriculture without the need for continued subsidy payments from the Treasury. The amendment would also work a great benefit for American labor and industry, as 50 percent of the gold subsidy must be spent for manufactured products, and with the increased purchasing power of American agriculture this country would be on the way to recovery. If we must experiment, let us take advantage of existing practices and policies which do not require additional cost to the American people.

OTHER NECESSARY FARM LEGISLATION

In addition to the amendment which I have just proposed to aid agriculture I also recommend for the consideration of Congress the following necessary amendments to existing law: First, the protection of our American market for all commodities produced in sufficient quantity to take care of domestic needs; second, the repeal of the reciprocal-treaty law; third, a requirement that all foreign imports of dairy, beef, and pork products be compelled to meet the sanitary requirements now imposed against American producers in this country; fourth, a voluntary soil-conservation program; fifth, the removal of State barriers now in effect in some States against free shipment of farm products in interstate commerce; sixth, the removal of freight-rate discrimination against agricultural shipments; and last, but not least, the removal of the farm problem from political manipulation.

Working together for the interests of American citizens, we can save democracy for our country and make progress for real and permanent recovery. [Applause.]

[2] $7,434,368,544 unfavorable trade balance against United States because of gold and silver imports. United States exports of merchandise, excluding gold and silver, $13,538,224,720 (American valuation). Foreign merchandise imports received by the United States, $11,379,474,487 (foreign valuation). Had these foreign imports been given an American valuation, the figure just given for merchandise imports would be between 14 and 16 billions of dollars. Gold and silver imports are figured on an American valuation basis as the U. S. Treasury fixes and maintains the price for the entire world.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for an additional 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I am very much interested in the remarks of the gentleman and I think he has made a very valuable contribution to the House. I am wondering if the House were to adopt this amendment what effect that would have upon the value of the domestic gold in this country.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. As long as the Treasury maintains and fixes the price on both domestically newly mined gold and foreign gold, it would in no way affect the price that the domestic miners would receive for it, as I see it.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Then the only scope of the amendment would be to preclude the Government from paying a subsidy upon foreign gold, whether it was newly mined or old gold.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Let me state to the gentleman that $20.67 was the old price of gold.

Mr. O'CONNOR. That is right.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. It is increased at the present time to $35 an ounce, or a difference of $14.33. That amount of subsidy, as I call it, is paid to foreign gold vendors and for newly mined gold in this country. Now, I just propose to tie up that $14.33 subsidy under regulations of the Secretary of the Treasury in the Federal Reserve System and earmark it so that when the foreign seller of gold to us comes in and sells 100 ounces of gold he will get paid on the basis of cash right away $20.67 an ounce, but the other $14.33 an ounce will be tied up for 1 year in the Federal Reserve bank, earmarked, if you please, to be spent for manufactured and farm products in this country. If he does not spend it within that time or bring proper evidence to the Secretary of the Treasury that he has spent it for farm products and manufactured products, then he does not get the subsidy. All he gets then is $20.67 an ounce, the same as the average American citizen gets who does not have a mine to operate in this country.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Just one other question. I understood the gentleman to say that we only got $20.67 for newly mined gold here.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. No; that is for the old gold.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I think that is what the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] had in mind when he asked the gentleman his question.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. No; but if you, as an American citizen, do not own a mine, and I hope you do——

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have an additional 10 minutes.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not intend to object, but I wanted to have 5 minutes myself following the gentleman to talk upon the same proposition.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman will need more than 5 minutes if he is going to answer this speech, and I suggest the gentleman ask for half an hour.

Mr. PARSONS. We have not the time for that today; and if I may have 5 minutes following the gentleman, I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Minnesota he may be permitted to address the House for 5 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I should like to be assured of 2 minutes at the conclusion of the time already granted to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PARSONS].

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman later to make that request. The Chair hears no objection, and the gentleman from Minnesota will proceed.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. As I understand it, the gold value of the dollar at the present time is 59 cents.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Fifty-nine and two-tenths cents.

Mr. KNUTSON. If that be true, why is it that it takes more pounds of butter to get hold of a dollar today than ever before in the history of the Republic?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The 59-cent dollar, of course, is the answer to the gentleman's question, because it takes more of these 59-cent dollars to buy the manufactured products and other things that the farmer must have.

Mr. KNUTSON. I am talking about what the farmer has to sell. It takes more wheat to get a dollar now than ever before, and I would like to have the gentleman explain that.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I would be very glad to explain that. I do not claim to be an authority, but I have studied it somewhat. All of these New Deal experiments from 1933—which had the right objective, I will say, namely, to increase the price levels and restore employment in this country—were started on that theory, and the gentlemen who proposed them believed the theory would work out in practice; but every theory they have put into practice—the farm problem, the monetary policies, and all other policies, humanitarian as we considered them to be—has worked out in reverse and to the detriment of the American people.

With reference to the imports and the exports and the price level of commodities the administration's idea was that if we would pay foreigners more for gold and silver—subsidize them—they would buy more commodities from us and that the price level in this country would go up. That we would have some sort of inflation, and the theory was that the price levels would rise in this country with the gifts to the foreign people. That did not work out in that way. It worked out in reverse. It increased our imports of competitive farm commodities instead of increasing our exports, and in 1937 it is estimated that it took nearly 75,000,000 acres of farm land to produce the competitive farm imports which were shipped into this country. And what did it do? Some say that it was such a small percentage of American consumption that it was of no account. Possibly it was. One thing it did do; it came in and glutted our market with farm products and drove the price down, and it has held the price down ever since then; and the American farmer will never get out of that rut as long as these policies continue.

Mr. KNUTSON. Yet it had the effect of turning a buyer's market into a seller's market.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Yes.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Yes.

Mr. GIFFORD. The gentleman has provoked our interest very greatly. In the extension of his remarks will he prove that the gold is routed to London rather than sold here, because they had been paying for some time about $35 an ounce in our money, and, second, that an earmarked portion will be used, of course, for the imports already made; and would the gentleman try to show the additional imports that might flow from this method?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I have inquired as to some gold now here that is claimed to be earmarked. I tried to find out who had it earmarked, and when it was earmarked, but was told that there is a great deal of secrecy around this earmarking. The only conclusion I could come to is that actually foreign citizens, as well as foreign governments and central banks, do have gold earmarked in the United States, and it is all right for them to do it, to bring gold here and keep it here, but if you as an American citizen try to earmark gold in this country you are quickly on your way to Leavenworth or some other Federal institution to stay for a period of from 90 days to 3 or 4 years.

Mr. KITCHENS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Yes.

Mr. KITCHENS. Regarding the 59-cent dollar, do I understand the gentleman to say that, if I take a dollar and go into his State and buy some wheat or butter or something of that kind, the farmer or the dairyman should give me more for that dollar than I am entitled to get?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The farmer and the dairyman, unfortunately, are on the selling and buying side. They are using a 59-cent dollar to buy the products they need on the farm, and so they have to deal in that type of money.

Mr. KITCHENS. But the farmer sells dairy products and wheat and corn. Does the gentleman not think that the 59 cents is really too much to have in the dollar, in order to be fair to the farmer and the dairymen and others?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. It takes 4 pounds of butter in our State to get one of those 59-cent dollars.

Mr. KITCHENS. Does not the gentleman think we ought to reduce the gold value of that dollar so that he can get one for 2 pounds of butter?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The gentleman has injected something that is very interesting, but who wants to continue the right in the President to devalue the gold content of the dollar? Who wants it? Who appeared before our Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures asking for a continuation of this power in the President? Who was it that said we should devalue the dollar, not 50 percent, but that we should remove all restrictions so that the President could take it down to 50, 40, 30, or 10, and finally down to zero? Who was it?

The foreign gold speculators, the foreign brokers, men who deal for the account of foreign investments, international bankers, and the people who were only trying to get something out of the United States Treasury for nothing. There was no demand, except from the President and his associates, to continue this power in the President to further devalue the dollar. So I cannot go along with my friend.

I yield now to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF].

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. The gentleman stated a moment ago it would take 3 pounds of that excellent butter manufactured in the State from which he comes——

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The finest in the world.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. To secure a 59-cent dollar. I am wondering if the gentleman was not mistaken about that. Does it not, as a matter of fact, take about 4 pounds or four and a half pounds to get one of those 59-cent dollars?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I know the gentleman is correct, because at the present moment butterfat is selling for around 22 cents a pound. That is sweet-cream butterfat. As a matter of fact, it would take about 5 pounds of butter to get one of those 59-cent dollars.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The gentleman is making a very interesting discussion and I think I am just as much opposed as he is to further monetary powers being granted; but it seems to me a great many of the observations which the gentleman has made rest upon the false premise that the price of gold, prior to the proclamation of the President was, in effect, or in practice, or in actuality, $20.67 an ounce. The gentleman has certainly reviewed the price of gold on the open market the year prior to that proclamation, and knows that gold was selling at $32 and $34 many weeks before it was ever raised by proclamation.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I cannot yield further. I appreciate what the gentleman has said and I know he is interested in representing his district because of the price of gold. My proposal in no manner affects the gold vendors or miners in his district or any other district in the United States. I am simply dealing with the foreign gold miners, the foreign gold speculators, the men who ship their gold into the United States, because we are the only country in the world to fix and maintain the price of gold at a definite figure. [Applause.]

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Is it not a fact that the New Deal administration is taking thousands of homes away from American citizens on the farms and in the cities by reason of foreclosures?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Unfortunately, that is so.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Would it not be a good idea to have a moratorium on those foreclosures, and let Uncle Sam make a levy to collect on the $12,000,000,000 that the foreign nations owe us and the billions of interest which they owe, and take the gold they have here to pay it, instead of taking homes away from our people?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has again expired.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. In conclusion, let me urge my fellow Members to give serious thought to my proposed amendment. The question will be present next week, and I believe that it is our duty to take advantage of every opportunity to bring about a recovery for our country. To achieve this objective let us make the gold policy work to that advantage of American citizens instead of foreigners who are not interested in our welfare. [Applause.]

EXPLANATION OF VOTE

Mr. JONES of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, during the roll call this morning on the Cochran amendment I was engaged in departmental work and was unable to be present. Had I been present, I would have voted for the Cochran amendment.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an article written by a former distinguished Member of this body, Joseph A. Conry.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PATMAN). Under special order heretofore granted, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PARSONS] is recognized for 5 minutes.

DEVALUATION OF THE DOLLAR

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, I have given a great deal of thought and study to the proposal made by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN]. It sounds fine on paper. It looks good in the public print. I would be inclined to go along with the gentleman on this proposition if I thought it would succeed in doing the thing he wants it to do, but I am afraid that if such a thing were placed upon the statute books, instead of attaining the end the gentleman desires, it would have the opposite effect.

In order to keep the RECORD straight, I would like to say that prior to the commandeering of the gold in this country in 1933 England had gone off of the gold standard and the price of gold was being raised every day in the markets of the world. If the President of the United States had not been given the power by Congress to commandeer the gold of this country, we would have had a flight in large amounts of gold from the United States to Europe, because they were paying more for gold than we were paying in the United States for free and open coinage.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARSONS. I cannot yield. I only have 5 minutes.

Therefore it was necessary for the Congress and the President to take action and commandeer the gold. The people of this country who had gold, either individually or in the banks or in the corporations of this country had only paid $20.67 an ounce. Therefore they were not entitled to speculate at the expense of the people of the United States or the general public. So it was called in at $20.67 per ounce. Then in the Gold Act of 1934 the President was authorized to revalue the content of the gold dollar to meet the competition of foreign nations in depreciating the value of their currencies and raising the price of gold. So I want the RECORD to be kept straight—that if we had not done in this country what we did our gold stock would have flowed to Europe instead of gold coming from Europe to the United States.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARSONS. I cannot yield in the limited time at my disposal. I may say to the gentleman that we will get this thing thrashed out probably more fully when the bill is brought to the floor next week.

America is paying $35 an ounce for gold, both newly mined and foreign gold, which has been coming here in large amounts, the largest portion of which came because of the war scare in Europe. I dare say that we have sold a lot of goods in this country because of the gold and silver which have come to the Federal Treasury through the Federal Reserve System.

Other nations, particularly England and France, are paying the same price for gold that we are. The same price is being paid for gold in London and in Paris that is being paid for gold in New York. We are not ourselves offering a subsidy.

Reference has been made to a 59-cent dollar. Our dollar is a 100-cent dollar just the same as it was prior to revaluation of gold, because our unit of value and our unit of exchange upon which our currency is based is gold. A change was made in the gold content, but not in the dollar or the currency content.

It is plain, therefore, that should the plan offered by the gentleman be adopted it would start further deflation of foreign currencies in order for foreign countries to obtain their balance of world trade, just the same as the nations were doing prior to our revaluation of gold. I would be happy to see the extra amount above $20.67—$14.33—go into the purchase of manufactured goods and farm commodities in this country, but this would be the actual effect: A great many foreign countries, particularly Germany and Russia, would go into the competitive field, offering a better proposition to other nations to trade with them on the basis of gold than we could possibly offer, which would start the war again on depreciating our currency; and I am sure the gentlemen on the Republican side of the aisle, especially the gentleman from Minnesota, desires to eliminate further competition. In fact, I believe he has said on other occasions that he would like to see it eliminated and probably that he would like to see us go back to $20.67.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. If the gentleman will yield, the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. PARSONS. But to go back to $20.67 is an impossibility so long as the other nations of the world are competing to get a larger part of the world trade.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The gentleman knows I never made any such statement, because I realize the impossibility of obtaining that amount.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

WORLD DEMAND RAISED GOLD PRICES

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, it is evident that a great deal of confusion exists in the minds of the Members of this House with respect to the gold situation, for the statement has been repeated frequently that the only reason that we are paying $35 for gold is because of an act passed by Congress and a proclamation made in 1934. Anyone who will take the opportunity and the trouble to review the history of the price of gold during the year preceding the passage of the Gold Reserve Act of 1934 will be disabused of that idea.

The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDRESEN] has made a very interesting address, and not a Member of the House will disagree with his desire to improve the market both for manufactured goods and for farm products. It is impossible, of course, from hearing the amendment read, for anyone to judge even for himself of the possible effects of such a proposal. I hope for the best. I hope at least that even if the amendment be futile that it will have no harmful effects.

The proposal, however, rests upon a false premise that has been repeated so frequently that I think the House should have for reference the actual history of gold prices in 1933 and 1934.

Reference was made to the present price of gold as including a subsidy, $14.33 per ounce, to be exact. At one point the gentleman mistakenly said:

> In 1934 the President boosted the price for foreign gold 69 percent—from $20.67 an ounce to $35 an ounce.

Statements similar to that have been often made in the press and in debate. Indisputable facts refute them.

LET US LOOK AT THE RECORD

The price of foreign gold prior to the Gold Act of 1934 was not $20.67 an ounce. The average price for gold in London for the month of January 1934, immediately prior to the President's proclamation under the Gold Act, was $32.87 an ounce.

On different days in the preceding months it had been higher. For instance, on November 15, 1933, it was $34.91, and the average for November was $33.10.

And after the United States accepted the situation and paid $35, the open London price has exceeded that on several occasions. It averaged $35.18 in September 1934, going as high as $35.37 September 4. In more recent years also the price has also bounded above the price offered in the United States.

I realize that the myth of a New Deal gift to gold producers has been repeated so often that any simple assertion by me will hardly dislodge the picture from many minds. Accordingly, for the RECORD I offer a few details from official sources.

EXPORTS AND IMPORTS OF GOLD

First, I offer these figures on gold imports and exports, taken from page 58 of the report of the Director of the Mint for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938.

	Excess of—
	Exports over imports	Imports over exports
1932	$446, 212, 397
1933	173, 455, 507
1934		$1, 133, 911, 846
1935		1, 739, 018, 796
1936		1, 116, 553, 891
1937		1, 575, 503, 252

These figures show that gold was going out of the country in 1932 and 1933. Our stocks were depleting before the advancing world price of gold. In 1933, an embargo was declared to stop the outward flow; later the R. F. C. went into the foreign market to outbid the buyers. Finally, it became a matter of self-defense that we should act to pay what the world was paying in order to maintain and build up gold stocks here.

Other forces since then have added to our accumulation, until today we do hold a disproportionate share of the world's gold—approximately 57 percent.

Where today can the foreigner send gold with as much confidence that he can get it back when he wants it? The very size of our stock adds to his feeling of security, let alone the gold-grabbing he has seen elsewhere.

Our situation does present problems. Personally, I have always thought that we should have maintained specie payment along with adjusting our price for gold. I think we should now resume specie payment. I do not claim to be wise enough to know just what steps should be taken to adjust ourselves in the situation that exists at present. It seems reasonable, however, that a large part of the world's present upset condition can be traced to the economic pressures and the disruption of world trade created by the unbalanced condition of world currencies.

1933 AND 1934 GOLD HISTORY

The pending legislation is, as the gentleman from Minnesota has said, possibly the most important single bill that will come before us at this session. In order that you have further evidence from the record on the subject, I submit herewith:

First, a table giving the day to day price of gold in the London market for 1933 and 1934 until after the Gold Act was adopted, translated into the terms of that price for the United States.

Second, the history of 1933 and 1934 gold prices, policy, and legislation as given on pages 25, 26, and 27 of the Minerals Yearbook for 1934, published by the Bureau of Mines.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert them at this point.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

GOLD AND SILVER

(By Charles W. Henderson)

GOLD

United States suspends gold standard: On April 19, 1933, closely following the bank holiday, March 6–13, for the second [1] time in its history the United States was off the gold standard. Although Great Britain, followed by many other countries,[2] was off the gold standard in September 1931 and gold was sold in London above the old par of 85 shillings per fine ounce, there would have been no immediate or, at that time, anticipated profit to United States gold producers had they sold abroad before April 19. The following table shows that the exchange value in New York on London averaged monthly under the United States statutory price of gold per fine ounce, $20.67+ until April.

After April 19 there would have been profit in selling gold abroad, but President Roosevelt's Executive orders of April 5 forbade the hoarding of gold coin, gold bullion, and gold certificates. This was followed by the Presidential Executive order of April 20, 1933, relating to foreign exchange and earmarking and export of gold coin, bullion, or currency, that forbade the export of gold bullion.

Premiums on newly mined gold in the United States in 1933: The newspapers on July 27 announced a decision of the Attorney General, effective August 9, that allowed the continuation of exporting of gold in ore and in concentrates and exporting of gold in unretorted amalgam bullion and in unrefined cyanide precipitates. This order permitted export to 75 percent of the United States gold-mine production but made it impracticable for the remaining 25 percent, a situation which would have soon resulted in the closing of many smelters (even then working only on part capacity).

Owing to the difficulties of quickly contacting reliable purchasers abroad, relatively very little of the above classified material was exported, although in the interim preparations had been made by some producers and were being made by other producers to ship abroad, when the President on August 29 issued an Executive order, coupled with an antihoarding clause, that the United States Government would act as agent for producers of newly mined gold to obtain the world price through the United States Mint and Federal Reserve banks; regulations were promulgated to pay the producer by Federal Reserve bank check (when sale was consummated) at the world price received by the Federal Reserve bank.

All sales were handled by the Federal Reserve Bank of New York. This bank made a small quantity of sales internally to commercial companies for industrial purposes at world prices but sold the large amount abroad. The period covered by the internal sales was September 8 to October 27; the period covered by sales abroad was September 13 to November 1.

On October 25 the Reconstruction Finance Corporation began buying newly mined gold at arbitrarily fixed and periodically rising prices, the day-by-day price generally being above the world price; payment to the producer was in Reconstruction Finance Corporation notes payable in principal and interest on February 1, 1935.

On October 27 the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was authorized by Presidential order to extend Government purchase of gold by entering foreign markets and began to bid for gold in Paris and London markets, offering $32.36 an ounce.

On January 16, 1934, the Federal Reserve Bank of New York began paying depositors by check the United States price of $34.45 per ounce, less a small commission, coincident with the President's message of January 15 to Congress recommending that the upper limit of permissible revaluation of the dollar be 60 percent.

Payment for deposits was resumed on February 1 by the Bureau of the Mint, following passage of the Gold Reserve Act of 1934 on January 30, 1934, and the President's proclamation of January 31 acting under the powers granted by title 3 of the act approved May 12, 1933 (Thomas amendment to the Farm Relief Act), fixing the weight of the gold dollar at $15\frac{5}{21}$ grains, nine-tenths fine. This is 59.06+ percent of the former weight of $25\frac{8}{10}$ grains, nine-tenths fine, as fixed by section 1 of the act of March 4, 1900. The value of gold per fine ounce immediately became $35.

[1] From shortly after the outbreak of the Civil War to January 1, 1879, specie payment was suspended, and gold was at a premium.

[2] Countries remaining on the gold standard throughout 1933 were France, Italy, Belgium, Holland, and Switzerland. Germany, with reserves of about 8 percent gold, remained nominally on the gold standard.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein a statement by O. L. Brownlee with reference to the Faddis strategic-minerals bill.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

ELECTION TO COMMITTEES

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution and move its adoption.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 164

Resolved, That the following-named Members be, and they are hereby, elected members of the standing committees of the House of Representatives as follows:

Banking and Currency: A. S. MIKE MONRONEY, of Oklahoma.

Indian Affairs: COMPTON I. WHITE, of Idaho; MARTIN F. SMITH, of Washington; LANSDALE G. SASSCER, of Maryland.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to permit me to submit a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an article by George N. Peek.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a short editorial by Hugh Johnson.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

EARMARKED GOLD

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I have just heard the statement about gold being held by individuals in this country—that is, by citizens of foreign countries—when it is a violation of the law for an individual in this country to hold gold. I believe the gentleman from Minnesota is entirely wrong in his statement that foreign citizens hold gold in this country that is earmarked for their account.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The only information I have is from the Treasury itself, where the operations are very secret. I was told that there was gold earmarked to the account of foreign individuals.

Mr. PATMAN. For whom? Let us get our definitions straight. Does the gentleman mean to say that the Treasury, or an official of the Treasury, stated that this gold was held for foreign individuals, or for foreign governments, or for both? Whom did he say it was held for?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. For foreigners.

Mr. PATMAN. There is a difference there. Let us get down to specifications.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I do not want the gentleman to misunderstand me.

Mr. PATMAN. I do not want to misunderstand the gentleman.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. A foreign individual can take gold to the Bank of London, and the Bank of London can send it over here and keep it here, earmarked for the Bank of London or the British nation, and that man can get it back, whether he be an individual or a foreign government.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. The man in England cannot get any gold from America because individuals cannot have gold earmarked for them in this country. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. PARSONS. I think I heard most of the testimony before the committee, and while I have not made specific inquiry of the Treasury Department with reference to this proposition, my memory is there was some earmarked gold over here.

Mr. PATMAN. There is no question about that.

Mr. PARSONS. That is held in the Federal Reserve for the account of foreign governments.

Mr. PATMAN. There is no question about that.

Mr. PARSONS. But it is not held for any individual.

Mr. PATMAN. That is right.

Mr. PARSONS. And the gold that does come here goes through the Federal Reserve System and is turned over to the Treasury of the United States. A gold certificate is issued therefor to the Federal Reserve; but the gold will always remain in the Treasury except in settlement of international balances.

Mr. PATMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota, I think, has misunderstood whoever he talked to in the Treasury. No one is secretive about the gold being earmarked. Instead of it being a secret, they are putting it in the newspapers. If you will take the newspapers of the last few days, you will discover that the Treasury states how much gold is earmarked and for whom. For individuals? No. It is a violation of the law. It is held only for foreign governments or for foreign central banks. Just those two.

Now, several hundred million dollars of gold have been earmarked for those two purposes, foreign governments, or foreign central banks. No one objects to disclosing the information. As a matter of fact, a license had to be issued in order to permit the Federal Reserve Bank of New York to hold the gold in that way. It is all a matter of public record. I hope the gentleman does not suggest the Treasury is trying to hide this information, trying to keep it a secret, or keep anyone from knowing it. On the contrary, the information is published in the newspapers.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The statement of gold assets in the daily statement of the Treasury does not show that the gold the gentleman is referring to is earmarked.

Mr. PATMAN. There is no necessity to show that, because it is not a part of the stock. The statement the gentleman has in his hand is a statement of the gold that is carried as an asset.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. That is right.

Mr. PATMAN. The reason it is carried as an asset is because the Gold Act says that the right, title, and interest in and to all the gold held by all the banks and all the people in the United States is in the United States Government. The Government owns that gold.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I am familiar with the law.

Mr. PATMAN. That is the reason it is in that statement. The reason earmarked gold is not in that statement is because it does not become a part of the gold owned by the Treasury of the United States. Therefore there is a good reason for not showing it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

FIFTY-NINE-CENT DOLLAR

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I want to mention one other thing about this 59-cent dollar. Why all this talk about our dollar being reduced to 59 cents in our domestic transactions? Let us take a dollar bill that was made before the revaluation. It is the same dollar bill we have today. There has been no change. Where do you get that 59 cents? When you go to a railroad station to buy a ticket, do you have to pay this dollar bill as 59 cents, then put in another 41 cents to make up the dollar? No. That is still worth $1 to the railroad company for railroad freight rates or passenger transportation. It is still good for the payment of telephone or electric charges, or payment of water, gas, and all kinds of utility services. It still buys 100 cents' worth at the same rates that we had before revaluation.

Let us consider the debts that we owe, which is the greatest problem confronting the American people, and there are something like $200,000,000,000 in debts. According to the theory of the gentlemen who argue that the dollar is worth only 59 cents in the United States, those debts would automatically be increased almost $300,000,000,000. But that is not true. This so-called 59-cent dollar still pays $1 of those debts just as it always has in the past. I want someone to explain to me how it is that it can be said that this good dollar of ours has been reduced to only 59 cents here in America.

What about your interest? It will still pay a dollar's worth of interest. It will still pay 100 cents in taxes. Name me something in America that this so-called 59-cent dollar will not pay 100 cents on. If anybody in America today or anybody on the floor of this House can name me one thing that this dollar will not pay 100 cents on in the United States, I would like to know what it is.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio rose.

Mr. PATMAN. The gentleman claims he qualifies.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I should be pleased to answer. When the content of the dollar was devaluated, what happened to the debts owing to United States citizens by foreigners?

Mr. PATMAN. I am not talking about that. I said in America.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. The gentleman said one thing, and that is one.

Mr. PATMAN. No. I said anything in America, and I specified what we deal with. A farmer does not deal with a foreign government. A farmer does not deal with citizens of Japan. A farmer does not deal with citizens of Mexico or Brazil. A farmer deals with people in the United States, and this dollar is worth 100 cents anywhere in the United States.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. When he buys foreign goods does he not deal with foreigners? He is paying 67 percent more for imports than he previously paid, is he not?

Mr. PATMAN. The gentleman is getting off on a different subject entirely. What I am talking about is the value of this dollar here in the United States, which some of the Members have been saying is worth only 59 cents. The gentleman will take it for 100 cents on the dollar and everybody else will take it for 100 cents on the dollar. Does the gentleman know of anybody in America who would refuse to take it for 100 cents on the dollar?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. PATMAN. All right; name one.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. The private bond market is dead.

Mr. PATMAN. That is not any answer. Who is the bond market? Name me one person in America who refuses to take this for 100 cents on the dollar.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Can you write a value clause into a contract today, with the dollar of which the gentleman is talking?

Mr. PATMAN. The gentleman is dodging. You may consider all the debts and the taxes and the interest and you will discover that our dollar is paying them on the basis of 100 cents—not 59 cents—on the dollar. You take the greatest business in the United States, the insurance business, involving hundreds of millions and billions of dollars, and this dollar will pay for 100 cents of insurance.

[Here the gavel fell.]

PERSONAL ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably detained when the vote was taken today on the Cochran amendment to the bill amending the National Housing Act, and I should like to have the RECORD show that had I been here I would have voted for the amendment.

JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President, for his approval, a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

H. J. Res. 246. Joint resolution making a further additional appropriation for work relief and relief for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939.

RECESS

The SPEAKER. Under a special order heretofore made, the House stands in recess until 2 o'clock.

Accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the House stood in recess until 2 o'clock p. m.

AFTER THE RECESS

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker at 2 o'clock p. m.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the House will stand in informal recess for a few minutes, subject to the call of the Chair.

The informal recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker at 2:09 o'clock p. m.

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to House Resolution 158, the House will now proceed to the Senate Chamber to attend the funeral services of the late Senator Lewis.

The Speaker will take his place at the door and the majority and minority leaders and the other Members will follow in order and proceed to the Senate Chamber.

Thereupon the Members of the House, preceded by the Speaker, the Sergeant at Arms, the majority and minority leaders, proceeded to the Senate Chamber.

Upon the conclusion of the funeral services in the Senate, the House was called to order by the Speaker at 3:06 o'clock p. m.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, April 13, 1939, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE

THURSDAY, APRIL 13, 1939

The Reverend Dr. Benney Benson, pastor, Kent Street Reformed Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., and chaplain, Kings County American Legion, offered the following prayer:

Father of all, the cross is still Thy way, although within the week debased, yet soon triumphantly exalted. The sword is still for murder. Thou shalt not kill. Preponderance of force and sword ever pit themselves against Christ and His cross. Which way, then, America? We pray for the loving heart and the moral armament, which alone may still save the world.

Believing in and converted to God in government, may our lawmakers here take Thee and no other as their sole guidance. God forbid they dare do otherwise than keep America at least from every evil trend toward collective hate and force leading to murder, because America must do justly, love mercy, and walk humbly before God. May every legislator's public attitude be identical with high personal morality.

In the name of Him who taught us to pray:

Our Father which art in Heaven, hallowed be Thy name. Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth, as it is in Heaven. Give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil: For Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory, forever. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Tuesday, April 11, 1939, and Wednesday, April 12, 1939, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

TRIBUTE TO THE LATE SENATOR LEWIS

Mr. LUCAS presented a telegram, which was ordered to be printed in the body of the RECORD, as follows:

CHICAGO, ILL., April 11, 1939.

Hon. SCOTT W. LUCAS,
United States Senator from Illinois.

DEAR SENATOR: As a Chicagoan we knew well James Hamilton Lewis for more than 40 years. As citizen he was always active and public-spirited in national and all civic affairs. In public life, and as Senator from the great State of Illinois, he was the salt of the earth, loyal to death for his country. He was eloquent and as an orator reached heights seldom attained in his day and age. He was in the very front of his peers as a man. Few possessed his vast knowledge of letters. He ranked high as an advocate and statesman. In friendship he was superior and without a rival. We mourn deeply his demise. We express our sympathy to Mrs. Rose Lawton Douglas Lewis, his widow, in her great bereavement.

Yours faithfully,

THE IROQUOIS CLUB OF CHICAGO,
By ARTHUR J. J. WELSH, President.
JOHN NEAL CAMPBELL, Secretary.

PRESENT WORLD CONDITIONS—NOTICE OF ADDRESS BY SENATOR WALSH

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I give notice that upon the convening of the Senate on Monday, as soon as I shall be able to obtain recognition of the Chair, I shall speak briefly on our attitude toward present world conditions.

ROSCOE C. PRESCOTT ET AL.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 911) for the relief of Roscoe C. Prescott, Howard Joslyn, Arthur E. Tuttle, and Robert J. Toulouse, which was, on page 2, line 1, to strike out all after "Provided," down to and including "$1,000" in line 13 and insert:

That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. BRIDGES. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

COOPERATION WITH THE AMERICAN REPUBLICS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

To the Congress of the United States of America:

I commend to the favorable consideration of the Congress the enclosed report from the Secretary of State and the accompanying draft of proposed legislation designed to authorize cooperation with any of the other American republics in accordance with treaties, resolutions, declarations, and recommendations signed by all of the 21 American republics at the Inter-American Conference for the Maintenance of Peace held at Buenos Aires, Argentina, in 1936, and at the Eighth International Conference of American States held at Lima, Peru, in 1938.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 13, 1939.

[Enclosures: 1. Report of the Secretary of State; 2. Draft of proposed bill; 3. Copy of report of Interdepartmental Committee.]

FLAXSEED PRICES AND THE TARIFF (S. DOC. 62)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting, in response to Senate Resolution 167 (75th Cong., 3d sess.), a report prepared in the Bureau of Agricultural Economics pertaining to prices of flaxseed, which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

Mr. NYE subsequently said: Mr. President, I should like to make an inquiry concerning a matter which was laid before the Senate this morning in response to Senate Resolution 167, offered by me on July 22, 1937. The Secretary of Agriculture has submitted a report covering the flaxseed study which has been under way for the past year or more. I should like to inquire whether or not the report by the Secretary is to be printed as a public document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Parliamentarian advises the Chair that it will be printed in the ordinary procedure, as a document.

Mr. NYE. That being the case, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the document the resolution which occasioned the report, to the end that there may be a reply to the questions which were asked at the time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of New Jersey, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys:

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION MEMORIALIZING THE FEDERAL CONGRESS NOT TO ENACT THE SEVERAL RESOLUTIONS SEEKING TO ESTABLISH OWNERSHIP OVER OIL DEPOSITS OCCURRING IN TIDAL AND SUBMERGED LANDS OF THE NATION

Whereas there is pending in the Congress of the United States four resolutions, all of which ostensibly seek to establish Federal ownership over oil deposits occurring in tidal and submerged lands of the Nation; and

Whereas it is believed the enactment of these resolutions to be an invasion of the rights of the several States, particularly with relation to the development and operation of seashore resorts: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of New Jersey (the house of assembly concurring), The Congress is memorialized not to enact the resolutions aforesaid; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution, signed by the presiding officers of the senate and house of assembly, be transmitted to the Vice President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and the Senators and Representatives of the State of New Jersey in the Congress of the United States.

This resolution shall take effect immediately.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a resolution of Alpha Omega Chapter of the Psi Phi Fraternity, of Washington, D. C., favoring the passage of the so-called McGranery resolution relative to the community use of public-school facilities in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of Local No. 110, U. W. O. C. of the C. I. O., protesting against amendment of the National Labor Relations Act, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Economic Convention of Puerto Rico, San Juan, P. R., favoring amendment of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 so as to adjust its application to the peculiar conditions obtaining in Puerto Rico, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of Local No. 906–B, Retail Stand Employees Union, United Retail and Wholesale Employees of America, C. I. O., of New York City, N. Y., favoring an embargo against the shipment of war materials and supplies to Japan for use in operations in China, and also the enactment of the so-called Thomas (of Utah) joint resolution (S. J. Res. 67) to revise the Neutrality Act, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also laid before the Senate petitions of sundry citizens of the State of Alabama, praying for the enactment of the so-called Wagner-Van Nuys-Capper antilynching bill, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of Alpha Omega Chapter of the Omega Psi Phi Fraternity, of Washington, D. C., favoring the enactment of the so-called Fish bills (H. R. 3317 and H. R. 3318), relative to Negroes in the armed forces of the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of Local No. G-472, Workers Alliance, of San Francisco, Calif., favoring an additional appropriation of $150,000,000 for the Works Progress Administration, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the Economic Convention of Puerto Rico, San Juan, P. R., favoring the granting of hearings to the business and economic interests of Puerto Rico on any question involving the extension of Federal laws to Puerto Rico, which was referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

Mr. HOLT presented a resolution of the City Council of New Martinsville, W. Va., protesting against the construction of a canal from Beaver, Pa., on the Ohio River to Lake Erie, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MEAD presented a resolution of Typographical Union No. 9, of Buffalo, N. Y., protesting against amendment of the National Labor Relations Act at this session of Congress, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. WALSH presented memorials of several citizens of Mount Hermon, Mass., remonstrating against the sale of war materials and supplies to Japan for use in operations in China, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I present resolutions from the General Court of Massachusetts, which I ask to have printed in full in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Finance. It is fitting for me to say at this time that these resolutions have my hearty approval.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolutions will be received and referred as requested by the Senator from Massachusetts.

To the Committee on Finance:

RESOLUTIONS URGING CONGRESS TO CONSIDER AND DISCUSS THE PROVISIONS OF THE TOWNSEND NATIONAL RECOVERY PLAN, SO-CALLED, AND THE PROVISIONS OF BILLS OF SIMILAR IMPORT

Resolved, That the General Court of Massachusetts hereby urges the Congress of the United States to forthwith consider the provisions of the Townsend national recovery plan, so-called, and the provisions of bills of similar import, and to subject said provisions to a thorough discussion and open debate by its Members; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent forthwith by the secretary of the Commonwealth to the President of the United States, to the presiding officer of each branch of Congress, and to the Members thereof from this Commonwealth.

IMPORTATIONS OF GRAINS, FOODSTUFFS, CATTLE, ETC.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry Resolution No. 27 of the House of Representatives of the General Assembly of Pennsylvania, which has been sent to me by the speaker of the Pennsylvania House of Representatives, the Honorable Elwood Turner, requesting the cooperation of the Federal Government to prevent the importation of such grains, foodstuffs, and meat products as compete unfairly with American farmers.

Mr. President, this is a problem of grave concern to millions of our citizens who are now suffering unemployment because of the foreign invasion of our American markets, whose protection is gradually being lowered, resulting in fewer work opportunities and diminished production in this country.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, as follows:

Resolution 27

The American farmer, upon whose prosperity depends the prosperity of the Nation, is being deprived of his opportunity to earn a living by means of not being able to compete with the cheap imports from other countries.

Crops can be grown and cattle raised abroad at much lower cost than can be done here, where the standard of living to which the American farmer is accustomed demands a larger compensation for labor.

The importation of cheaply grown grains, foodstuffs, cattle, and meat products from abroad has done much to deny to our farmers the prosperity their efforts deserve: Therefore be it

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this House of Representatives of the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania that action should be taken by the Federal Government to prevent the importation of such grains and foodstuffs, cattle, and meat products, the sale of which in the American markets contributes so largely to the economic plight of the American farmer, either by the imposition of a high tariff on such importation or the closing of our ports of entry to such articles; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be immediately transmitted by the chief clerk of this house to the officers of the Congress of the United States and to the Members of the Senate and House of Representatives in that Congress from the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

EXEMPTION OF AGRICULTURE AND HORTICULTURE FROM WAGE AND HOUR REGULATION

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have referred to the Committee on Education and Labor and printed in the RECORD a letter I have received from Mr. J. E. Linde, president of the Berks-Lehigh Mountain Fruit Growers' Association, as well as a telegram which Mr. Linde has sent to Hon. MARY T. NORTON, chairman of the Committee on Labor of the House of Representatives.

There being no objection, the letter and telegram were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE HORTICULTURAL ASSOCIATION OF PENNSYLVANIA,
Boyertown, Pa., April 10, 1939.

Hon. JAMES J. DAVIS,
3012 Massachusetts Avenue, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: Supplementing our telegram of today, we wish to call your attention to Norton bill No. 5435, defining farm exemption. Study of this bill will show that it will decidedly be detrimental to agriculture and horticultural interests. Fruit growers are in financial straits now, as evidenced by the large amount of orchards owned by the Federal Government in the Northwest and in many other States, as well as by the huge loans now on many orchard properties. To aid agricultural and horticultural interests, exemptions must be granted from wage and hour regulation. Rapidity of harvesting and packing does not lend itself to hours regulation by any means.

Due to perishable nature of horticultural products it is impossible to set up hour regulation to cover. Wage regulation is likewise not feasible, due to the impossibility of segregating field and processing or packing operations as they are generally performed by the same class of labor, and in some cases by the same persons.

Prices of fruit on trees are not fixed; fruit is valueless until packed and otherwise made ready for market. Therefore, the preparation for marketing is an integral part of agricultural and horticultural commodities.

Fruits are acutely perishable and seasonal. The grower must gather within days, sometimes within hours, his year's livelihood, work, and investment. In harvesting the national apple crop of 152,000,000 bushels (about 30,000,000,000 apples) there is seldom enough labor at harvest time. Accordingly, every use of the help that is available must be made. No time limit on working hours is feasible.

Apples have no "floor" under selling prices. Manufacturers generally place a kind of floor under prices, can shut down their plant when prices drop below the profit point. Apple growers have a 40-year plant which never stops, cannot be shut down. Bud development and cropping of the trees cannot be controlled. Therefore, to set up a forced wage scale which, in many years, will be very high when compared with the selling price, is to impose probability of (1) huge losses to the growers in paying out these high wages for harvesting unprofitable fruit; or (2) will result in the crops not being harvested, thereby depriving the workers of that amount of wages. It seems to me that right here is the crux of the whole problem insofar as apples, peaches, and cherries are concerned.

Your participation in and support of any bill favorable to agricultural and horticultural products, such as the Barden bill, No. 5374, is urgently requested.

Truly yours,

BERKS-LEHIGH MOUNTAIN FRUIT GROWERS ASSOCIATION,
By J. E. LINDE, President.

ALLENTOWN, PA., April 10, 1939.

Hon. MARY T. NORTON,
Chairman, House Labor Committee, Washington, D. C.

Representing growers producing 1,000,000 bushel apples and peaches, we, the officers of the Berks-Lehigh Mountain Fruit Growers Association, are strongly opposed to your bill, H. R. 5435, introduced March 29, defining farm exemption. Harvesting, grading, packing, storing, canning, pasteurizing, drying in raw or natural state of agricultural or horticultural commodities, and delivery to wholesale market on growers' trucks should be exempt from wage and hour regulation. To attempt the substitution of your bill for the exemption of section 13 (A) 10 is highly detrimental to agricultural, horticultural, as well as consumer interests.

We suggest Barden bill, No. 5374, or its language, as suitable to us.

J. E. LINDE, President.
L. E. NEWCOMER, Manager.

PROPOSED BARTER OF ESSENTIAL WAR MATERIALS

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter addressed by me to the Secretary of State on April 11, 1939, suggesting that in any proposed barter arrangements made with other countries as to essential materials processed cotton be included.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

APRIL 11, 1939.

Hon. CORDELL HULL,
Secretary of State, Department of State,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I note in the press that the State Department seeks to acquire from foreign nations certain essential war materials not produced in the United States in exchange for surplus American cotton.

It is, of course, important for the United States to be well equipped with all the sinews of war. Moreover, any sound proposal that will help the American cotton farmer will be approved by all American citizens.

I suggest, however, that your effort be extended so as to embrace processed cotton and thereby help the men and women working for their living in a mill. Such an arrangement, with due precautions against demoralization of the price structure, would put the man in the mill on an equal footing with the man on the farm.

The half million workers engaged in the cotton textile industry are among those hardest hit by the reciprocal-trade agreements. The plan now proposed is a barter plan whereby the State Department will make a sharp break with the present reciprocal-trade policy. It is only just and equitable that the American textile workers be among those to experience the benefits of such a new departure.

I hope that in the interests of fair play to those who live in industrial States that you will adopt my suggestion and thereby guarantee that a truly national policy will be followed.

Very sincerely yours,

H. C. LODGE, Jr.

SENATOR FROM INDIANA—PETITION OF CONTEST OF RAYMOND E. WILLIS

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Committee on Privileges and Elections have a report to submit within the next few minutes, and I ask permission when we are ready to submit it that we may offer it, though not in the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. KING subsequently said: Mr. President, earlier in today's session I asked permission to submit (for Mr. BURKE, Mr. AUSTIN, and myself) a report from the Committee on Privileges and Elections with respect to the Van Nuys-Willis senatorial election contest in the State of Indiana. I now submit the report (Rept. No. 281).

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be received and printed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections I have submitted a report upon the so-called Van Nuys case, involving the senatorial election in Indiana. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration and adoption of the resolution which I now report, which carries out the mandate of the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 123), reported by Mr. KING (for himself, Mr. BURKE, and Mr. AUSTIN) from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the petition of Raymond E. Willis and the Indiana Republican State Central Committee for a recount and inquiry in the senatorial election in the State of Indiana, held November 8, 1938, in which Hon. Frederick Van Nuys was elected a United States Senator from the State of Indiana, be, and the same is hereby, dismissed.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

On page 60, line 25, to strike out the figure "$4,967,401" and substitute the figure "$6,020,890."

On page 72, line 24, to strike out the figure "$642,799" and substitute "$892,570."

On page 73, lines 3 and 4, to strike out the language following the comma after the word "further", and substitute the following: "that $150,000 of the foregoing appropriation shall be used for expanding existing crop-estimating services and making more frequent reports on fruit and vegetable crops, including potatoes and sweetpotatoes."

AMENDMENT TO SECOND DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. DOWNEY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 5219, the second deficiency appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

On page 8, between lines 19 and 20, to insert the following:

"SOCIAL SECURITY BOARD

"Grants to States for unemployment compensation administration: For an additional amount for grants to States, fiscal year 1939, for unemployment compensation administration, as authorized in title III of the Social Security Act, approved August 14, 1935, as amended, including rentals in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, $13,000,000."

NOTICE OF MOTION TO SUSPEND RULE—AMENDMENTS

Mr. HAYDEN submitted the following notice in writing:

In accordance with rule XL of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby give notice in writing that it is my intention to move to suspend paragraph 4 of rule XVI for the purpose of proposing to the bill (H. R. 4852) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, the following amendments, namely:

On page 13, in line 21, after the word "exhibits", insert the following: "; not to exceed $25,000 for employing persons or organizations, by contract or otherwise, for special reporting, engineering, technical, legal, and other services determined necessary by the Administrator, without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (41 U. S. C. 5), and without regard to the civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended: Provided, That of the $4,500,000 hereby made available for administrative expenses of the Authority, not to exceed $1,500,000 shall be available for such expenses incurred at the site and in connection with the construction of the United States Housing Authority non-Federal projects, and shall be reimbursed, in the discretion of the Administrator, by the public housing agencies constructing such projects, and such reimbursements shall be available for administrative expenses of the Authority: Provided further, That all necessary expenses in connection with the management and operation of projects transferred to the Authority by Executive Order No. 7732, of October 27, 1937, as modified by Executive Order No. 7839, of March 12, 1938, may be considered as nonadministrative expenses for the purposes hereof, and be paid from the rents received from each transferred project: Provided further, That hereafter the funds made available for administrative expenses of the United States Housing Authority shall be available for the payment, when specifically authorized by the Administrator, of actual transportation expenses and not to exceed $10 per diem in lieu of subsistence and other expenses to persons serving, while away from their homes, without other compensation from the United States, in an advisory capacity to the Authority."

On page 35, line 11, after the word "annum", insert the following: ": Provided further, That hereafter the appropriation 'Development of Indian arts and crafts' shall be available for the payment of not to exceed $10 per diem in lieu of subsistence and other expenses of members of the Indian Arts and Crafts Board, serving without other compensation from the United States, while absent from their homes on official business of the Board."

At the end of the bill insert the following new section:

"SEC. 4. That hereafter no part of this or any other appropriation for any executive department, establishment, or agency shall be used for the payment of long-distance telephone tolls except for the transaction of public business which the interests of the Government require to be so transacted; and all such payments shall be supported by a certificate by the head of the department, establishment, or agency concerned, or such subordinates as he may specially designate, to the effect that the use of the telephone in such instances was necessary in the interest of the Government."

Mr. HAYDEN submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to House bill 4852, the Interior Department appropriation bill, 1940, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

(For amendments referred to, see the foregoing notice.)

DAVID WILLS HOUSE—LINCOLN'S GETTYSBURG ADDRESS

Mr. DAVIS submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 10), which was referred to the Committee on the Library:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there is hereby established a special joint congressional committee to be composed of three Members of the Senate, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and three Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

SEC. 2. The committee is authorized and directed to visit the David Wills House, at Gettysburg, Pa., in which President Abraham Lincoln was entertained on November 18 and 19, 1863, and in which he wrote the Gettysburg Address. The committee shall make such inquiries and investigations as may be necessary for the purpose of determining (1) whether or not it would be in the public interest to acquire such house for the purpose of establishing it as a national shrine dedicated to the memory of Abraham Lincoln, and (2) the cost of acquiring such house and restoring it to its appearance as of November 18, 1863.

SEC. 3. The committee shall report to the Senate and House of Representatives, as soon as practicable, the results of its inquiries and investigations, together with its recommendations.

SEC. 4. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $———, shall be paid one-half from the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives.

INVESTIGATION OF MONETARY AND BANKING POLICIES

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, on February 28, 1939, I introduced Senate Joint Resolution 82 calling for an investigation of the United States gold policy. On April 10 the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System made public an important statement recommending congressional study of monetary measures and objectives. The Board points out that the duties and powers of supervision of our banks are divided and separated, and that there is "no definite determination of authority over money and credit."

In view of the obvious importance of these matters to the country, I have drafted and now submit a concurrent resolution for appropriate reference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The concurrent resolution will be received and appropriately referred.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 11) was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, as follows:

Whereas the United States now holds over half the world's monetary gold, or more than twice as much as it held immediately after the revaluation of gold in 1934; and

Whereas there is no reason to believe that the gold inflow which started in 1934 and has since continued almost without interruption will be reversed; and

Whereas there is serious doubt as to the desirability of this country's continuing the present gold policy; and

Whereas the Federal Reserve Board on April 10, 1939, issued a statement reading in part as follows: "The Board urges that Congress through appropriate committees or a joint committee take steps to determine the objectives by which monetary and banking authorities shall be guided, the validity of different plans and views on monetary and credit matters proposed or held by agencies within or outside the Government, including the Board's own positions, and the character of governmental machinery that would be best calculated to carry out the purposes of Congress in this important field. Such a broad approach would enable Congress to consider all the proposals in relation to each other, and to other important problems of our economic system. Piecemeal consideration of various proposals is a slow, cumbersome, and unsatisfactory process. Recognition by Congress of the limits within which monetary and credit action can be effective and determination of the mechanism and policies that would contribute most to its effectiveness will clear the way for consideration of broader aspects of a constructive program for further economic recovery and stability": Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That a special joint committee of five Senators, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and five Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, is authorized and directed to make a full and complete study and investigation of the gold, monetary, and banking policies of the United States in their various aspects, including the effectiveness of our banking and monetary system in view of the present division of responsibility with reference to monetary and credit policies.

For the purposes of this resolution the special joint committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Seventy-sixth and succeeding Congresses, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $50,000, shall be paid one-half from the contingent fund of the Senate, and one-half from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

INCITATION TO WAR, AND FOREIGN RELATIONS

Mr. BRIDGES. I submit a resolution and ask to have it read by the clerk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The legislative clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 120), as follows:

Whereas acts of aggression and threats of war which constantly emanate from abroad make America's foreign relations the most delicate problem facing the American people and this Government; and

Whereas it is the will of the people that America must stay out of all wars and not again offer up millions of our youth to slaughter on European battlefields; and

Whereas Members of the Senate have laid aside all partisan differences to join the administration in a preparedness program to protect our territorial integrity and to defend, if need be, the sanctity of the Monroe Doctrine in the Western Hemisphere; and

Whereas there exists within our borders various groups, societies, and individuals who are anxious to entangle the United States in European alliances, commitments, and agreements to the end that this country might be part and party to foreign power politics; and

Whereas public statements of high officials of this Government are being used for purposes of propaganda and public incitement: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Senate of the United States does hereby express its disapproval and forcefully condemns all inflammatory statements and press releases of the high officials of this Government which have the effect of antagonizing the peoples of other nations against us; which tend to create civil unrest; which tend to have a detrimental influence on American industry; and which create war hysteria in this country.

That it is the sense of the Senate that this Government must do all in its power to prevent American manhood from dying on the battlefields of Europe and to prevent American women and children from the hazards which modern war presents to noncombatants at home.

That the Senate urges upon the people of the United States cool and calm consideration of events transpiring in Europe to the end that they may not be lashed into war fever by militant utterances from whatever source.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I ask that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will be referred as requested by the Senator from New Hampshire.

FUNERAL EXPENSES OF THE LATE SENATOR LEWIS

Mr. LUCAS submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 121), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate hereby is authorized and directed to pay from the contingent fund of the Senate the actual and necessary expenses incurred by the committee appointed by the Vice President in arranging for and attending the funeral of Hon. James Hamilton Lewis, late a Senator from the State of Illinois, upon vouchers to be approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

REGIONAL RESEARCH LABORATORIES

Mr. BILBO submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 122), which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That the letter of the Secretary of Agriculture, dated April 5, 1939, which was transmitted to the Senate and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry on April 6, 1939, together with a report of a survey of all research activities relating to the industrial utilization of agricultural products in the four regional areas to be served by the regional laboratories, one in each major farm producing area, and to conduct researches into and develop new scientific, chemical, and technical uses, and new and extended markets and outlets for farm commodities and products and byproducts thereof, together with the accompanying papers and illustrations be printed as a Senate document; and that 2,000 additional copies be printed for the use of the Senate document room.

BLOCK BOOKING AND BLIND SELLING—MOTION

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a motion made by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], coming over from a previous day, to discharge the Committee on Interstate Commerce from the further consideration of the bill (S. 280) to prohibit and to prevent the trade practices known as compulsory block booking and blind selling in the leasing of motion-picture films in interstate and foreign commerce.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I suggest that the motion of the Senator from West Virginia go over without prejudice.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the motion will go over without prejudice.

REIMBURSEMENT OF CERTAIN ENLISTED MEN OF THE NAVY

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1117) to provide for the reimbursement of certain enlisted men or former enlisted men of the United States Navy for the value of personal effects lost in the hurricane at the submarine base, New London, Conn., on September 21, 1938, which was, on page 2, line 3, to strike out all after "Provided," down to and including "$1,000", on line 15, and insert: "That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

Mr. WALSH. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment with an amendment, in line 6 of the House amendment, to strike out the words "this claim" and insert the words "these claims."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The motion was agreed to.

CONSIDERATION OF BILLS ON THE CALENDAR

The VICE PRESIDENT. The routine morning business having been concluded, the calendar, under rule VIII, is in order, and the clerk will proceed to state bills on the calendar.

BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 326) for the payment of awards and appraisals heretofore made in favor of citizens of the United States in claims presented under the General Claims Convention of September 8, 1923, United States and Mexico, was announced as first in order.

Mr. ADAMS. I ask that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 58) providing that a calendar day's notice shall suffice in connection with suspension of a rule was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Let the resolution go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 74) providing for a Committee on Civil Aviation was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 685) to create a Division of Water Pollution Control in the United States Public Health Service, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, that bill should go over. It cannot be taken up under the call of the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

CLAIMS OF CROW TRIBE OF INDIANS

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 45) to amend the act of July 3, 1926, entitled "An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and render judgment in claims which the Crow Tribe of Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes" (44 Stat. L. 807) was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That section 1 of the act of July 3, 1926, entitled "An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and render judgment in claims which the Crow Tribe of Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes" (44 Stat. L. 807), be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows: "That jurisdiction be, and is hereby, conferred upon the Court of Claims, with right of appeal (not by writ of certiorari) to the Supreme Court of the United States by either party, notwithstanding lapse of time or statutes of limitations, to hear, adjudicate, and render judgment on the merits in any and all claims arising under or growing out of the treaty of Fort Laramie, dated September 17, 1851 (Fourth Kappler, p. 1065), between the United States and the Crow Indian Nation, and the treaty dated May 7, 1868 (15 Stat. 649), between the United States and the Crow Indians of Montana, or arising under or growing out of the agreement between the River Crow Tribe of Indians and the United States, dated July 15, 1868 (Third Kappler, p. 714); the Executive order dated July 2, 1873 (First Kappler, p. 855), or any subsequent Executive order; the act of Congress approved April 15, 1874 (18 Stat. 28), or any subsequent act of Congress or agreement with said Crow Indian Nation, including claims growing out of any cessions of land by said Indians to the United States for an inadequate consideration under mistake of fact, irrespective of any treaty stipulation entered into under such mistake of fact, which said Crow Indian Nation or any branch thereof may have against the United States, which claims have not heretofore been determined and adjudicated on their merits by the Court of Claims or the Supreme Court of the United States. Jurisdiction also is hereby conferred upon the said courts to determine whether or not any provision in any such treaty, agreement, Executive order, or act of Congress above set forth has been violated or breached by any act or acts of Congress or by any treaty made by the United States with any other Indian tribe or nation, and to render judgment for the damages resulting therefrom: Provided, That for complying with the terms of this joint resolution case No. H–248, in the Court of Claims, entitled 'The Crow Nation or Tribe of Indians of Montana against the United States,' decided on March 4, 1935, is hereby reinstated."

INDIAN CLAIMS BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 863) to provide for the payment of attorneys' fees from Osage tribal funds was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, heretofore I have objected to a number of these Indian claims bills, pending reports from the Department of Justice, from the Interior Department, and from the office of the Comptroller General. I received this morning two or three reports; the others are in process of being formulated; and I ask that the same bills to which I have heretofore called attention be passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that the Senator desires that Senate Joint Resolution 45, which has been passed, be passed over and that the other bills of similar purport on the calendar also be passed over?

Mr. KING. Yes. I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which Senate Joint Resolution 45 was passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the vote by which Senate Joint Resolution 45 was passed is reconsidered; and the joint resolution, together with the other bills referred to by the Senator from Utah will be passed over, as the Chair understands, down to and including Calendar No. 116?

Mr. KING. That is correct.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the bills will be passed over.

The bills passed over on request of Mr. KING are as follows:

S. 863. A bill to provide for the payment of attorneys' fees from Osage tribal funds;

S. 783. A bill to amend the act, as amended, entitled "An act to refer the claims of the Delaware Indians to the Court of Claims, with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States," approved February 7, 1925;

S. 784. A bill for the relief of certain Indians of the Winnebago Agency, Nebr.;

S. 790. A bill conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claims of the Prairie Band or Tribe of Pottawatomie Indians of Kansas and Wisconsin against the United States;

S. 1222. A bill authorizing an appropriation for payment to the Osage Tribe of Indians on account of lands sold by the United States;

S. 767. A bill conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and enter judgment in any claims which the Assiniboine Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes;

S. 864. A bill authorizing the Arapahoe and Cheyenne Indians to submit claims to the Court of Claims, and for other purposes;

S. 962. A bill to define the status of certain lands purchased for the Choctaw Indians, Mississippi; and

S. 498. A bill authorizing an appropriation to carry out the provisions of section 26 of the agreement with the Muskogee or Creek Tribe of Indians, approved March 1, 1901.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1464) to extend the facilities of the United States Public Health Service to active officers of the Foreign Service of the United States was announced as next in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This bill is identical with Calendar No. 151, House bill 3537.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I should like to have a brief description of the purposes of the measure.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has been suggested that the House bill be substituted for the Senate bill; and then, if passed, the House bill will become a law and be signed by the President.

Mr. McNARY. I thought we were considering Calendar No. 128, Senate bill 1464.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That bill was reached on the calendar, but attention was called to the fact that there is an identical House bill on the calendar. Therefore, it was suggested that the Senate consider the House bill in order that it may become a law.

Mr. McNARY. Yes; but I want to discuss it before the bill is passed. I suggest that it go over.

Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest that the bill be passed over for the moment. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN] is not on the floor at the present time. I think he can explain the bill when he comes in.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 902) to amend the act entitled "An act authorizing the temporary detail of United States employees, possessing special qualifications, to governments of American republics and the Philippines, and for other purposes," approved May 25, 1938, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 95) to amend the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 22, 1920, as amended, to extend retirement to certain employees of certain Indian schools was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1706) to provide for reorganizing agencies of the Government, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR (and other Senators). Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 3537) to extend the facilities of the United States Public Health Service to active officers of the Foreign Service of the United States was announced as next in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This bill is similar to Senate bill 1464, heretofore passed over, and will also be passed over.

The bill (S. 1162) to provide for the recognition of the services of the civilian officials and employees, citizens of the United States, engaged in and about the construction of the Panama Canal, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 86) for the relief of International Manufacturers' Sales Co. of America, Inc., A. S. Postnikoff, trustee, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the joint resolution? If not, let it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1303) to amend the Agriculture Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, with respect to cotton was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

INCLUSION OF PACIFIC NORTHWEST BOXED APPLES IN MARKETING ACT

The bill (S. 1096) to amend section 8c of the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, as amended, to make its provisions applicable to Pacific Northwest boxed apples was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "(k)." Paragraphs (2) and (6) of section 8c are amended by inserting after the word "apples", the words "other than Pacific Northwest boxed apples."

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1796) to amend the Tennessee Valley Authority Act, 1933, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING and Mr. BRIDGES. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I give notice that upon the conclusion of the call of the calendar I shall move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of this bill.

The bill (H. R. 2971) for the relief of certain Indians of the Winnebago Agency was announced as next in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This bill is identical with Calendar No. 101, Senate bill 784, heretofore passed over; and the House bill also will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 3134) to amend the act entitled "An act authorizing the temporary detail of United States employees possessing special qualifications, to governments of American republics and the Philippines, and for other purposes," approved May 25, 1938, was announced as next in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This bill is identical with Senate bill 902, heretofore passed over, and for the same reason the House bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 3367) to define the status of certain lands purchased for the Choctaw Indians, Mississippi, was announced as next in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This bill is identical with Senate bill 962, heretofore passed over, and for the same reason the House bill will be passed over.

PAYMENT OF ATTORNEY'S FEES FROM OSAGE FUNDS

The bill (H. R. 4117) to provide for the payment of attorney's fees from Osage tribal funds was announced as next in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This bill is similar to Senate bill 863, Calendar No. 88, heretofore passed over. The House bill, therefore, will also be passed over.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. What was done with Senate bill 863?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was passed over at the suggestion of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], and it was agreed that all bills of that nature were to be passed over for the day.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the House bill and the Senate bill are identical save in one particular. Both measures have to do with the fees of some attorneys representing a certain tribe of Indians in Oklahoma. The attorneys have a contract, approved by the Department, for 12½ percent. The House reduced the amount to 10 percent. The Senate bill carries an approval by the Congress of 12½ percent.

Last year the same issue arose; and at the last moment the House agreed to 12½ percent, but it was too late to have the conference report acted upon, so the bill did not become law. I am wondering if the Senator from Utah will not agree that this bill may be passed. I propose, however, if I may, to substitute the text of the Senate bill for the text of the House bill.

Mr. KING. I have no objection to that course.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I then ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 4117, being Calendar No. 205.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to reconsider the action of the Senate in passing over House bill 4117. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4117) to provide for the payment of attorney's fees from Osage tribal funds.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I now move that all after the enacting clause of the House bill be stricken out, and that the text of Senate bill 863 be substituted therefor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The amendment was to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert the following:

That pursuant to the terms of a contract approved by the First Assistant Secretary of the Interior July 3, 1933, between Fred Lookout, principal chief of the Osage Tribe of Indians, and certain attorneys therein named, modified pursuant to Osage Council Resolution No. 21, dated June 24, 1935, and extended for a period of 5 years from July 3, 1938, there is hereby authorized to be expended from any funds collected as a result of any suit or suits brought under said contract such sum as may be necessary to pay the fee provided for the attorneys so employed, not to exceed 12½ percent of such amount as may be recovered and collected for the Osage Tribe, as provided in the terms of the contract.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, how do the provisions of the Senate bill differ from those of the House bill?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Some attorneys in my State have a contract to represent the Osage Indians. Their contract calls for 12½ percent attorney's fee. A contract for that amount of compensation has been approved by the Office of Indian Affairs of the Interior Department. The Senate bill carries an approval of the contract. The House bill seeks to cut down the attorney's fee from 12½ percent to 10 percent. I have moved to substitute the text of the Senate bill for the text of the House bill, the former being an approval by the Congress of the contract in the amount of 12½ percent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I now ask the Senate bill 863, Calendar No. 88, be indefinitely postponed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 11) directing the Comptroller General to readjust the accounts between the United States and the State of Vermont was announced as next in order.

Mr. BURKE. Let the joint resolution go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

DISTRICT JUDGE, EASTERN AND WESTERN DISTRICTS OF WASHINGTON—RECOMMITTAL

The bill (S. 1554) to provide that the district judge for the western district of Washington authorized to be appointed under the act of May 31, 1938, shall be a district judge for the eastern and western districts of Washington was announced as next in order.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky? The Chair hears none.

REIMBURSEMENT OF APPROPRIATIONS BECAUSE OF DISPOSITION OF OLD MATERIAL, ETC.

The bill (S. 1016) to authorize reimbursement of appropriations on account of expenditures in connection with disposition of old material, condemned stores, etc., was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That appropriations hereafter contained in annual military appropriation acts may be reimbursed from the proceeds of sales of old material, condemned stores, supplies, or other property of any kind on account of expenditures from such appropriations incident to the handling, preparation for sale, sale, and disposition of such property.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 841) to authorize the Secretary of War to prescribe the number of grades and ratings of enlisted men of the Army was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like an explanation of the necessity of rearranging in order to regrade the various positions in the Army. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1462) to amend an act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let us have an explanation of the bill. Let it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 795) to provide for the education of all types of physically handicapped children, to make an appropriation of money therefor, and to regulate its expenditure was announced as next in order.

Mr. GERRY. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 840) to amend and clarify the provisions of the act of June 15, 1936 (49 Stat. 1507), and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I should like an explanation of these military bills. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1681) to amend section 107 of the Judicial Code to create a mountain district in the State of Tennessee, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Senator from Vermont desires that that bill go over, and it is perfectly satisfactory to have that course pursued.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

AMENDMENT OF JUDICIAL CODE AS TO CLAIMS AGAINST UNITED STATES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 197) to amend the Judicial Code in respect to claims against the United States for just compensation, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, on page 3, line 4, after the numerals "262" and the parenthesis, to insert:

And provided further, That this section shall not apply to suits now pending.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 156 of the Judicial Code of the United States (U. S. C., title 28, sec. 262) be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 156. Except as provided by section 156a of the Judicial Code, every claim against the United States cognizable by the Court of Claims shall be forever barred unless the petition setting forth a statement thereof is filed in the court, or transmitted to it by the Secretary of the Senate or the Clerk of the House of Representatives, as provided by law, within 6 years after the claim first accrues. The claims of married women, first accrued during marriage, of persons under the age of 21 years, first accrued during minority, and of idiots, lunatics, insane persons, and persons beyond the seas at the time the claim accrued, entitled to the claim, shall not be barred if the petition be filed in the court or transmitted, as aforesaid, within 3 years after the disability has ceased: Provided, That no other disability than those enumerated shall prevent any claim from being barred, nor shall any of the said disabilities operate cumulatively."

SEC. 2. That the Judicial Code of the United States be amended by inserting after section 156 (U. S. C., title 28, sec. 262) the following section:

"SEC. 156a. Every claim against the United States for just compensation for property taken by the United States, or for the use or manufacture by or for the United States without license of the owner thereof, of an invention described in or covered by a patent of the United States, shall be forever barred unless the petition setting forth a statement thereof is filed in court within 1 year after the claim first accrued: Provided, however, That if the petition contains or is accompanied by a waiver of that portion of the interest accruing between the expiration of such 1-year period and the date on which the petition is filed, it may be filed within the period prescribed by section 156 of the Judicial Code (U. S. C., title 28, sec. 262): And provided further, That this section shall not apply to suits now pending."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, doubtless it seems strange for one to speak upon a bill to which there is no objection; but this bill is a rara avis in that, if enacted, it will save money to the Government of the United States.

In this connection I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a table showing cases wherein the amount claimed is specified in the petitions and showing the amount of interest involved—where interest is claimed—calculated to July 1, 1938.

There being no objection, the tables was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I cannot too strongly commend the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER], who was chairman of the subcommittee of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary considering this bill, for the untiring assiduity with which he has labored to promote its passage. It is interesting to know that this is one bill which, if enacted into law, will really save millions of dollars annually to the Government of the United States.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TERM OF COURT AT KALISPELL, MONT.

The bill (S. 474) to amend section 92 of the Judicial Code to provide for a term of court at Kalispell, Mont., was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 92 of the Judicial Code, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 92. The State of Montana shall constitute one judicial district, to be known as the district of Montana. Terms of the district court shall be held at Helena, Butte, Great Falls, Lewistown, Billings, Missoula, Glasgow, Havre, Miles City, Livingston, and Kalispell at such times as may be fixed by rule of such court: Provided, That suitable rooms and accommodations for holding court at Lewistown, Livingston, Havre, and Kalispell are furnished free of all expense to the United States. Causes, civil and criminal, may be transferred by the court or a judge thereof from any sitting place designated above to any other sitting place thus designated, when the convenience of the parties or the ends of justice would be promoted by the transfer; and any interlocutory order may be made by the court or judge thereof in either place."

STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS IN OFFENSES PUNISHABLE BY DEATH

The bill (S. 1773) to provide that no statute of limitations shall apply to offenses punishable by death was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That an indictment for any offense punishable by death may be found at any time without regard to any statute of limitations.

SEC. 2. This act shall not authorize prosecution, trial, or punishment for any offense now barred by the provisions of existing law.

TERMS OF UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT, NORTHERN DISTRICT OF MISSISSIPPI

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 70) to amend section 90 of the Judicial Code, as amended, with respect to the terms of the Federal District Court for the Northern District of Mississippi, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, on page 1, after line 10, to insert the following new section:

SEC. 2. This act shall take effect on July 1, 1939.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the third sentence of section 90 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., Supp. III, title 28, sec. 170), is amended to read as follows: "The terms of the district court for the eastern division shall be held at Aberdeen on the first Mondays in April and October; for the western division, at Oxford on the first Mondays in June and December; and for the Delta division, at Clarksdale on the first Mondays in May and November."

SEC. 2. This act shall take effect on July 1, 1939.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CURTIS JETT

The bill (S. 38) for the relief of Curtis Jett was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Curtis Jett, who was a member of Troop I, Sixth Regiment United States Cavalry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private on July 23, 1898: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 505) authorizing the President of the United States to summon Sam Alexander before an Army retiring board, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I should like to have an explanation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

CONTINGENT EXPENDITURES, COAST GUARD ACADEMY

The bill (H. R. 136) authorizing contingent expenditures, United States Coast Guard Academy, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOANS OF BANK OFFICIALS TO FEDERAL RESERVE BANKS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1886) to amend subsection (g) of section 22 of the Federal Reserve Act relating to loans of bank officials to member banks, which had been reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency with an amendment, on page 2, line 1, after the word "extended", to insert "for periods expiring not more than 9 years from such date", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first sentence of subsection (g) of section 22 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended (U. S. C., title 12, sec. 375a), is amended to read as follows:

"(g) No executive officer of any member bank shall borrow from or otherwise become indebted to any member bank of which he is an executive officer, and no member bank shall make any loan or extend credit in any other manner to any of its own executive officers: Provided, That loans made to any such officer prior to June 16, 1933, may be renewed or extended for periods expiring not more than 9 years from such date where the board of directors of the member bank shall have satisfied themselves (1) that such extension or renewal is in the best interest of the bank, (2) that the officer indebted has made reasonable effort to reduce his obligation, and (3) that such extension or renewal is accompanied by a written agreement executed by such officer requiring regular amortization payments on the principal of said obligation in amounts satisfactory to the board of directors, these findings to be evidenced by resolution of the board of directors spread upon the minute book of the bank: Provided further, That with the prior approval of a majority of the entire board of directors, any member bank may extend credit to any executive officer thereof, and such officer may become indebted thereto, in an amount not exceeding $2,500."

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of the scope and general purposes of the amendment, if some member of the Committee on Banking and Currency can make the explanation.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, the Senator will recall that the Federal Reserve Act provides that all bank officials must pay their debts to their own banks within a certain period. The period has been extended once. My recollection is that about four-fifths of the loans have been paid, but the other fifth have not been paid, and the bill provides an additional extension.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, even the one-fifth who have not liquidated the indebtedness to their own banks are materially reducing them. The bill is merely an extension in order that the officials may be given an opportunity to pay their debts.

Mr. TAFT. The bill provides that they must pay the debts from time to time in installments, so that the debts will finally be paid in full.

Mr. McNARY. I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to extend to June 16, 1942, the period within which certain loans to executive officers of member banks of the Federal Reserve System may be renewed or extended."

PREVENTION OF PERNICIOUS POLITICAL ACTIVITIES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1871) to prevent pernicious political activities, which had been reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 2, after line 4, to strike out section 2, as follows:

SEC. 2. It shall be unlawful for any person to intimidate, threaten, or coerce, or to attempt to intimidate, threaten, or coerce, any other person for the purpose of interfering with the right of such other person to vote, or to vote as he may choose, or of causing such other person to vote for or not to vote for any candidate for the nomination of any party as its candidate for the office of President, Vice President, Presidential elector, Member of the Senate, or Member of the House of Representatives at any primary or nominating convention held solely or in part for the purpose of selecting the candidate of such party for the office of President, Vice President, Presidential elector, Member of the Senate, or Member of the House of Representatives.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 2, line 25, to strike out the words "or influence"; after the word "or" to strike out the words "affecting the results of, any primary, political convention, or election" and to insert "affecting the election of any candidate for the office of President, Vice President, Presidential elector, Member of the Senate, or Member of the House of Representatives"; and on line 6, after the word "person", to insert "to state his preference with respect to any such candidates or", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. It shall be unlawful for any person employed in any administrative position by the United States, or by any department, independent agency, or other agency of the United States (including any corporation controlled by the United States or any agency thereof, and any corporation all of the capital stock of which is owned by the United States or any agency thereof), to use his official authority for the purpose of interfering with, or affecting the election of any candidate for the office of President, Vice President, Presidential elector, Member of the Senate, or Member of the House of Representatives: Provided, That nothing herein shall be deemed to affect the right of any such person to state his preference with respect to any such candidates or to vote as he may choose.

The amendments were agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 7, to strike out section 4, as follows:

SEC. 4. It shall be unlawful for any person employed in an administrative position by any State or political subdivision thereof, or by any department, agency, or instrumentality of any State or any political subdivision thereof, whose compensation or any part thereof is paid from moneys appropriated by the Congress or from any fund into which such moneys or any part thereof are placed, whether the payment of such compensation is made by the United States or by any department, independent agency, or other agency of the United States (including any corporation controlled by the United States or any agency thereof, and any corporation all of the capital stock of which is owned by the United States or any agency thereof), or is made by the State or political subdivision thereof, or by the department, agency, or instrumentality of the State or the political subdivision thereof by which such person is employed, to use his official authority or influence for the purpose of interfering with, or affecting the results of, any primary, political convention, or election: Provided, That nothing herein shall be deemed to affect the right of any person to vote as he may choose.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, page 4, line 12, after the word "section", to strike out "10" and insert "9", and on line 17, after the word "for", to insert "work relief or", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 6. Except as may be required by the provisions of subsection (b), section 9 of this act, it shall be unlawful for any person to deprive, attempt to deprive, or threaten to deprive, by any means, any person of any employment, position, work, compensation, or other benefit provided for or made possible by any act of Congress appropriating funds for work relief or relief purposes, on account of race, creed, color, or any political activity, support of, or opposition to any candidate or any political party in any election.

The amendments were agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 7, page 4, line 24, after the words "any person", to insert "known by him to be", and on page 5, line 2, after the words "funds for", to insert "work relief or", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 7. It shall be unlawful for any person to solicit or be in any manner concerned in soliciting any assessment, subscription, or contribution for any political purpose whatever from any person known by him to be entitled to or receiving compensation, employment, or other benefit provided for or made possible by any act of Congress appropriating funds for work relief or relief purposes.

The amendments were agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 8, page 5, line 8, after the words "funds for", to insert "work relief or", and after the word "purposes", to strike out "for delivery", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 8. It shall be unlawful for any person to furnish or to disclose, or to aid or assist in furnishing or disclosing, any list or names of persons receiving compensation, employment, or benefits provided for or made possible by any act of Congress appropriating, or authorizing the appropriation of, funds for work relief or relief purposes, to a political candidate, committee, campaign manager, or to any person for delivery to a political candidate, committee, or campaign manager, and it shall be unlawful for any person to receive any such list or names for political purposes.

The amendments were agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 13, to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 7. No part of any appropriation made by any act, heretofore or hereafter enacted, making appropriations for work relief, relief, or otherwise to increase employment by providing loans and grants for public-works projects, shall be used for the purpose of, and no authority conferred by any such act upon any person shall be exercised or administered for the purpose of, interfering with, restraining, or coercing any individual in the exercise of his right to vote at any election.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the clerk will be authorized to renumber the sections.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of the bill. It is an important measure, of far-reaching effect to our country; and while I favor it, I think there should be a brief explanation.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I shall be very happy to make an explanation of the bill, but I took it to be the attitude of the Senate and of Senators generally that that was unnecessary at this time.

The bill incorporates many features which are in existing law. It includes some others which the Committee on Privileges and Elections considered at length and adopted unanimously.

Several features which were objectionable to many Senators, in view of certain constitutional considerations and opinions as to the power of Congress, were eliminated by the committee.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is it not true that all the provisions relating to primary elections were eliminated?

Mr. HATCH. Unfortunately, in my opinion, that is true.

Mr. CONNALLY. It is true, whether it is unfortunate or not, is it not?

Mr. HATCH. It is quite true.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for any person to intimidate, threaten, or coerce, or to attempt to intimidate, threaten, or coerce, any other person for the purpose of interfering with the right of such other person to vote or to vote as he may choose, or of causing such other person to vote for, or not to vote for, any candidate for the office of President, Vice President, Presidential elector, Member of the Senate, or Member of the House of Representatives at any election held solely or in part for the purpose of selecting a President, a Vice President, a Presidential elector, or any Member of the Senate or any Member of the House of Representatives.

SEC. 2. It shall be unlawful for any person employed in any administrative position by the United States, or by any department, independent agency, or other agency of the United States (including any corporation controlled by the United States or any agency thereof, and any corporation all of the capital stock of which is owned by the United States or any agency thereof), to use his official authority for the purpose of interfering with, or affecting the election of any candidate for the office of President, Vice President, Presidential elector, Member of the Senate, or Member of the House of Representatives: Provided, That nothing herein shall be deemed to affect the right of any such person to state his preference with respect to any such candidates or to vote as he may choose.

SEC. 3. It shall be unlawful for any person, directly or indirectly, to promise any employment, position, work, compensation, or other benefit, provided for or made possible by any act of Congress, to any person as consideration, favor, or reward for any political activity or for the support of or opposition to any candidate or any political party in any election.

SEC. 4. Except as may be required by the provisions of subsection (b), section 9 of this act, it shall be unlawful for any person to deprive, attempt to deprive, or threaten to deprive, by any means, any person of any employment, position, work, compensation, or other benefit provided for or made possible by any act of Congress appropriating funds for work relief or relief purposes, on account of race, creed, color, or any political activity, support of, or opposition to any candidate or any political party in any election.

SEC. 5. It shall be unlawful for any person to solicit or be in any manner concerned in soliciting any assessment, subscription, or contribution for any political purpose whatever from any person known by him to be entitled to or receiving compensation, employment, or other benefit provided for or made possible by any act of Congress appropriating funds for work relief or relief purposes.

SEC. 6. It shall be unlawful for any person to furnish or to disclose, or to aid or assist in furnishing or disclosing any list or names of persons receiving compensation, employment, or benefits provided for or made possible by any act of Congress appropriating, or authorizing the appropriation of, funds for work relief or relief purposes, to a political candidate, committee, campaign manager, or to any person for delivery to a political candidate, committee, or campaign manager, and it shall be unlawful for any person to receive any such list or names for political purposes.

SEC. 7. No part of any appropriation made by any act, heretofore or hereafter enacted, making appropriations for work relief, relief, or otherwise to increase employment by providing loans and grants for public-works projects, shall be used for the purpose of, and no authority conferred by any such act upon any person shall be exercised or administered for the purpose of, interfering with, restraining, or coercing any individual in the exercise of his right to vote at any election.

SEC. 8. Any person who violates any of the foregoing provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a felony and upon conviction shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both.

SEC. 9. (a) It shall be unlawful for any person employed in any administrative or supervisory capacity by any agency of the Federal Government, whose compensation, or any part thereof, is paid from funds authorized or appropriated by any act of Congress, to use his official authority or influence for the purpose of interfering with an election or of affecting the results thereof. All such persons shall retain the right to vote as they please and to express privately their opinions on all political subjects, but they shall take no active part in political management or in political campaigns.

(b) Any person violating the provisions of this section shall be immediately removed from the position or office held by him, and thereafter no part of the funds appropriated by any act of Congress shall be used to pay the compensation of such person.

SEC. 10. All provisions of this act shall be in addition to, not in substitution for, any other sections of existing law or of this act.

SEC. 11. If any provision of this act, or the application of such provision to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

GRADING AND CLASSIFICATION OF FOREIGN SERVICE EMPLOYEES

The bill (H. R. 3655) to amend the act entitled "An act for the grading and classification of clerks in the Foreign Service of the United States of America, and providing compensation therefor," approved February 23, 1931, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MACEY N. BEVAN

The bill (H. R. 590) for the relief of Macey N. Bevan was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HALLIE H. WOODS

The bill (H. R. 534) for the relief of Hallie H. Woods was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM BOYER

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 919) for the relief of William Boyer, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 6, to strike out "$10,000" and to insert "$1,500"; and to insert a proviso at the end of the bill, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to William Boyer, Missoula, Mont., the sum of $1,500. The payment of such sum shall be in full settlement of all claims against the United States for damages sustained by the said William Boyer as the result of being shot by a Federal officer on June 29, 1926, near Eureka, Mont. The said William Boyer has been permanently and totally disabled by reason of such shooting: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT OF 1938

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1569) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subsection (e) of section 344 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, is amended by striking out, in the first line thereof, the words "1938 and 1939" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "1938, 1939, 1940, and 1941."

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator from New Mexico explain the bill.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, the bill proposes to amend the Agricultural Act of 1938, which concerns particularly the new section of Arizona, New Mexico, and California, producing cotton. In those States we did not have the 5-year cotton history which the older States had, and in the act of 1938 we made provision to protect us. This bill merely extends the same provisions to 1940 and 1941.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MACK COPPER CO.

The bill (S. 1945) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of the Mack Copper Co. was announced as next in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This bill is identical with House bill 2595, Calendar No. 268. Is there objection to the substitution of the House bill for the Senate bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2595) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of the Mack Copper Co., which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection Senate bill 1945 will be indefinitely postponed.

NADINE SANDERS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1164) for the relief of Nadine Sanders, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, to strike out "$1,500" and to insert "$1,096.40", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Nadine Sanders, Santa Fe, N. Mex., the sum of $1,096.40. The payment of such sum shall be in full settlement of all claims against the United States for damages sustained by the said Nadine Sanders on account of personal injuries received on February 13, 1937, when the automobile in which she was riding was struck in Santa Fe, N. Mex., by a Soil Conservation Service truck: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALLEN L. ABSHIER AND OTHERS

The bill (H. R. 2064) for the relief of Allen L. Abshier, Verne G. Adams, Oliver D. Chattin, William K. Heath, and Harry B. Jennings was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CREDITS IN THE ACCOUNTS OF DISBURSING OFFICERS

The bill (H. R. 2073) to allow credit in the accounts of certain former disbursing officers of the Veterans' Administration, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WEST VIRGINIA CO.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 289) for the relief of the West Virginia Co., which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 4, after the word "Treasury", to strike out "not otherwise appropriated" and to insert "appropriated for or allocated to the Works Progress Administration"; on line 7, to strike out "$2,716.43" and to insert "$2,156.43", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury appropriated for or allocated to the Works Progress Administration, to the West Virginia Co., of Charleston, W. Va., the sum of $2,156.43, in full satisfaction of its claim against the United States for reimbursement for the cost of repairing an Acme roller owned by it which was damaged through the negligence of an employee of the Works Progress Administration on May 25, 1937, and the loss of 3 months' rental for such Acme roller: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with such claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any money of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with such claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. QUITMAN SMITH

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 431) for the relief of Mrs. Quitman Smith, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 5, to strike out "not otherwise appropriated" and insert "appropriated for or allocated to the Works Progress Administration"; and on line 8, to strike out "$2,353.70" and to insert $1,353.70", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury appropriated for or allocated to the Works Progress Administration, to Mrs. Quitman Smith, of Hattiesburg, Miss., the sum of $1,353.70, in full settlement of all her claims against the United States for personal injuries sustained and expenses incurred as a result of an accident which occurred on March 19, 1938, when the automobile which she was driving was struck by a truck driven by Dan M. Barrett, an employee of the Works Progress Administration: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS A. ROSS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1882) for the relief of Thomas A. Ross, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 7, to strike out "$459.25" and to insert "$250", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Thomas A. Ross, chief boatswain, United States Coast Guard, the sum of $250, in full settlement of all claims against the United States for loss of, or damage to, personal property and effects resulting from the fire which occurred at Nome, Alaska, on September 17, 1934: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 570) to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in agricultural products; to prevent unfair competition; to provide for the orderly marketing of such products; to promote the general welfare by assuring an abundant and permanent supply of such products by securing to the producers a minimum price of not less than cost of production, and for other purposes was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

GRACE S. TAYLOR

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1339) for the relief of Grace S. Taylor, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment to add a proviso at the end of the bill, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Grace S. Taylor, Kensington, Md., the sum of $100. The payment of such sum shall be in full settlement of all claims against the United States on account of personal injuries sustained by the said Grace S. Taylor when the automobile which she was driving was struck, on March 12, 1937, in Washington, D. C., by an automobile owned by the Veterans' Administration and operated by an employee of such Department: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of this bill.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I think probably the Senator is laboring under a false assumption. The bill provides only for the payment of $100 to a lady who was injured in an automobile wreck under circumstances which showed the Government was clearly at fault. Certainly 10 percent of a hundred dollars for preparing a case for presentation to Congress is not too much in the way of an attorney's fee. I hope that by virtue of the fact that the $100 is offered in complete settlement of all claims, and the bill involves only a hundred dollars, there will be no objection to the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

USE OF FUNDS FOR TOLL BRIDGES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1109) to amend the act entitled "An act to aid the several States in making, or for having made, certain toll bridges on the system of Federal-aid highways free bridges, and for other purposes" by providing that funds available under such act may be used to match regular and secondary Federal-aid road funds, which had been reported from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, with an amendment, on page 3, line 1, after the word "bridge", to strike out "shall be used by the highway department of such State for matching unobligated regular and secondary Federal-aid road funds available to the State" and to insert "from regular Federal-aid road funds shall be used for matching unobligated regular Federal-aid road funds available to the State for expenditure in the improvement of highways on the system of Federal-aid highways, and any amount so paid on account of any such bridge from secondary Federal-aid road funds shall be used for matching unobligated secondary Federal-aid road funds available to the State for expenditure in the improvement of secondary or feeder roads", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc. That the act entitled "An act to aid the several States in making, or for having made, certain toll bridges on the system of Federal-aid highways free bridges, and for other purposes," approved August 14, 1937, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"That in the case of each and every State, or political subdivision or subdivisions thereof, which, prior to the date of approval of this act, shall have constructed or acquired any toll bridges on the approved system of Federal-aid highways, and which has caused or shall, prior to July 1, 1939, cause any such toll bridge or toll bridges to be made free, the Secretary of Agriculture shall be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay out of the regular and secondary Federal-aid road funds apportioned to such State not to exceed 50 percent of such amount as may be approved by the Secretary of Agriculture as the reasonable value or construction cost of any such bridge whichever shall be least: Provided, That no payment of Federal funds shall be made on account of any such bridge which was not constructed in accordance with plans and specifications which would meet the standards required by the Secretary of Agriculture at the time such bridge was constructed, nor on account of any bridge the construction of which was completed prior to March 3, 1927: And provided further, That no such payment shall be made which will exceed 50 percent of the reasonable value or cost of the labor and materials which were actually incorporated in the construction of such bridge, excluding all costs of rights-of-way, property damages, and financing costs, whichever, value or cost, shall be least, and any amount so paid on account of any such bridge from regular Federal-aid road funds shall be used for matching unobligated regular Federal-aid road funds available to the State for expenditure in the improvement of highways on the system of Federal-aid highways, and any amount so paid on account of any such bridge from secondary Federal-aid road funds shall be used for matching unobligated secondary Federal-aid road funds available to the State for expenditure in the improvement of secondary or feeder roads."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, the bill merely amends the present toll-bridge act by providing that the States may use the money received under the present law to match secondary or feeder roads money. It makes no other change in the law. It merely enables the States to match the Government money that is applied on secondary or farm-to-market roads.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator assure us that it involves no drain upon the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. MILLER. No more than what is already provided for in the existing law.

Mr. KING. It does not expand the obligation of the Federal Government?

Mr. MILLER. Oh, no.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LA FOLLETTE in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ASSISTANT TO THE SURGEON GENERAL

The bill (S. 1899) to provide for the detail of a commissioned medical officer of the Public Health Service to serve as assistant to the Surgeon General was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be in the Public Health Service a commissioned medical officer of the Public Health Service, detailed by the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service, who shall be known as the assistant to the Surgeon General and who shall perform such duties as the Surgeon General may prescribe and shall act as Surgeon General during the absence or disability of the Surgeon General or in the event that there is a vacancy in the office of the Surgeon General. The assistant to the Surgeon General, while serving as such assistant, shall have a rank in the Public Health Service which shall correspond to that held by a brigadier general in the United States Army, and shall be entitled to the same pay and allowances as a brigadier general in the Army.

EXCHANGE OF PROPERTY AT TUSKEGEE, ALA.

The bill (S. 1088) to authorize the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to exchange certain property located at Veterans' Administration facility, Tuskegee, Ala., title to which is now vested in the United States, for certain property of the Tuskegee Normal and Industrial Institute was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs is hereby authorized and directed to transfer to the Tuskegee Normal and Industrial Institute, Tuskegee Institute, Ala., title to the land described in subsection (a) of this act, now vested in the United States, in exchange for certain property, described in subsection (b) of this act, from the Tuskegee Normal and Industrial Institute.

(a) The following-described property located in the northwest corner of the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section 23, township 17, range 23 east, Macon County, Ala., and being all that portion of the Government reservation lying west of the old Chehaw Road:

Beginning at a point, said point being the northwest corner of the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter of said section 23, said point also being the northwest corner of that part of the Government reservation lying west of the old Chehaw Road; thence east along the north line of the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter of said section 23, same also being the north line of that part of the Government reservation lying west of the old Chehaw Road, a distance of 3.4 chains to a point in the west side of the old Chehaw Road; thence south 25° east along the west line of the old Chehaw Road, a distance of 3.34 chains to a point, said point being in the southerly boundary line of the Government reservation; thence west along the southerly boundary line of the Government reservation, a distance of 4.81 chains to the west line of the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter of said section 23; thence north along the west line of the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter of said section 23, a distance of 3.03 chains to the point of beginning, containing, in all, 1.24 acres, more or less.

(b) The following-described property located in the north half of the southeast quarter of section 23, township 17, range 23 east, Macon County, Ala.:

Beginning at a point, said point being in the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter of said section 23, and also being 3.03 chains south of the east and west half-section line of said section 23 and 10.2 chains west of the east line of said section 23, and further being in the south line of the Government reservation as at present constituted; thence south a distance of 6.81 chains to a point; thence west a distance of 11 chains to a point, said point being west 1.2 chains from the east line of the northwest quarter of the southeast quarter of said section 23; thence north a distance of 6.81 chains to a point, said point being in the southerly boundary line of the present Government reservation; thence east along the southerly boundary line of the Government reservation, a distance of 11 chains to the point of beginning, containing 7.5 acres, more or less.

MAKING TOLL BRIDGES FREE

The bill (S. 1985) to extend the time within which the States may cause toll bridges to be made free in order to qualify for aid under the act of August 14, 1937, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to aid the several States in making, or for having made, certain toll bridges on the system of Federal-aid highways free bridges, and for other purposes," approved August 14, 1937, is amended by striking out "July 1, 1939," and inserting in lieu thereof "July 1, 1941."

RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The resolution (S. Res. 107) opposing sales of American cotton during the present world crisis to foreign purchasers below the cost of production was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over under the rule.

APPLICATION OF EMPLOYEES' COMPENSATION ACT TO CIVIL OFFICERS

The bill (S. 1416) to make the provisions of the Employees' Compensation Act applicable to civil officers of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill be passed over.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, permit me to suggest to my able friend the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] that the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE] was chairman of the subcommittee in charge of this bill, and I feel sure that the Senator from Utah will agree with me that when the erudite Senator from Nebraska gives his attention to a matter his conclusions are usually persuasive. I therefore request the Senator from Nebraska to make an explanation of the bill. Although I am its sponsor, he will more readily make explanation than I.

Mr. KING. I assent to both propositions made by the Senator.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, the bill, which is recommended by the Department of Justice, provides that only certain Federal employees who are now excluded from coming within the provisions of the Federal Employees' Compensation Act shall hereafter come within it. I will state the example given. In a recent case a marshal and his deputy were traveling by automobile, taking a prisoner as a part of their official duties, and there was an unavoidable accident by reason of which the United States marshal was injured.

He does not come within the terms of the Federal Employees' Compensation Act, because he is not an employee but is a civil officer. If the deputy who was by his side had been the one injured, his claim would have been handled in the normal course. So, in order to present the matter, the marshal had to have a private bill filed and to have the case go through the Court of Claims. The only purpose of the bill is to correct that situation.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916, as amended (U. S. C., title 5, ch. 15), are hereby made applicable to all civil officers of the United States, who are not embraced within the provisions of any other law relating to death or disability compensation.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1305) to promote the general welfare through appropriation of funds to assist the States and Territories in providing more effective programs of public education was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over under the rule.

The bill (S. 1018) to authorize the procurement, without advertising, of certain aircraft parts and instruments or aeronautical accessories, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of this bill? The bill is a very important one. If we cannot have an explanation at this time, I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over under the rule.

PURCHASE BY SECRETARY OF WAR OF CERTAIN EQUIPMENT AND SUPPLIES

The bill (S. 1020) to authorize the purchase of equipment and supplies for experimental and test purposes was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War may, at his discretion, purchase abroad or in the United States with or without competition, by contract or otherwise, such ordnance, signal, and chemical-warfare equipment, supplies, parts, accessories, or designs thereof, as may be necessary in his judgment for experimental or test purposes in the development of the best kind of equipment and supplies required for the national defense.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2065) to provide for the regulation of the sale of certain securities in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails, and the regulation of the trust indentures under which the same are issued, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, that bill will have to go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over under the rule.

The bill (S. 835) to provide compensation for disability or death resulting from injury to employees of contractors on public buildings and public works was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

AMENDMENT OF UNITED STATES HOUSING ACT OF 1937

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1275) to amend the United States Housing Act of 1937, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Education and Labor with amendments.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of that measure?

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, the bill proposes to amend only that section of the Housing Act of 1937 which prescribes a cost limit. The bill makes only one change. Higher cost limits today apply to cities with over 500,000 population. The proposed change would make the higher cost limits apply to metropolitan districts having a population of over 500,000. The change will affect a rather limited number of metropolitan districts. The city of Cincinnati, for instance, has a population of 450,000, but the metropolitan district of Cincinnati has a population of 750,000.

A large part of it is in Kentucky. The same conditions that now apply to higher-cost cities would, under the bill, apply to metropolitan districts of over 500,000 population. That is the only change made in the act. The higher-cost limit will therefore apply hereafter to any city under 500,000 which is a part of a metropolitan district having a population of more than 500,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be stated.

The amendments were, on page 1, line 5, after the word "metropolitan", to strike out "area" and to insert "district as defined by the Bureau of the Census", and on page 2, line 3, after the word "metropolitan", to strike out "area" and to insert "district as defined by the Bureau of the Census", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 15, subsection (5), of the United States Housing Act of 1937 is amended by adding after the word "city" the words "or metropolitan district as defined by the Bureau of the Census", so that as amended subsection (5) will read as follows:

"(5) No contract for any loan, annual contribution, or capital grant made pursuant to this act shall be entered into by the Authority with respect to any project hereafter initiated costing more than $4,000 per family dwelling unit or more than $1,000 per room (excluding land, demolition, and nondwelling facilities); except that in any city or metropolitan district as defined by the Bureau of the Census, the population of which exceeds 500,000, any such contract may be entered into with respect to a project hereafter initiated costing not to exceed $5,000 per family dwelling unit or not to exceed $1,250 per room (excluding land, demolition, and nondwelling facilities), if, in the opinion of the Authority, such higher family dwelling unit cost or cost per room is justified by reason of higher costs of labor and materials and other construction costs. With respect to housing projects on which construction is hereafter initiated, the Authority shall make loans, grants, and annual contributions only for such low-rent-housing projects as it finds are to be undertaken in such a manner (a) that such projects will not be of elaborate or expensive design or materials, and economy will be promoted both in construction and administration, and

(b) that the average construction cost of the dwelling units (excluding land, demolition, and nondwelling facilities) in any such project is not greater than the average construction cost of dwelling units currently produced by private enterprise, in the locality or metropolitan area concerned, under the legal building requirements applicable to the proposed site, and under labor standards not lower than those prescribed in this act."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

POSTAL TELEGRAPH-CABLE CO.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1487) for the relief of the Postal Telegraph-Cable Co., which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Postal Telegraph-Cable Co. of New York, N. Y., the sum of $2,598.86, in full satisfaction of its claim against the United States for reimbursement of expenses incurred in rebuilding and restoring a 30-wire crossing over the Delaware River between Raven Rock, N. J., and Lumberville, Pa., which was demolished and knocked into the Delaware River by a United States 046 Army observation plane, on February 19, 1937, while engaged in making a flight over the Delaware River: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with such claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with such claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of that bill?

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, this is a bill for the relief of the Postal Telegraph-Cable Co., as is indicated by its title. My understanding is that the bill is approved by the War Department as well as by the Committee on Claims. The bill provides for reimbursing the Postal Telegraph-Cable Co. for expenses incurred in the vicinity of Raven Rock, N. J., and Lumberville, Pa. The company's lines at that point were put out of order as the result of the crash of a United States Army pursuit or observation plane on February 19, 1937.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is it recommended by the War Department?

Mr. MEAD. It is approved by the Department.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

J. C. GRICE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 891) for the relief of J. C. Grice, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$241.38" and to insert "$201.15", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to J. C. Grice, of Whittier, N. C., the sum of $201.15, in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States for mileage allowance for travel performed by means of his personally owned automobile during the period May 27, 1936, to January 8, 1938, while supervising certain construction projects for the Department of the Interior on the Cherokee Reservation at Cherokee, N. C.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH W. PARSE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1688) for the relief of Joseph W. Parse, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert the following:

That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to settle and allow the claim of Joseph W. Parse for compensation for services rendered as United States Commissioner in the eastern district of Arkansas from December 1, 1933, to November 30, 1936, inclusive, notwithstanding the fact that accounts therefor were not submitted by the Commissioner within 1 year after the rendition of such services in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 1, 1933 (47 Stat. 1383).

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SHIPOWNERS & MERCHANTS TOWBOAT CO., LTD.

The bill (H. R. 2056) for the relief of the Shipowners & Merchants Towboat Co., Ltd., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SALE OF OLD CARSON CITY (NEV.) MINT SITE

The bill (S. 2050) to authorize a sale of the old Carson City (Nev.) Mint site and building notwithstanding the provisions of Joint Resolution No. 18 of February 23, 1865, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the old Carson City (Nev.) Mint site and building may be sold under the provisions of the act of August 26, 1935 (49 Stat. 800; U. S. C., title 40, sec. 345b), or the act of August 27, 1935 (49 Stat. 885; U. S. C., title 40, sec. 304a), notwithstanding Joint Resolution 18 of February 23, 1865 (13 Stat. 569), providing that said site shall be reserved from public sale and shall remain the property of the United States.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 5219) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, and for prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1939, and June 30, 1940, and and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, we will take up that measure later. I ask that it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over, under the rule.

ATTENDANCE OF MARINE BAND AT G. A. R. ENCAMPMENT

The bill (S. 1574) to authorize the attendance of the Marine Band at the National Encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic to be held at Pittsburgh, Pa., from August 27 to September 1, inclusive, 1939, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is authorized to permit the band of the United States Marine Corps to attend and give concerts at the National Encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic to be held at Pittsburgh, Pa., from August 27 to September 1, inclusive, 1939.

SEC. 2. For the purpose of defraying the expenses of such band in attending and giving concerts at such encampment, there is authorized to be appropriated the sum of $8,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to carry out the provisions of this act: Provided, That in addition to transportation and Pullman accommodations the leaders and members of the Marine Band be allowed not to exceed $5 per day each for additional living expenses while on the duty, and that the payment of such expenses shall be in addition to the pay and allowances to which they would be entitled while serving at their permanent station.

ATTENDANCE OF MARINE BAND AT UNITED CONFEDERATE VETERANS' 1939 REUNION

The bill (H. R. 3946) to authorize the attendance of the Marine Band at the United Confederate Veterans' 1939 Reunion at Trinidad, Colo., August 22, 23, 24, and 25, 1939, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SIMPLIFICATION OF ACCOUNTING

The bill (H. R. 4830) to amend the act approved April 27, 1937, entitled "An act to simplify accounting," was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES L. KEE

The bill (S. 821) for the relief of Charles L. Kee was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Charles L. Kee, of Portsmouth, Va., the sum of $9,000, in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States for damages arising out of the loss by officers of the United States Navy on June 26, 1920, at Hampton Roads, Va., of an aircraft-planted mine invented by said Charles L. Kee and constructed by him for demonstration.

ADMINISTRATION OF STATE UNEMPLOYMENT COMPENSATION LAWS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5482) to increase the authorization for appropriations for the administration of State unemployment compensation laws, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 301 of the Social Security Act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 301. For the purpose of assisting the States in the administration of their unemployment compensation laws there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, the sum of $4,000,000, for each fiscal year thereafter up to and including the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, the sum of $49,000,000, and for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, and for each fiscal year thereafter, the sum of $80,000,000, to be used as hereinafter provided."

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I have no objection to the proposed amendment of the Social Security Act, provided I may be permitted to make an observation in passing. The bill provides an authorization of $80,000,000 for the administration of State unemployment-compensation laws under title III of the Social Security Act. Heretofore for the present year the appropriation was $49,000,000. This measure proposes to increase the authorization to $80,000,000. The testimony before the committee is that only $62,000,000 is required for the current fiscal year, and that only $76,000,000 is required for the next fiscal year. Therefore I desire to call the attention of the Appropriations Committee to the fact when appropriations are subsequently sought under this authorization, that the authorization itself is $18,000,000 larger than necessary for the current year, and at least $4,000,000 larger than necessary for the subsequent year.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator permit the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], who seems to have reported the bill, to say a few words as to why the amount is increased?

Mr. CONNALLY. Let the Senator from Michigan continue.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, Chairman Altmeyer of the Social Security Board, is very sure that the expenditure for this fiscal year will not exceed $62,000,000. That is the period ending, as the Senator knows, on June 30 next. His estimate for the next fiscal year is $76,000,000. But he is not so sure of that figure, because he is not sure to what extent the coverage under title III may be extended in the course of the present session of Congress. Therefore, he seeks sufficient latitude in the authorization, inasmuch as it is a continuing authorization for years to come, to cover the contingencies to which I have referred.

I ascribe no purpose on the part of the Social Security Board to get an authorization greater than is consistent with an ultimate appropriate expenditure. The expenditure, I am sure, will not be brought to the $80,000,000 simply because we make the authorization. What I am attempting to do at the moment is to make it clear on the record that, although the authorization is $80,000,000, the expectation is not that we shall have an $80,000,000 appropriation this year, but only a $62,000,000 appropriation.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I very much hope that Mr. Altmeyer and the Board will not increase the amount up to the authorization.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I wish to add a further comment regarding this particular appropriation. This is the appropriation under which the Federal Government undertakes to return to the States, for administrative purposes, 10 percent of the pay-roll tax collections for unemployment insurance. In other words, the Federal Government retains 10 percent of the collections which belong entirely and exclusively to the States, and by way of compensation to the States sends to the States funds sufficient for the administration of the laws. Even though $80,000,000, the sum total of the authorization, be returned to the States for the administration of State unemployment insurance laws, still the Federal Government will have collected $10,000,000 from the States out of pay-roll taxes, put it in its general funds, and spent it for general purposes.

Based on Mr. Altmeyer's testimony before the committee, I think he entirely agrees that the Federal Government is not entitled to make a profit upon this particular transaction. My observation would be that he agreed with the suggestion that if there is any annual balance left in the particular fund which is collected from the States and then turned back to them again, it should not go to the advantage of the Federal Treasury for Federal expenditures, but should be pro rated back to the States.

I wish to make the further observation that the expense of administration which is covered by the appropriation represents for the present year about 12 percent of the entire pay-roll tax collections. Mr. Altmeyer points out that British experience indicates that a 9-percent cost is legitimate. It seems to me that a terrifically heavy percentage of the pay-roll tax collected for unemployment benefits is detoured into administrative costs.

With those observations, Mr. President, I am prepared to allow the bill to pass.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, it is probably unnecessary for me to say anything since the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] has expressed his willingness that the bill shall pass. I wish to say only that the bill is merely an authorization and is not an appropriation. The Senate will still be protected each year when it makes appropriations and prepares the appropriations to fit the cloth. It would be wholly impracticable for the Senate to have an authorization and change it from time to time to fit the appropriation. Frequently we pass bills in general terms providing that "appropriations are hereby authorized sufficient to carry out the purposes," and so forth. Then we refer the matter to the Appropriations Committee. The Senator from Michigan pointed out that the United States collects 10 percent of the pay-roll taxes. It ought to be understood why that is so. Under the Social Security Act all the pay rolls are taxed a certain percentage, but in order to compel the States to adopt systems of their own—and we might as well admit that that is what we are doing—we permit the taxpayer to reclaim, in the form of a credit, 90 percent of the pay-roll tax if he has paid it to the State. So, it is absolutely necessary to retain the taxing power to some extent in order to maintain uniformity of the system. Out of the 10 percent which the Federal Government receives are paid the expenses of the State set-up; and that is what the bill refers to.

The old authorization was only $49,000,000 annually. It was found that that was not sufficient. As stated by the Senator from Michigan, the current amount is $62,000,000. However, it is expected that next year the amount will probably rise to $76,000,000, on account of the increased coverage which it is proposed will be made under other legislation now pending in the House of Representatives. In other words, the Board will deal with more individuals, and consequently there will be some more expenses.

This matter was considered very thoroughly by the Finance Committee. Dr. Altmeyer appeared, and I think he convinced most of the committee that the Board is undertaking to cut the costs in the State administrative agencies as sharply as can safely be done. The Committee on Finance reported the bill unanimously, with the exception of the suggestions which the Senator from Michigan makes. I do not understand that his suggestions are objections but merely a caution or warning to the Appropriations Committee that because we authorize $80,000,000 we do not mean to appropriate $80,000,000 unless the $80,000,000 may be necessary. Certainly such an implication necessarily follows. That is what the Appropriations Committee is for. We have complete confidence and trust in the Appropriations Committee and its action when that action suits our wishes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading and passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 5219) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, and for prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1939, and June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. Let the bill be passed over for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over. That completes the call of the calendar.

ONE HUNDRED AND NINETY-SIXTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE BIRTH OF THOMAS JEFFERSON

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, on this the one hundred and ninety-sixth anniversary of the birth of Thomas Jefferson, it is appropriate that we pause to pay tribute to his memory; for in paying tribute to his memory we rededicate ourselves to those elemental principles of Americanism to which we all subscribe.

No one man in all the stirring story of our Nation has so completely personified the ideas and ideals we call Americanism as did Jefferson.

He more than any other one man, gave us our chart of freedom.

He condensed into the preamble of the Declaration of Independence the very soul and essence of Americanism. Our civic blessings rest on that foundation.

When the constitutional fathers, in wisely laying the foundations of the state, neglected to write into the fundamental law the protection of the people against the abuse of power, he declared that "a bill of rights is what any people is entitled to and what no just government can refuse or rest on inference."

He organized the fight that secured the incorporation into the Constitution of the first 10 amendments which guaranteed the promise of the preamble of the Declaration.

When, early in our history, others sought by tyrannic acts to nullify the Bill of Rights by making it a crime for men to write or speak their honest thought, he and his followers faced and fought the bitter battle which definitively made us a democracy.

In his Life of Hamilton, Henry Cabot Lodge declares that the election of Jefferson in the peaceful revolution of 1800 permanently fixed the status of our institutions as those not only of a republic, but of a democratic republic.

More than any other one man, I think, the Philosopher of Monticello envisioned a nation of free men—free to hold opinions and to express them; free to protest publicly against governmental wrongs—free to worship God according to the dictates of the conscience—a nation without the hatreds of caste or class, a nation unified in the realization of our common aspirations as free men.

He had the courage to break new trails. He had the vision to dream new dreams and the genius to translate them into reality.

He was iconoclast enough in his generation to proclaim the then revolutionary theory that governments exist for the service of the people and not that the people exist as inanimate cogs in the machinery of the State.

Let me quote briefly from Claude Bowers' great book, Jefferson and Hamilton, in which he said:

> Such was Thomas Jefferson, who took upon himself the organization of the forces of democracy when its enemies were in the saddle, booted and spurred, and with a well-disciplined and powerful army at their back. None but an extraordinary character could have dared hope for victory, and he was that, and more. Democrat and aristocrat, and sometimes autocrat; philosopher and politician; sentimentalist and utilitarian; artist, naturalist, and scientist; thinker, dreamer and doer; inventor and scholar; writer and statesman, he enthralled his followers and fascinated while infuriating his foes.

He smiled at the timidity of those who thought that democracy would endanger property. He knew, what they did not suspect, that vested wrongs can endanger liberty; and he had the foresight to see what they could not comprehend—that when liberty is gone the rights of property are at the mercy of the tyrant.

So he conceived the statesman's task to be so to adjust the proper claims of men and money as to prevent the conflicts that shake the foundations of civilized society.

We find ourselves today in the midst of a revolution of Fascist and communistic forces, united in their determination to exterminate democracy and to wipe out liberal governments everywhere.

The challenge to the governmental system for which Jefferson fought and wrought does not come to us from across the sea in the dulcet tones of the drawing room. That challenge is based upon the charge that our institutions are incapable of serving and promoting the welfare of mankind.

That line of attack cannot be answered by bullets and bayonets on the battlefield, for force can permanently settle no principle. It can be answered, and it must be answered here, by proving here the capacity of our institutions to meet the civic and economic needs of a free people.

We Americans may differ as to policies, but on elemental principles we must stand united. We may safely fight over the passing problems of our politics, but in these days, when everything we stand for at home and throughout the world is under attack, the safety of the state demands, as never before, that we present a solid front on the essential principles of Jefferson.

Within the next few years we shall know whether the dying words of John Adams, "Thomas Jefferson still lives," are true.

EMPLOYEES OF TEMPORARY NATIONAL ECONOMIC COMMITTEE

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, in view of the fact that in a very short time the Senate will have under consideration House bill 5219, the second deficiency appropriation bill, which carries an appropriation of $600,000 for the Temporary National Economic Committee, I ask unanimous consent to have placed in the RECORD a list of the employees of the Temporary National Economic Committee, showing the place of their residence and their salaries, so that the Senate may be advised in considering the item in the bill referred to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ELLENDER in the chair). Is there objection?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, is that a list of employees who are serving on the Temporary National Economic Committee?

Mr. TOWNSEND. It is a list of those serving the Senate and House Members of the committee and the committee itself. The list is complete.

Mr. AUSTIN. I do not desire to object, but I wish to make it clear what it is. The list, as I understand, covers employees on the pay roll of the Temporary National Economic Committee?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. Very well; I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the list will be printed in the RECORD.

The list referred to is as follows:

AMENDMENT OF TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY ACT

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I move, as I notified the Senate earlier in the day I would do, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of calendar 197, the bill (S. 1796) to amend the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I shall not object, but I wish to make an observation. Several days ago I intended to make a few remarks in regard to the rape of Czechoslovakia, particularly in view of the declarations made by representatives of the Nazi Government here in Washington; but out of deference to my leader here, and because important matters were under consideration, I deferred submitting those remarks. I do not desire to interfere with the consideration of the T. V. A. bill, but I should like to submit those remarks now or after the motion of the Senator from Kentucky shall have been agreed to.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, would the Senator just as lief submit them on another bill which will come up in a very few minutes?

Mr. KING. I doubt whether it will come up in a very few minutes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, I have no objection to the Senator submitting his remarks now.

Mr. KING. I may submit them, of course, after the Senator's motion shall have been agreed to, but I did not want my friend from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] to feel that I was interfering with his bill.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah certainly can make his remarks on the motion if he perfers, but would it not be better to let the motion be adopted, and then let the Senator speak?

Mr. KING. I have no objection to that course, but I did not want the Senator from Nebraska to feel, after the motion had been carried, that I was then interfering by interjecting extraneous matter.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I have moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1796.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, may I make an inquiry of the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. There is pending on the table the second deficiency appropriation bill, House bill 5219. That bill should be disposed of at the earliest practicable moment, because various departments are running out of money. I was wondering if the Senator would make a place today for that bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say to the Senator that it is my purpose to arrange that the Senator from Colorado shall be recognized, immediately upon the conclusion of the consideration of the T. V. A. bill, to move to proceed to the consideration of the second deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. ADAMS. Does the Senator feel that when he has explained the T. V. A. bill there will be no particular controversy over it?

Mr. BARKLEY. I would not go that far. In fact, it is the bill of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] and not mine. It is important, however, that it be considered and passed, for reasons which will be explained later.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky to proceed to the consideration of a bill, the title of which will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (S. 1796) to amend the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1796) to amend the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, before the Senator from Utah takes the floor, I wish to make a brief statement regarding the bill now pending.

The bill was introduced by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], who is more familiar with it than am I, and with the details of what has happened that makes its passage necessary.

We are all familiar with the negotiations that were carried on between the Tennessee Valley Authority and the Commonwealth & Southern Co., which owns certain utility properties in the Tennessee Valley, for the purpose of bringing about the purchase of those properties by the Tennessee Valley Authority. After very considerable and deliberate negotiations, the Government through the T. V. A. and the Commonwealth & Southern Co., arrived at an understanding and a price which, as I recall, is in the neighborhood of $78,000,000. The price agreed upon, as I understand, is satisfactory to the T. V. A. and to the private corporation that owns the property to be purchased.

This bill proposes to consolidate section 15 and 15 (a) of the existing Tennessee Valley Authority Act so as to make it perfectly clear that, in addition to the right and authority to construct transmission lines and all sorts of other public utilities such as those that are contemplated by this purchase, the Tennessee Valley Authority may also purchase them. There has been some doubt expressed as to the authority of the T. V. A. under existing law to purchase these properties. They could undoubtedly construct similar properties; nobody disputes that suggestion; but it seems to me it is the interest not only of the Government and the Tennessee Valley Authority, but also of the private property in the nature of public utilities existing in the Tennessee Valley, that, instead of encouraging construction of competing plants in localities where existing plants are adequate, the Congress ought to encourage the policy of permitting the T. V. A. to purchase existing properties wherever it can be done and wherever wisdom dictates such a policy. All the bill does is simply to make it clear that the Tennessee Valley Authority may purchase as well as construct such public-utility agencies.

It is necessary that this bill be passed in order that the contract agreement which has been entered into by the Tennessee Valley Authority and the Commonwealth & Southern Co. may be consummated. I myself do not anticipate that anyone can object to the confirmation of that agreement, no matter how violently he may be opposed to the Tennessee Valley as an original proposition, and no matter how earnestly he may feel that the Tennessee Valley ought not to compete with private utility plants already in existence. This bill, if enacted, will obviate that by making it possible, beyond any peradventure of doubt, for the Tennessee Valley Authority to engage in the purchase of such utilities as well as in their construction.

ANNEXATION BY GERMANY OF CZECHOSLOVAKIA

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a short time after Mr. Hitler had sent his military forces into Czechoslovakia and subjected it and its inhabitants to Nazi rule I had intended to submit a few remarks indicating the wholly unjustifiable if not wicked assault against a free and independent people. However, I did not find an opportune occasion to do so. Not long ago Mr. Hitler attempted to justify his aggressive policy in Czechoslovakia and made statements which were not only incorrect but absolutely untrue.

In view of his statement and the statements given to the press a short time ago by a representative of the Nazi regime here in Washington, I feel constrained to present for the consideration of the Senate some historical facts concerning Czechoslovakia and some matters leading up to the rape of an independent Republic by the Nazi Government.

Mr. President, in touching upon the Czechoslovakian tragedy I am not transgressing any proprieties, nor am I dealing with matters which are not of concern to thoughtful Americans.

If there is still anywhere a faint belief in the brotherhood of man, we cannot be any more indifferent to the fate of millions of human beings as the result of evil acts of men than we can be to the sufferings of victims of an earthquake. But, over and above that, there is another fundamental consideration which so far seems to have been lost sight of.

The society of nations as we used to know it—and as we still know it at least theoretically—is supposed to be an association of civilized nations possessing certain common standards of justice, culture, and morals; indeed, for a period it was considered to be a society limited in membership to Christian nations. In any event, even yet it is considered to be an elementary principle of international law that when a newly arisen state is seeking admission into this society—which is accorded by what is known as recognition—it must satisfy the other states that it meets certain minimum requirements, such as an orderly system of justice and respect for certain fundamental rights. Barbarous and semibarbarous states are not recognized, even though in the past there have been exceptions dictated by considerations of expediency. This may be termed hornbook international law.

To this principle there would seem to be a logical corollary which as yet has never been stated with sufficient emphasis.

If a state through its government has reverted to uncivilized practices, if we are dealing with what is a reversion to tribal practices, it seems obvious that other states are clearly justified in at least protesting, and even dissociating themselves from a country which denies all individual rights, does not respect the property rights of whole masses of citizens, practices torture in the form of concentration camps, and is guilty of blackmail on a mass scale.

The theory that a country's affairs are its own is true within large limits, but there are limits; and these limits have been practically reached when we are dealing with what Mr. Taylor at Evian has called "dumping of human beings upon other countries."

It may not be possible to do more than protest or recall ambassadors; but a word is also a deed, and I am unwilling to be silent, so that silence may not be construed as tacit acquiescence or moral callousness.

We all know what is going on in Germany and the martyrdom that is being inflicted not only upon the Jews but upon all decent Germans who deplore the practices of the present regimes. This area of barbarism is now extended into territory which until the other day was governed in an enlightened way.

Already it has been reported that some 10,000 political "unreliables" have been seized in Czechoslovakia by the Nazi Gestapo, and in all probability are destined for the concentration camps, with the appalling brutalities there practiced. These so-called unreliables include men of character and learning and culture, men known in all parts of Europe and in many parts of the United States because of their scholastic attainments and their liberal views and the great contribution which they have made to science and to art and to literature and to the policies of good government. I may say that many Germans living peaceably in Czechoslovakia and supporting the Czechoslovakian government, now that that government has been destroyed, are fleeing from Czechoslovakia and are not taking refuge in Germany. Not only have Czechs been seized and the Jews faced with all the torture to which the world is becoming accustomed but non-Nazi Germans are also faced with the same fate. Barbarism is spreading; the area of civilization is contracting; and this spread of the plague can leave none of us indifferent. We cannot imitate Pilate and simply wash our hands.

The British and the French, too, are now appealing to American public sentiment with the claims that they are democracies, and entitled at least to our moral support. That was the burden of Mr. Anthony Eden's speech some time ago in New York. Just how democratic these countries have always been would be an interesting subject of discussion, but time forbids. Form is not all, and the spirit counts for much more. However, just what was democratic in the procedure at Munich? Four men met, without even the consent of the parliaments of the two who must deal with parliaments, and surrendered a sturdy democracy without even giving that democracy a hearing. When the Czech Minister at Munich sought to discuss the decision delivered to him, he was curtly told that no discussion would be permitted, and that the decision was made. By whom? By Messrs. Hitler and Mussolini, who well knew in advance that the British and French were ready to surrender something that was not theirs, or were unwilling to protect Czechoslovakia against the wicked plan of the Nazi regime.

This is an interesting question, political and ethical: Even if we assume that France and Great Britain were not ready to fight, just what right, in order to protect their claimed democracy, did they have to throw to the wolves another democracy? That is a question Mr. Eden did not answer, and that is a question which may plague the British for centuries to come.

It will not entirely meet the question to say that the democracies were unprepared to fight. The French general staff said the Army was ready, and Germany could be defeated, even though the struggle would be severe. That is now admitted. But if the democracies were not ready, why were they not ready? That, again, is simply another illustration of a lack of foresight and statesmanship.

England is today governed by a Prime Minister, claimed by some to be parochial in his views, though we must assume, as we should, that he is sincere. Mr. Chamberlain, on the eve of Munich, in a broadcast said that it is a dreadful thing that England "must build trenches and prepare gas masks because of a quarrel between a people in a far-away country of which we know nothing." For a statesman, leading an empire over which the sun never sets, that is an exhibition of parochialism which is difficult to understand. This is not a quarrel somewhere in Africa, but in the center of Europe; and it was not an ordinary boundary dispute, but a question of German expansion and German hegemony, which touches Great Britain very closely, and concerns the whole world. Mr. Lloyd George indulged in a gibe at Mr. Chamberlain, after the humiliating defeat of Great Britain and France, with the statement that he was "a good mayor of Birmingham in a lean year." I can assure Mr. Chamberlain that we in America did not consider Czechoslovakia an unknown country, even though we are much farther from it than he is; and I think the remark of Lloyd George was unjust, because Mr. Chamberlain is now exhibiting the high and sturdy qualities that find expression to a great degree in the Anglo-Saxon race, particularly those who inhabit the little island of England.

Were I a Britisher, or a Frenchman, I should be very much concerned about the loss of faith of the rest of the world in their governments. May there not be a feeling that they cannot be trusted?

As a result of Munich, Czechoslovakia was deprived of Sudetenland, which never was a part of Germany. Justification for this was sought in the plea that the area is ethnically Germany, and the principle of self-determination was invoked. The territory was not wholly German, and whole Czech villages were seized; and it is well known that hundreds of thousands of Germans did not desire to live under the "blessings" of the Hitler regime. Sudetenland was occupied, and then, as we all know, the military forces of Hitler marched forward and took possession of Bohemia and Moravia and other territory within the boundaries of the Czechoslovak Republic. Only the other day the newspapers carried a report of a number of Sudeten refugees of German nationality proceeding to Canada to found there a whole village under the leadership of a former German member of the Czech Parliament, Mr. Jacksch. In other words, when Germany seized Czechoslovakia, individuals of the German race living in Czechoslovakia were unwilling to remain there under the rule and tyranny of Hitler; and they fled from a country which is now under the rule of Germany.

But if it was a farce to invoke the principle of self-determination at Munich, the German fuehrer has now abandoned even that pretext; and in destroying Czechoslovakia in its independent form following Munich, he has openly seized a whole nationality and is quickly proceeding to enslave it. It is a quest for territorial expansion unashamed and brazen in the extreme. We know that this is not the end, and that other small states are on the schedule, and will succumb if the alleged democracies continue to connive, or tacitly acquiesce, in the methods of this twentieth century robber baron. The Manchester Guardian the other day reported that the German mobilization had originally been ordered for a move on the west and was deferred only by the Czech situation. All armored divisions, said the political correspondent of this great paper, had been mobilized and the rest of the Army placed on a war footing, prepared for a march on a 24-hour call. First targets, presumably, were to be Switzerland and Holland. Indeed, other countries may tremble, and when Lord Halifax said a few days ago that "London has washed her hands of Czechoslovakia," he hardly could realize that sooner or later the tiger would strike nearer home.

Senators will note that Switzerland, fearing the ambitions of Hitler's government, has removed to another country some of its gold reserves and is mobilizing its troops in order to prepare against the eventuality of an invasion by the Hitler regime. Even Holland, that peaceful state, has taken cognizance of the threats of war and aggression by the Nazi government and has felt constrained to increase its military force and to increase the burdens of taxation in order to meet any assault from the Nazi regime.

It is unfortunate that both London and Paris may be charged as being accessories both before and after the fact in one of the crimes of the century, the destruction of a great democracy. There is enough evidence to show that what was contemplated must have been known to both the Paris and London governments, and when now Lord Halifax says that what occurred within the last few days was not contemplated at Munich he is either disingenuous or is giving an exhibition of appalling inertness, for what has happened in the last few days is a logical development of Munich. Once the Bohemian mountains fell into the hands of Hitler there was nothing to stop his seizure of the remnants of the Czechoslovakian Republic.

Certain French circles now try to soothe their conscience with claiming that the Czechs should have fought, even if alone. I can say with much assurance that the Czechs would have fought, whatever the cost, had they had only Germany to face. But they would have been attacked on their flank by the Poles and the Magyars. To fight under those circumstances would have been criminal folly, not heroism.

But after Munich, in connection with Munich, they were assured that their truncated state would be guaranteed. Whatever the legal sophistries now indulged in by the British and French, morally those countries were obligated to protect a country which was the victim of their inertness or somnambulistic condition or lack of preparation. But now they are confessing, however, that they relied too much upon the assurances of Mussolini and Hitler, and were deceived by the promises which those men made to the French and English Governments. The Czechs, following the Munich appeasement, could not wage a war, especially when Hitler threatened the last President that, unless he yielded immediately, Prague would be bombed.

Even so, the Czech national spirit is not crushed. The Foreign Observer reports that when the Czechs realized what was coming "the people were fighting mad." Terrorism was their only means of striking back. But Hitler was prepared for that, too. Identical reports out of Berlin, Munich, Prague, and London were to the effect that Germany had mobilized 14 divisions of 200,000 men, ready to move from Dresden, Leipzig, and Vienna into Bratislava and Brunn, if the German minorities were "threatened."

It is interesting to note that after seizing this territory—Czechoslovakia—Memel was seized, and threats were made against Poland and Rumania and perhaps other countries.

An apparently small but the most cheering item in the reports was the one to the effect that the crowds in the streets of Prague booed and hissed the German troops. That means that the Czech nation may be subject for the time being to alien rule, but its spirit lives, and will renew the fight for liberty, as it fought for 300 years against Hapsburg rule. But, by the same token, that means that Mr. Chamberlain's policy of appeasement has failed, that there will be continued unrest, and that central Europe will not be on the road to tranquillity until the Czechs are again masters in their own house, and Hitler and Mussolini are willing to adopt nonaggressive policies.

Because of the important part which was played during the World War by Czechoslovakia, we have been deeply interested in the progress and development of that country. It may be interesting to inquire briefly as to the origin and history and development of the inhabitants of Czechoslovakia, particularly of Bohemia and Moravia.

The Czechs and Slovaks originated in pre-Christian times from the white stock which inhabited the territory north of the Carpathians. They drifted from Galatia into what is now Bohemia, Moravia, Silesia, and Slovakia. There they increased in numbers and made important progress, industrially and culturally. They were peaceably inclined and were not antagonized by the Slav race, of which they were a part, in Russia or other parts of Europe. The territory which they inhabited was protected by mountains and contained fertile lands and important forests and timber resources.

I might add that the lands occupied by these Slavs, particularly Bohemia, have natural boundaries of hills and rivers, and, except in Silesia, which was dismembered in the eighteenth century, these boundaries remained inviolate until this ruthless and indefensible assault by the Nazi regime. From the sixth century these regions were coveted by the Germans because of their resources. They were overcome for a brief period by Charlemagne, but Bohemia and Moravia were never conquered, and while during the height of the Holy Roman Empire they were associated with the Germans, they always had their own kings and were essentially independent.

Slovakia, however, was overcome during the ninth and nineteenth centuries by the Magyars. In 1620, and during the following Thirty Years' War, Bohemia and Moravia, largely because of religious controversies, were ravished, and many Protestants exiled and their property given to Germans and other mercenaries.

However, the spirit of the people was not conquered, and they went forward with vigor and zeal in the development of their country. Success attended their efforts, and they builded a strong, progressive, and enlightened commonwealth.

From the end of the Thirty Years' War to 1918 the Czechs were under Austrian domination, but during that period their progress was uninterrupted, and they developed a great nation strong industrially, financially, and culturally. We do not forget that they gave to the world the great religious reformers, Huss and Cominsky, and by their example and teachings they aided other peoples in contiguous territories in emancipating themselves from primitive and parochial customs, policies, and philosophies. So progressive were they and so thoroughly imbued were they with the principles of democracy and liberty that, though under the Crown of Austria, they secured a reasonable degree of freedom and opportunity for self-expression and cultural, political, and spiritual development.

The Slovaks, however, by reason of the repressive rule of the Magyars, were denied opportunities for development which their genius and qualities merited.

When the World War was imminent, the Czechs exerted their influence to prevent it and were opposed to Austria embarking upon the conflict which soon enveloped most of the world. However, under the Austrian rule they were compelled to accept the decision of the Austro-Hungarian Government, although their sympathies were with the Allies. Because of their attitude toward the conflict, they were sent into the front lines to meet the first shock of opposing military forces. It will be remembered, however, that many of the Czechs formed military units and fought with the allied forces. At one time there were more than 80,000 Czechs in military units in Russia, and 30,000 in Italy, and several thousand in France, and all of these units fought courageously with the allied armies. Their services, their bravery, their ability, and their military prowess were recognized not only by the allied leaders and the allied forces but by the Central Powers, whom they were opposing.

In Russia the Czech troops held back the Germans and Bolsheviks at a critical period in the conflict and prevented the Germans from reaching the Russian treasure and important military supplies. Their conduct in opposing the Central Powers brought upon their heads the enmity of the military authorities of Germany, and doubtless inspires to this day the enmity of the Nazi regime.

Recognizing the services rendered the Allies by the Czechs and Slovaks when the war was over, the Allies acknowledged their aspirations for freedom and upon the conclusion of the war restored the old Czech kingdom to its historic boundaries, adding to it Slovakia and Ruthenia.

Senators will not forget that a large unit of the Czech Army, which had been fighting with the Allies, traversed Russia and Siberia and crossed the Pacific and the United States, pausing at Washington, where an enthusiastic reception was accorded them, and then sailed for their native land, where demonstrations of affection greeted them upon their arrival.

The new Republic of Czechoslovakia entered upon its independent course, and during the intervening years reached a high stage of prosperity and progress. It was truly a democratic government, and gave to its people liberty and the fullest opportunity for moral, spiritual, and economic development. The new Czechoslovak state possessed a population of approximately 15,000,000 people, more than one-half of whom were Czechs and the rest mainly Slovaks. The Czech portion of the state had a higly developed educational system, as well as other cultural establishments. The Slovak and Ruthenian portions, which had not enjoyed as many of the privileges and opportunities as the Czechs while they were under the Magyar rule, lacked schools and some of the establishments essential to industrial and cultural development.

Moreover, the Slovak and Ruthenian parts lacked communications and were somewhat belated in their development of social organizations.

Notwithstanding all the handicaps to which the new state was subjected, it developed new industries, balanced its budget, and maintained a surplus, and made such progress in every avenue of civilization as to have aroused the envy of some of its neighbors. Since the organization of the new state it has collaborated openly and faithfully with the League of Nations and its former sponsors and allies—France and Great Britain. It was for a time the head of the so-called "Little Entente," and its institutions were the most democratic of any country in Europe. Slovakia and Ruthenia were developed in every possible way and were supplied with hundreds of new schools, including high schools and a university. It is not inaccurate to state that Czechoslovakia was just to its minorities, and it sought to live, and did live, peacefully with all its neighbors. It had the misfortune to be a democratic nation inspired by high ideals and possessed of enterprising men and women who, by their genius and labor, brought their country to a high degree of prosperity and civilization. It was their misfortune, it seems, to have developed a great democratic state, which did not accept the ideology of communism or nazi-ism. Czechoslovakia was a bright island in central Europe—industrially, culturally, and politically. It possessed deposits of coal and other natural resources. These, apparently, were coveted by Germany.

In order to weaken the state and make it more easy prey to the Machiavellian purposes of the Nazi government, mischievous and hostile propaganda from the outside was disseminated. Persistent efforts were made to sow seeds of discord, suspicion, and unrest. In various parts of Czechoslovakia paid agents secretly disseminated baseless and fabricated stories, and fomented disorder—all aimed at the destruction of the government. These efforts were directed toward creating a situation that would be an excuse for intervention by the Nazi government.

We are familiar with the course pursued by the Nazi regime, which culminated in the destruction of the Austrian Government and its absorption by the Hitler regime. Much the same policy that weakened Austria and aided in its absorption by Germany was pursued in Czechoslovakia. The strategy seems to have been, and to be, to weaken by propaganda and other sinister and vicious means governments with which Germany and surrounding nations and governments were at peace.

Nazi-ism is an enemy of justice, liberty, and civilization. It is a cruel, devouring monster. From every land, where the voice of freedom may be heard, nazi-ism should be denounced. The forces of democracy everywhere should be united in preserving liberty against a savage and barbarous attack of a cruel and malignant foe.

Democratic nations were too inert, too complacent, to comprehend the strategy of Hitler, but unerringly he planned and plotted, and then audaciously struck down the victim.

Munich, instead of bringing appeasement, provided for the death of Czechoslovakia. The first demands at Munich constituted a sacrifice of Czechoslovak territory, and immediately thereafter, Germany, Poland, and Hungary contended for a part of mutilated Czechoslovakia. Czechoslovakia was robbed of its principal natural resources by the Munich agreement, and within the territory which was seized by the first invasion were more than 800,000 of the Czech population, who were given to the devouring wolves. This without a single protest from any of the great powers of Europe or members of the League of Nations.

There followed almost ruthless domination of the Czechoslovak Government and all of its actions, with gradually increasing and wholly unjustified demands; though the Government yielded under compulsion and threats, the process eventually proved too slow, and now the political independence of Czechoslovakia has been destroyed.

But this extinguishment, as the Department of State has aptly put it, is only temporary. A nationality as determined as the Czechs may be destroyed politically for the time being, but it cannot be ruined as a cultural entity, as the Austrian experience has amply proved. Signs are already apparent that the Czechs will renew their struggle to repair liberty and independence. It is this realization of an inevitable renewal of the struggle that is causing official and unofficial defenders of nazi-ism to attempt to place the whole situation in a false light before the American public. One of the most astonishing of such attempts was a recent interview accorded to newspapers by the chief of the German diplomatic mission in the United States, Dr. Hans Thomsen, Chargé d'Affaires of Germany in Washington. The remarks of this gentleman should not go unnoticed on the Senate floor.

Dr. Thomsen denied that the Czech coup was a seizure and claimed that it was a strictly legal proceeding "formally requested of the fuehrer by the lawful President and Premier of the Government in Prague, when the former voluntarily visited Berlin on March 14."

First of all let me say that even if this assertion happened to be correct the proceeding still would be illegal, because no president and no premier can cede his country's territory to another country as if it were a piece of their own real estate. Under the Czechoslovak Constitution, territory could not be ceded without the consent of three-fifths of the national assembly, of the Chamber of Deputies and the Senate sitting in joint session. No such session was ever held, and the proceeding is without the slightest taint of legality.

The fact remains, however, that the signatures of the President, an estimable gentleman, and of the Minister of Foreign Affairs, not the Prime Minister, were extorted by threats of force. It is now established that the German troops were on the march while the President was on his way to Berlin. When in Berlin he was informed that an immediate order to bomb Prague would be given if he did not sign at once. No sophistries of official or unofficial propagandists will disguise the fact that threat of force is force, and abandoned as Czechoslovakia was and utterly made defenseless as a result of the Munich pact, Dr. Hacha had no choice.

When Dr. Thomsen speaks of Prague as a Germanic city he is giving an exhibition of the lengths to which an undoubtedly educated and cultural gentleman feels constrained to go in the services of a government which seems to have little regard either for truth or morals. The legendary Czech Queen Libuse, in what may be called a mythological period of Czech history, sings of this city as the Czech capital and of its future greatness. Prague has always been looked upon by all Slavdom as its capital. The first general Slav congress in 1848, for that reason, was held in the city of Prague. Slav students always flocked to the city of Prague and its Czech university, to obtain education and drink there at the fountain of the Slav spirit. It is for this reason that following the seizure of Prague by Nazi troops, students in Belgrade and Sofia gave vent to their indignation by demonstrations. Every stone and monument and square in that beautiful city speaks of a great history and one which the Czechs and Slavs generally will never forget. It is the city of real culture, a Slav culture, and not a city of the "culture" of concentration camps and the burning of books.

It is not true that Prague is "the seat of the oldest of German universities." This university was founded by Charles IV, always much more proud of his status as King of Bohemia than of his dignity as Emperor, and of whom the great Czech historian, Josef Pekar, says that "educated at the court of France and having lived a long time in Italy, he brought to us (the Czechs) a higher Romanic culture, which soon made of Bohemia the foremost seat of science in the Empire and altogether of higher spiritual endeavor." And in another place Pekar declares, speaking of Charles IV: "What a number of his predecessors sought without success, he obtained single-handed: As early as 1344 he obtained from Pope Clement IV the establishment of the archbishopric of Prague—the first archbishop was the learned Arnost of Pardubic—and the founding of a university after 4 years, the first in the Empire." It is to be noted, further, that Charles IV received his crown as Emperor of the Holy Roman Empire later, in 1355. Indeed, the first care of this great man was definitely to clarify the position of the Bohemian crown legally, by the famous Golden Bull, which has always been the foundation of Czech legal claims to independence.

Under the Golden Bull, the Bohemian crown became hereditary, but upon the extinction of the dynasty the Czechs had the right to select a new king. The Emperor never had the right to designate the Czech monarch. The Golden Bull, too, confirmed Czech sovereignty in that no Czech subject had a right to appeal to non-Czech tribunals, nor to the court of the Emperor (privilegium de non appelando).

Returning to the university, it is true that the Germans for a period sought to dominate it, but this was ended as early as 1409, when King Wenceslas IV, as a result of the leadership of Czechs by John Hus, accorded, in the councils of the university, three votes to the Czechs and one to the Germans, on the ground that the Czechs are in their own home. Also university teaching in those days was in Latin.

Following this reform, and the victory of Czech nationalism, German masters and students left Prague and founded the University of Leipzig. The first rector of a university so clearly Czech became the reformer John Hus.

So much for the history of a Nazi diplomatic representative.

One further comment concerning the seizure of Czechoslovakia by Hitler's armed forces: The first act of the German Army in Prague was to seize the Czechoslovak gold-reserve fund. No wonder a prominent weekly, the New Republic, entitled its editorial on this episode "Bank Robbery in Prague." Certainly no claim could be made to this fund by Germany; and even under the present arrangement for autonomy, this fund still belonged to the Czechs and Slovaks, particularly the Czechs, by whose money other parts of the Republic were supported. To speak of this seizure as "a pledge of security and economic freedom" is indeed a cool reply, as the reporter remarked. But, then, the whole expedition is a sample of coolness which, we had thought, died out with the extinction of medieval robber barons.

I have said enough for the purposes of the record. The subject is almost inexhaustible and would require volumes. One can only register a protest and note the outstanding factors.

There is no use blinking the fact that the future holds for the Czechs, and the Slovaks, too, days of terror, oppression, and gloom. However, a nation which has survived for centuries and would not be wiped out, even in less enlightened days, will not now succumb. The Czechs will keep revived their national spirit and they will abide their opportunity and strike again, perhaps disillusioned and with less faith in protestations of alleged friends, but all the stronger because of the martyrdom they will be forced to undergo.

The saddest mistake of the Hapsburgs was their endeavor to wipe out Czech autonomy and Czech national spirit, indeed, to destroy them as a cultural entity. Mr. Hitler might have profited by this example. He has not done so, and he or his successors will pay the price. Under the mercy of Providence the Czech nation will not disappear from the roster of civilized peoples.

Masaryk concludes his Making of the State with this observation:

> In our democratic Republic freedom of conscience and toleration must not merely be codified but realized in every domain of public life. Palacky's philosophical interpretation of our history esteems the Bohemian brotherhood as its consummation. The father of our nation and our historical past alike enjoin upon us pure Christianity, the teaching of Jesus and His law of life. Democracy is the political form of the humane ideal.

There spoke a civilized personality. The ideal so marked will not disappear from this earth, and the Czechs again find themselves in the vanguard of the struggle for its realization.

I cannot conclude without a further observation concerning that great statesman, Dr. Masaryk, and his mission to the United States after our Government had entered the war. I had the honor of meeting him upon several occasions when he was here in Washington, and of conferring with him and others concerning the World War and the part which was being played by the inhabitants of the territory known as Czechoslovakia. The question was also discussed as to the steps necessary to reestablish an independent Czechoslovakian state.

I avail myself of this opportunity to pay tribute to Dr. Masaryk—one of the greatest men of his day and generation. He was a great historian, a great statesman, and a great patriot. Future generations will acclaim him as one of the immortal figures of his day and generation.

Mr. President, I believed that following the World War there would arise an independent state within the limits of Bohemia and Moravia with boundaries substantially those that mark the Czechoslovakian state.

I offered a resolution in the Senate on the 31st day of May 1918, which I ask may be inserted in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The resolution is as follows:

> Whereas Bohemia for centuries has struggled for independence and the realization of her nationalistic ideals and aspirations, and the people of said country, by their inherent greatness, moral worth, industrial progress, and intellectual capacity and achievements, are entitled to self-government and all the rights and prerogatives that belong to a free people and to an independent sovereign state; and
> Whereas in this dark hour the people of said country are striving to realize their nationalistic aspirations and to establish a government of and by and for the people of said country and to emancipate themselves from the absolutism and oppression of the Austrian and German Empires: Therefore be it
> Resolved, That the nationalistic aspirations of the Bohemian people for freedom and self-government have the earnest sympathy of the United States, and that this Nation will welcome the Bohemian people and the sovereign, independent state which they may organize into the community and fellowship of free and liberty-loving people.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I am exceedingly regretful that I was not in the Chamber during the entire interesting address of my distinguished friend and colleague from Utah [Mr. KING].

FOREIGN POLICY OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for the insertion in the RECORD of a few brief comments?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Certainly.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I am glad at last to find a vocal ex-Secretary of State with whom I can agree respecting contemporary foreign policy. Mr. Bainbridge Colby, brilliant Secretary of State in the administration of Woodrow Wilson, spoke last evening in New York City before the jubilee dinner of the Sons of the American Revolution, and the sentiments expressed by him are so completely my own in many aspects that I am asking that an excerpt from his address as reported in the New York Times be printed in the body of the RECORD in connection with these brief remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Michigan? The Chair hears none, and the matter referred may be printed in the RECORD.

The excerpt is as follows:

[From New York Times of April 13, 1939]

A call for sobriety in the national leadership in the tense state of foreign affairs, with deference by the President to the judgment of the people and of Congress, "even if it fails to accord with his plans or prepossessions," was made last night by Bainbridge Colby, Secretary of State in the administration of Woodrow Wilson, speaking at the golden anniversary dinner of the Sons of the American Revolution at the Hotel Plaza.

The dinner was given by the Empire State Society of the S. A. R. to the national organization to commemorate the founding of the latter in New York in April 1889, and marked also the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of George Washington's oath of office as first President of the United States.

Mr. Colby made his plea in the name of "the thoughtful and intelligent opinion of Americans," which still, he held, definitely is opposed to United States participation in any war, except to defend unmistakable national interests and American democratic institutions.

"Things have been said and done in Washington within recent weeks in connection with the various forms in which the threat of war has been projected upon public attention which all good men deplore," he said. "This is no time for stage posturing or making the welkin ring or invoking cheap applause. Strong men do not stoop to these expedients.

"I think it may be said that the country views with deep disapproval every brag that has been uttered, every idle challenge that has been spoken, every word that has been said with the obvious purpose to irritate or affront, no matter whom.

NO TIME FOR PROPAGANDA

"The American people know their courage and their strength. They have given proof of both, and there isn't much doubt in the world about either. And they don't want to be played upon or incited or propagandized. They want their country to speak the language of mature and responsible men deserving of respect and able to exact it."

Outlining the traditional policy of the country in avoiding what Jefferson called "the broils of Europe" and listing 23 conflicts on that continent since 1792, Mr. Colby warned that the statements of administration leaders gave rise to the belief that the historic position had been forsaken.

"In fact, we have become so responsive to every shift and turn of European move and counter move that we could hardly be more so if we were a puppet state in southeastern Europe, even a member of the Balkan league itself," he said.

"We in this country know next to nothing about southeastern Europe, nothing that approaches true insight into its problems or their mastery. I doubt if there is a man in Washington who understands these problems of race, religion, language, history, hatreds, rivalries, blood feuds, duplicities, ambitions, and aspirations which determine the conduct and policies of these irreconcilable fragments of national existence.

"Are we not content to be out of it and far from it? Is there any conceivable view of our national interest which compels us to jump into this cauldron or, stopping short of war, to use a phrase which lately has become familiar, even to scald our fingers in it?"

Mr. Colby deplored what he termed "the silly attempt in some quarters" to cast reflection upon the isolationist, "a man who is trying to preserve a sane view of national interest and duty." In his call for observance by the President of the national judgment he quoted the phrase of John Bright that "the trouble with great thinkers is that they so often think wrong."

"The people of the United States will undoubtedly go to war if they want to and overwhelmingly resolve to," he added. "But we have no desire to be stampeded or to be carried into ruinous and irrevocable decisions by hysteria. We do not want to be fodder for propaganda."

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I wish particularly to make two paragraphs my own. I quote:

The American people know their courage and their strength. They have given proof of both, and there isn't much doubt in the world about either. And they don't want to be played upon or incited or propagandized. They want their country to speak the language of mature and responsible men deserving of respect and able to exact it.

Also this paragraph:

The people of the United States will undoubtedly go to war if they want to and overwhelmingly resolve to, but we have no desire to be stampeded or to be carried into ruinous and irrevocable decisions by hysteria. We do not want to be fodder for propaganda.

For myself, I would add that I do not want America to go to war at all except in the unavoidable defense of our honor or our domain.

Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me to make a further observation, I think it will interest him as well as the Senate. A dispatch from the International News Service in London today reads in part as follows:

LONDON, April 13.—Displaying a "resolution" which his foreign secretary said was shared "by most states of Europe and the United States," Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain today announced a Franco-British pledge of aid to Greece and Rumania in event of aggression and warned Germany and Italy to keep their hands off the Mediterranean.

Addressing the House of Lords a few minutes after Chamberlain had announced this dramatic new departure in British peace policy on the Continent, Foreign Secretary Halifax said:

"The judgment of His Majesty's Government is not only shared by the overwhelming mass of opinion in Britain but by most states of Europe and by the United States."

Mr. President, I want only to offer this simple observation. If there still be any doubt about it, after the post-war demonstration incident to the League of Nations, I want to say, at least for myself, that any such judgment or any such resolution on the part of the United States will have to come from a majority of 531 Members of Congress before it will have the slightest validity whatsoever. [Manifestations of applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The occupants of the galleries will maintain order.

ATTITUDE OF CANADA TOWARD WORLD AFFAIRS

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina has the floor.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I desire to read a few paragraphs from a recent debate in the House of Commons of the Parliament of Canada.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina has the floor.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yielded for a moment to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I cannot yield to anyone except with the permission of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. REYNOLDS. If agreeable to the Senator from Minnesota, I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, for the information of the Senate, I wish to say that it is hoped we may pass the bill that is now the unfinished business, and also complete today the deficiency appropriation bill, which is coming up next, so that the Senate may adjourn over until Monday. Otherwise we shall be compelled to meet tomorrow. I hope Senators will keep that in mind in developing their course of action this afternoon.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, in pursuance of the statement made by the majority leader, I may say to the Members of the Senate that I have talked with the minority leader and, as a result of our conference with the senior Senator from Nebraska, it is mutually agreed that the bills mentioned by the Senator from Kentucky are to be passed, and that I am to have the floor immediately thereafter. I think that is the understanding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to carrying out the private agreement which seems to have been made by Senators? The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to an address made by the Premier of Canada, Hon. Mackenzie King, and printed in the record of the House of Commons of the Canadian Parliament for Thursday, March 30, 1939.

Canada is our neighbor; Canadians are the same kind of people we are; and Canada has a parliamentary form of government. I think this address by the Canadian Prime Minister dealing with domestic and foreign affairs, explaining the Canadian policy in such scholarly and temperate terms, as I think such matters should always be discussed, should be made known to the Members of the Senate. Therefore, I take the pleasure and privilege of reading a few paragraphs from the address of the Canadian Prime Minister, and I ask unanimous consent that the remainder of his remarks be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I now quote from the address of the Premier of Canada:

Speaking as the Prime Minister of Canada, I wish to say that I am not prepared any more than is the Prime Minister of Great Britain to engage this country by new and unspecified commitments operating under conditions which cannot now be foreseen.

* * * * * * *

I cannot accept the view which is being urged in some quarters today, that, regardless of what government or party may be in office, regardless of what its policy may be, regardless of what the issue itself may come to be, this country should say here and now that Canada is prepared to support whatever may be proposed by the government at Westminster.

Mark that, Mr. President, the Premier of Canada says he cannot accept the view that Canada must follow the policy, whatever it may be, that Westminster may decide upon. Then he continues:

The international situation changes from year to year, sometimes from week to week; governments change; their personnel changes; policies change. Absolute statements of policy, absolute undertakings to follow other governments, whatever the situation, are out of the question. At the same time the decisions that would be made by our Government and Parliament, like those of other governments and other parliaments, are not incalculable, not matters of chance and whim. Much, of course, would depend on the special circumstances of the day. But equally important in determining our attitude are certain permanent factors of interest, of sentiment, of opinion, which set the limits within which any feasible and united policy must be determined.

May I refer to some of these known, in fact, obvious factors?

The first factor is the one that is present and dominant in the policy of every country, from Britain and Sweden to Argentina and the United States. I mean the existence of a national feeling and the assumption that first place will be given to the interests, immediate or long range, of the country itself. The growth of national feeling in Canada has been inevitable at a time when nationalism has come to dominate every quarter of the world. It is a more defensible and enduring growth than in many other lands. It is not based on any desire for expansion or revenge. This half continent affords ample room and the material basis for the building of a great nation. It is clear that this widely scattered dominion can only be welded together by the action of a positive and distinctive Canadian patriotism. A strong and dominant national feeling is not a luxury in Canada, it is a necessity. Without it this country could not exist. A divided Canada can be of little help to any country, and least of all to itself. The national feeling has found political expression in the steady growth of self-government—at first in domestic, later in external affairs. It has stood the test and the strain of economic depression and of the local differences to which depression gives a temporary importance. We are and will remain Canadians, devoted first and last to the interests of Canada, but Canadians, I hope, who will be able to take a long-range as well as a short-range view of what Canada's interests require.

In many, but certainly not in all cases, this growth of national feeling has strengthened the desire for a policy which its defenders call minding one's own business and which its critics call isolationism. Assuming, it is urged, that Canadians, like other people, will put their own interests first, what do our interests demand, what amount of knight errantry abroad do our resources permit? Canada, it is contended, is not a country of unlimited powers; it has not the capacity to stand indefinite strains. We have tremendous tasks to do at home, in housing the people, in caring for the aged and helpless, in relieving drought and unemployment, in building roads, in meeting our heavy burden of debt, in making provision for Canada's defense, and in bringing our standards of living and civilization to the levels our knowledge now makes possible. There is no great margin of realizable wealth for this purpose; we must, to a greater or less extent, choose between keeping our own house in order and trying to save Europe and Asia—

We have to make the same choice—

The idea—

He said—that every 20 years this country—

Speaking of Canada—

should automatically and as a matter of course take part in a war overseas for democracy or self-determination of other small nations—that a country which has all it can do to run itself should feel called upon to save, periodically, a continent that cannot run itself, and to these ends risk the lives of its people, risk bankruptcy and political disunion—seems to many a nightmare and sheer madness.

That is also my view and, I believe, the view of the American people.

I desire to say that there are many persons in this country who hold the same view that the Premier of Canada holds, and I wish we had more statesmen of his caliber in the United States.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point certain portions of the debate in the House of Commons following the portions heretofore read by me, and an editorial from the Chicago Tribune entitled "The Tories of '76 Ride Again."

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A second enduring factor is our position as a North American nation, and particularly our neighborhood to the United States. Geographically, that position has not changed in the past 30 or 40 years, but our appreciation of the position has changed. There was a time in the memory of all of us when friction was more in the picture than friendship, when memories of old conflicts, line-fence disputes on tariffs or on boundaries or on fisheries, together with the irresponsible colonial position of Canada, and the misconceptions and sectional interests that flourished in the United States, prevented our being the good neighbors we should have been. In the past generation, and particularly in the past 10 years, there has come a great and heartening change in that relationship. We have come to know one another better. Individual contacts have increased by business intercourse, by tourist travel, by the agencies of press and radio. Government contacts have increased by the exchange of legations and visits of members of governments. The changing position in the world outside has put both our occasional and slight differences and our great and enduring common interests in their proper perspective. It is a realization of the wider implications of self-interest.

We have been considering at length this session, as we did at the first session of the present Parliament, one of the most notable and practical evidences of that new understanding—the new trade agreement with the United States. I shall not do more than refer to that achievement as one of the main objectives of our foreign policy, a definite contribution to stability and good will. Some people seem to imagine that foreign policy has to do only with war and is carried on only with countries overseas. It is well to remember its main objective is peace and its greatest concern is to have a good neighbor.

There is another phase of that relationship which was crystallized in a notable speech last summer. August 1938 is as important in North American annals as September was in the annals of Europe. In that month, speaking in Kingston, the President of the United States declared:

"Happily, you and we, in friendship and in entire understanding, can look clear-eyed at these possibilities, resolving to leave no pathway unexplored and no technique undeveloped which may, if our hopes are realized, contribute to the peace of the world. Even if those hopes are disappointed, we can assure each other that this hemisphere at least shall remain a strong citadel wherein civilization can flourish unimpaired.

"The Dominion of Canada is part of the sisterhood of the British Empire. I give to you assurance that the people of the United States will not stand idly by if domination of Canadian soil is threatened by any other empire."

These significant words met with instant and appreciative response from press and public in Canada. As presenting what I believed to be the Canadian attitude, may I quote part of the remarks made at Woodbridge shortly afterwards:

"We know that these words of assurance are the words of a friendly people and neighbor. We are glad that our common affairs have been so managed, and our mutual confidence so established, that such words can be frankly spoken and received without reserve. We realize that there is here no thought of military alliances, which are not a part of the tradition of the people of the United States nor of our own. We recognize the President's words as fresh evidence of the special neighborly relations which have grown up between Canada and the United States, and we are glad that we are valued as a neighbor * * *.

"The people of Canada deeply appreciate all that is implied by the President's visit. At the same time they know they have their own responsibilities for maintaining Canadian soil as a homeland for free men in the Western Hemisphere. They will recognize that there is no room today for shirking these responsibilities. Indeed, the times being what they are, they will be quick to see that the assurance given by the President, has, if anything, increased rather than lessened our responsibilities.

"We, too, have our obligations as a good friendly neighbor, and one of them is to see that, at our own instance, our country is made as immune from attack or possible invasion as we can reasonably be expected to make it, and that, should the occasion ever arise, enemy forces should not be able to pursue their way, either by land, sea, or air to the United States, across Canadian territory."

What I should like particularly to emphasize is that these closer and more responsible relations with the United States have not in any way lessened the intimacy of our relations with the United Kingdom. On the contrary, this development has been paralleled by a clearer understanding by those two great countries of the ideals and interests they share together. This has found notable illustration in the paralleling of a Canada-United States trade agreement by a United Kingdom-United States agreement. There has been not merely a North American, there has been a growing North Atlantic understanding, though inevitably one involving less definite and crystallized relations and obligations. In this we in Canada have played some part; from it we have certainly derived great benefit. It is not a movement that can be hurried. It is a situation where it is for each country to decide upon its own interest, in the long run, as well as in the immediate phases.

This would appear to be an appropriate place to say a word as to Canada's relations with the countries of South America and the other members of the Pan American Union.

In these times of lessening distances, between continents as well as countries, there is a larger America in which Canadians are becoming increasingly interested. During recent months it was in fact suggested in many quarters that Canada should be represented at the eighth international conference of American states, held in Lima, Peru, in December. I can assure the House that the Government shares the view of the importance of our relations with the score of other nations which have become established in this Western Hemisphere. On geographical grounds alone we could not be uninterested in developments affecting their welfare and security. We realize that in many cases these peoples are facing problems similar to those that Canadians have to meet, and that the solutions they have found, or are striving for, have significance for us. In the economic field our trade relations are important and are capable of extensive increase.

So far as the specific suggestion of participation in the Lima Conference is concerned, I may recall that we are not a member of the Pan American Union and consequently could not have been invited to attend, since in accordance with established rules the President of Peru sent invitations only to members of the Union. Moreover, as honorable members are aware, Canada could not become a member of the Pan American Union unless and until the constitution of that body was altered, since at present its membership is restricted to American republics. It was, however, suggested that we should send an official observer.

That procedure, also, I may point out, is not feasible under the existing practice of the Union. Some question as to official observers arose at the Montevideo Conference in 1933, and the matter was later considered by the governing board. The board, after referring to the fact that since the Habana Conference of 1928 both plenary and committee sessions have been open to the general public, concluded that "there seems to be no reason for establishing a category of 'official observers.'"

These are, however, somewhat technical considerations. It would be possible to propose or have a friendly member propose that the necessary adjustments should be made in the constitution and procedure of the Union to make our membership possible. Public opinion in favor of some such course has undoubtedly increased in recent years. I do not, however, consider that it has yet become sufficiently widespread, or sufficiently informed and matured, to warrant immediate steps in that direction. It is a possibility which should be given consideration in the future, along with other means, trade and governmental, of bringing about closer relationships between our country and these countries which are destined to play an increasingly significant part in the world's affairs.

Another important factor in determining Canada's attitude and policies is our increasing interest in the affairs of Europe. Europe has become a part of the average man's life and thinking in a way that was never true before, except during the Great War, and even then in more specialized ways. The old Continent has presented in recent years a dramatic and absorbing, if, withal, at times, a terrifying spectacle, with great issues as the theme. New forces or old passions in new clothing have been driving whole peoples onward to unknown ends, with striking figures personifying their desires. War and the marching of troops, social revolution, and religious conflict have held our attention. Controversies have not been confined to council chambers or diplomatic congresses; challenges are hurled across frontiers in all men's sight and hearing. Increased press services, the films of foreign happenings, the radio and radio commentators, the books of intimate confessions written by a score of European correspondents have brought the drama to new audiences of millions. In many cases the impact has been too strong. The flaming headline, the daily sensation, the voices and pictures from the scene of conflict, the commentators' dramatization, have been too much for some people. It is perhaps fortunate that television has not yet come into popular use.

Spectators frequently do not remain wholly spectators. Their interest is engaged. They may take sides, more or less informed; human sympathies, racial sympathies, religious sympathies, class sympathies, political creeds, apprehensions of the results for their own country, may carry them into opposition or advocacy. It is not an idealistic and detached interest such as the League of Nations awakened in its prime; it is a more passionate interest, the interest of people moved to fear or to hate. And inevitably persons who feel deeply, desire to have their own country's policy directed to support or oppose one or other of these contending forces. This explains how it is in our own country there have been some who wanted support for Madrid, other for Burgos; why one defends Stalin, another Trotsky—and overwhelming numbers condemn them both; why occasionally voices are heard in defense of fascism, while many urge that we take up arms on behalf of all democratic countries; and why we have appeals to aid this oppressed religious group, or that struggling racial minority. In many cases these demands are largely an emotional release, but insofar as they do not cancel out, they constitute a force for intervention in European affairs.

I have referred to the difference between the present interest in Europe and the interest which, in earlier years, centered in the League of Nations. For a good many years we on this side of the Atlantic looked at Europe through the window of Geneva. When we thought of its problems and controversies, most of us took it for granted they would be settled by the machinery of the League and on League principles. It was assumed by the supporters of collective security through collective coercion that if force were needed, the force at the League's command would be overwhelming. The case for League action was further simplified by the abstract and general manner in which the contingency was presented; it was no particular issue with its indefinite tones, but an abstract issue. in blacks and whites, between an aggressor and his victim. Naturally everyone was against the "aggressor." But when the theory came to the testing, the League was found to lack the universality that had been assumed, and the specific disputes presented difficulties of divided national interest, or hesitation to risk war, that had not arisen in the hypothetical case of an abstract aggressor.

In the momentous incidents of the past year, the League has played little part. The assembly was in session at the height of the September crisis, but no one in Geneva or elsewhere thought of it as the effective instrument for maintaining peace. Europe had reverted to open-power politics, to dominance by the great powers. There is and will remain a divergence of views as to the responsibility for that situation. I am inclined to agree with the judgment of the Marquess of Crewe, in a recent speech in London:

"The League of Nations has been blamed, and the nations who were supposed to be able to direct the policy of the League of Nations were individually blamed, for not having taken strong action against aggressors on one or two occasions, but I am inclined to think that posterity will be disposed to blame the League of Nations infinitely more for having devoted attention almost exclusively to the penalties it could exact from those that made war rather than giving time and attention to removing the causes for which war is made. That is to say, article 16, the penalties article, was, so to speak, perpetually on the agenda of the League, although, as we know, it was not brought into play in the way many people wished, whereas article 19 remained in a dusty pigeonhole. I cannot help feeling that the present situation might have been entirely different if a different course had been taken. It might even have happened that the name of Herr Hitler would never have been heard, because the occasions which brought him into such prominence as the recreator of his country never need have arisen.

But because the League failed in this high task of world control to which it was prematurely set it does not follow that it has failed completely. The conception of the peoples of the world sitting in council together to achieve their common interests and solve their current problems is too splendid, too indispensable in this jostling world, to be allowed to die. In the anarchy and passion of today, such a center of coordination, such a focus of good will, is more needed than ever. It will have to operate on a more limited and less spectacular stage, building up its technical and social and economic activities, accustoming peoples and governments to work together, until eventually they may find it possible to use this tried and tested instrument for greater ends.

In this connection it is of special interest to observe a note which the United States Government sent to the Secretary General of the League of Nations last month:

"The League has been responsible for the development of mutual exchange and discussion of ideas and methods to a greater extent, and in more fields of humanitarian and scientific endeavor, than any other organization in history. The United States Government is keenly aware of the value of this type of general interchange and desire to see it extended.

"Encouraging as has been the progress already made, much remains to be done for the promotion of human welfare in health, social, economic, and financial fields. * * *

"The United States Government looks forward to the development and expansion of the league's machinery for dealing with the problems in these fields, and to the participation by all nations in active efforts to solve them. * * * They will continue to collaborate in those activities and will consider, in a sympathetic spirit, means of making their collaboration more effective."

A deeper interest and a vital factor in the determining of Canadian policies is our concern for the strength and welfare of the United Kingdom. It has its foundation in ties of kinship and personal contact. It is probably true that, for most people, as years pass, the center of political gravity tends to shift from the land of their fathers to the land of their children. Probably most of those of us whose ancestors came from the British Isles stand midway in this respect between our French-speaking fellow citizens whose ancestors have been established here for 300 years and newer comers, who, in some instances, naturally think still in terms of the life and ways of the land they have left. But the feeling of personal interest on the part of Canadians generally in what is affectionately termed "the old country" is still a very strong and determining factor.

It is, of course, not the only reason why the fate of Britain gives us special concern. Ties of trade are strong. Still stronger is the admiration, which is not confined to those of British ancestry, for what Britain is and what she has given the world, the free institutions she has developed, the tolerance and ability to reconcile opposing points of view which mark her political life, the insistence upon individual liberty, the devotion to public duty and the readiness to do public service without regimentation or reward.

In times like these there is a special recognition of the fact that Great Britain, today, whatever may have been the case in the past, has no territorial ambitions, no designs on any other people's land or liberty, and that her influence is the main force in the world for maintaining peace. A world in which Britain was weak would be greatly worse for small countries than a world in which she was strong. Finally there are the historical and political ties—the allegiance to the same king; the common human interest in the holders of the crown; the free association in the same commonwealth. With Britain's strength is also associated a sense of our own security. Particularly at a time like the present, where there are evidences of a desire of world domination by force, have we reason to feel that an act of an aggressor aimed at the destruction of Britain would constitute a menace to the freedom of every nation of the British Commonwealth. All these forces combine to make concern for the security of Britain a deep-felt and powerful factor in the shaping of Canadian policy.

Any realistic survey of the Canadian scene will make it clear that these varying factors play their part in the shaping of opinion and policy in Canada. No one of them can be ignored. No one can be taken as the sole directing force. They do not necessarily conflict; they may increasingly work together. That depends on the special circumstances and on the policies of other countries than ours. That is why it is impossible in the case of our country, as of others, to give what some people seem to desire, a hard and fast statement in advance as to the action that will be taken in hypothetical future cases that may arise in this rapidly shifting world.

Within the limits I have indicated, a decision on each issue must be made. As I have said, it is for the Government to recommend and for Parliament to decide upon the course to follow. It is, however, objected that in some cases, and particularly in the event of another member of the British Commonwealth, which in present conditions means the United Kingdom, being at war, Parliament has no freedom to decide that Canada is automatically a belligerent whenever the United Kingdom is. In some quarters it is further urged that assuming this to be true, we should, in order to make freedom of choice a reality, take formal steps here and now to remove any doubt on the matter, to make it clear to the world that Canada has the right to remain neutral, not a billigerent, whether passive or active, when the United Kingdom is at war.

The constitutional relationship of the several members of the commonwealth in the event of war is not a simple question. It is not one that can be determined by quoting detached phrases from resolutions or speeches.

Here I may take the opportunity to refer to obvious misrepresentations or misconceptions based on a reference I myself made in this House in the course of the debate on the address to a statement made by Sir Wilfrid Laurier on February 8, 1910, as follows:

"If England is at war we are at war and liable to attack. I do not say that we shall always be attacked, neither do I say that we would take part in all the wars of England. That is a matter that must be guided by circumstances, upon which the Canadian parliament will have to pronounce and will have to decide in its own best judgment."

With regard to the use which has been made of this paragraph since it was quoted, I should like, first of all, to take strong exception to the failure, either accidental or deliberate, of some who have referred to it, to make use of the entire quotation and thereby make clear exactly what was meant. In justice not less to the memory of Sir Wilfrid Laurier than to myself, I wish to take strong exception to divorcing a single sentence from the statement of which it is an integral part, and still stronger exception to deleting altogether a part of a single sentence, thereby giving to the remainder a meaning which was never intended.

When Sir Wilfrid Laurier used the expression "If England is at war, we are at war and liable to attack," he was not propounding some political or constitutional theory with respect to the powers and limitations of the Government or Parliament of Canada in time of war. The remainder of the paragraph makes clear that the very opposite was what was in his mind. What he was seeking to make clear and what it is necessary should be made abundantly clear today is the danger of attack upon Canada itself which is inseparable from an attack upon Britain by an aggressor. Sir Wilfrid Laurier wished to make clear to the Canada of his day, as I feel it equally my duty to make it abundantly clear to the Canada of the present day, that when for any reason there is cause to believe that one or more nations are determined upon aggression, and may have in mind domination of other countries by force, it may be that enemy, not the parliament of this country or even its people, who will decide whether it best serves its purpose to regard Canada as liable to attack in any conflict in which it may be engaged with any other part of the British commonwealth of nations.

My immediate purpose in quoting the statement, as will be apparent from the context, was to emphasize the continuity of Liberal policy as regards parliamentary control, the view which was held then and which we as a government hold today, that in the great as in the small issues of a nation's policy, the policy of self-government which we have followed for a century makes it essential that Parliament and no other body should decide. If at that time I had been directing particular attention to that portion of Sir Wilfrid's remarks to which I have just referred, I should have quoted, as indicating still more clearly the causal connection between the two parts of that remark, a more explicit statement Sir Wilfrid had previously made in the same debate on January 12, 1910:

"When Britain is at war, Canada is at war; there is no distinction. If Great Britain, to which we are subject, is at war with any nation, Canada becomes liable to invasion, and so Canada is at war."

This statement indicates that Sir Wilfrid's conclusion was based on two assumptions. The first is set forth in the phrase, "Great Britain, to which we are subject." In other words, the assumption was that political subordination existed. The second assumption was, as I have indicated, that, given this political subordination, or, conceivably, any political connection between Great Britain and Canada, the enemy, if he so desired and could do so, was entitled to attack Canada, and so Canada was at war.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier was not a man to set bounds to a nation's growth. He would have been the last to say that its future destinies must be guided by facts or phrases belonging to a political and constitutional position of a generation before, just as he would have been the last to say we should remain indifferent to Britain's destruction or the destruction of freedom in the world.

There have been great changes since 1910. The constitutional changes are most familiar. There has been an advance from colonial subordination to equal status, the substantial achievement of responsible government in external as well as in domestic affairs. It is a development which has saved the British Empire and given a fruitful example to other peoples; it is a permanent tribute to the political genius, the practical sense, the ability to adapt and compromise, which characterize the peoples of the commonwealth, and it is, I think, generally recognized that it is a development in which Canadians have played the initiating and decisive part.

I need not do more than refer to the oft-quoted reference in the declaration of the imperial conference of 1926, to the position of Great Britain and the Dominions as "equal in status, in no way subordinate one to another in any aspect of their domestic or external affairs," and to the specific developments which in recent years have illustrated and made definite that declaration—the changed position of the Governor General, the right of extra-territorial registration, the removal of the legislative control of the Parliament of the United Kingdom save for constitutional changes so long as we desire that limitation, the modifications as to judicial appeals, the establishment of legations, representation at international conferences and in the League of Nations, the understanding that treaties between the King in respect of any part of the commonwealth and a foreign country are made on the advice of his ministers in that part.

But it is not only the constitutional position that has changed. Canada has grown from a country of seven to a country of eleven millions; its industries have expanded beyond anything earlier imagined; the development of the mining areas of the north has turned what was a dividing waste into a source of national strength.

The World War has intervened; a war that set a boundary line between two periods in the life of mankind. Now we all know better what war means. No intelligent man or woman can assume that the world stands where it did in 1910 or in 1914–18. The war profoundly modified the balance of power both in the Old World and in the New.

The development of aviation and changes in industrial structure have further modified the strategic situation. For the British Commonwealth they have meant a diffusion of responsibility, a decentralization in defense, the greater importance of local defense, and of alternative sources of raw materials, industrial supplies, and defense equipment. Perhaps the chief significance of the imperial conference in 1937 was the general recognition of that development.

But these momentous changes, changes in the world position, changes in political relationships, changes in the defense situation, even the changes in the constitutional relations between the members of the commonwealth, do not necessarily alter the formal and legal position, the position which undoubtedly existed a generation ago, that Canada was automatically a belligerent if the United Kingdom was.

A legal situation can be changed in one of two ways, by the gradual and decisive overriding of the old letter of the law by established constitutional conventions, or by definite action by the legislative authorities which have the power to act. There are many points upon which the old legal position has been modified and made obsolete by the gradual development of divergent practice, by the steady accumulation of precedent, until the new situation has been decisively established by tacit recognition or as in 1926 by formal recital.

There is no general agreement that such is the case as regards wartime relationship. Legal experts still differ as to the conclusions that may be drawn as to the divisibility or indivisibility of the crown, and as to the range of the effect of advice tendered to the sovereign by his ministers in the United Kingdom alone. The reason why constitutional conventions have not brought clarity and agreement in this matter of war relationship is the simple and fortunate reason that no part of the commonwealth has engaged in any war in the past 20 years, aside from minor border raids, and consequently there has been no testing of practice, no accumulation of precedent.

Given this position, it is frequently suggested that action should be taken at once, whether by the parliament of Canada alone, or by the Parliaments of Canada and the United Kingdom acting jointly, to establish the right of Canada in the event of war to choose between the status of belligerency and the status of neutrality. Or as it is sometimes put, it is urged it should be established that the sole advisers of his majesty who can advise him to issue a declaration of war as regards Canada are his majesty's Canadian advisers.

In considering this question it is essential to bear in mind the limitations of any parliamentary action that might be taken regarding the exercise of ministerial advice to the crown; for example, that action should be taken by Parliament to provide that a declaration by His Majesty on the advice of his Canadian ministers will be necessary to give Canada the legal status of belligerency.

It would not be consistent with the actual facts to conclude that the original legal position in this regard had not been modified in any degree by the long and far-reaching trend of constitutional development. Equally it would be closing one's eyes to facts to imagine that action of the character suggested would solve all the anomalies or contradictions in the commonwealth relationship. It should certainly not be overlooked that declarations of war have in some measure gone out of fashion. The proposal would obviously not meet the case where no declaration of war was made. Nor can it be assumed that any such declaration would necessarily deter the enemy from taking immediate hostile action on the ground that the general relationship between the several members of the commonwealth warranted it in regarding all parts as belligerents. In this respect, Sir Wilfrid Laurier's statement still expresses a reality which we cannot ignore and for which we must make due preparation in defense.

I recognize that those who are advocating and supporting the proposal to which I have referred regard it as a logical consequence, a necessary implication, of our long evolution toward self-government. It registers the conclusion that it would not be consistent with the present relationship of the members of the commonwealth to hold that the King would act for Canada as regards war and peace on the advice of any other one of his governments, but not on the advice of his government in Canada itself. It is put forward as a recognition of the necessity of the people, the Parliament, the government of this country accepting adult responsibility for a course that so vitally affects them, rather than throwing that responsibility on other members of the commonwealth or their governments.

I do not myself think that at the present time it is either necessary or desirable to seek the enactment of such legislation. I shall not go into the legal question to which I have already referred or into the further question on which there is also a difference among the legal experts, as to whether action by the Parliament of Canada alone would suffice to establish a new position, or whether action by the Parliament of the United Kingdom would also be necessary. I have already referred to the fact that to seek legal action now might be taken to mean that it had been definitely concluded that the old legal position has not been affected by constitutional development, and to mean that today it would not be His Majesty's Government of Canada upon whose advice His Majesty the King would issue a declaration of war affecting Canada. I shall confine myself to the brief statement of two further considerations which in my mind render it undesirable to follow the suggested course.

In the first place, action to that effect, if legislatively possible, would be carried through only at the cost of passionate controversy and acute differences of opinion. Why, I ask, divide Canada to provide against a contingency that may not arise, or if it does arise, may not come until the situation has materially changed? The same consideration of the overwhelming importance of national unity which has led this Government to decline to make premature and inappropriate statements of possible belligerency prevent it from recommending action to declare possible neutrality.

But this is not the only consideration. Action of this nature at this time would be aid and comfort to any country which might be inclined to aggressive action against the democratic peoples or against the United Kingdom specifically. Such a country would inevitably draw the conclusion, whether logically well founded or not, that our seeking, under the present conditions of the world, the legal power to remain neutral, implied a definite decision to remain neutral in any and every conflict that country might precipitate. That would be a most unwarranted conclusion, a most unfortunate result. No country now has or should be given any ground for counting that in the event of aggression against the United Kingdom this country has decided to stand aloof, decided against taking an appropriate part if such a struggle were thrust upon her.

The action suggested is really not to the point. I appreciate the motives of those who urge such action, but I think they exaggerate the importance of legal forms and formulas. Canada's decision in any case that can now be envisaged will not be determined by the legal position. We would not go into a war merely because of legal uncertainty as to our power to stay out. We would not stay out of a war merely because we had provided unquestioned technical freedom to do so. Our country's decisions on such vital matters, now or later, will depend on deeper forces; they will depend on the thoughts and feelings of our people.

While another world war will, I trust, never recur, it is desirable, nevertheless, to consider some questions which would arise in the event of our participation in such a conflict. That participation could not be passive or formal, nor could it be unplanned or irresponsible. It would be necessary to consider in consultation with others involved and with regard to the objectives and operations of the enemy what would be the most effective form our action and our cooperation could take.

It is clear that the conditions determining the nature of participation in such a conflict have undergone a great change since the last war. The balance of world power has shifted, and Canada has to keep its Pacific as well as its Atlantic coast in mind. From both the military and the economic aspect, the attitude of the United States would be immensely more important for the world and for us than 20 years ago. The weapons and tactics of war have materially changed; naval conditions have perhaps not greatly altered so far as the sea reaches, but armies have become mechanized; great Maginot or Siegfried lines bar the possibility of rapid infantry advance. Airplanes have brought new resources and scope to other arms in joint operations and have in themselves given war new range, new flexibility, and new terrors. Mechanization on land and in the air and the colossal demands for supplies and renewed equipment, demands which would begin far beyond where the demands of the last war left off, greatly increase the importance of the economic factor, the indispensability of adequate supplies and staying power factors in which the democratic countries are overwhelmingly strong.

The change in the world balance of power, the change in the strategic conditions, the change in economic needs and in relative industrial capacity, have brought about a marked decentralization of defense activities in the British commonwealth. They have brought about a greater preoccupation of each part with its own defense, a greater responsibility for that defense, a greater self-containment in the provision of the means of defense. Anyone who has followed the discussion of defense not only in the United Kingdom but in Australia and South Africa, is familiar with that fact. One strategic fact is clear: the days of great expeditionary forces of infantry crossing the oceans are not likely to recur. Two years ago I expressed in this house the view that it was extremely doubtful if any of the British dominions would ever send another expeditionary force to Europe.

One political fact is equally clear: in a war to save the liberty of others, and thus our own, we should not sacrifice our own liberty or our own unity. Planning and coordination would be essential, but the necessary coordination could be made, and if this Government were in power it would be made, without sacrificing those vital ends and conditions of our existence. Profits could and would be rigidly controlled, and profiteering suppressed. But men's lives and men's wills cannot be put on the same basis as goods and profits.

The present Government believes that conscription of men for overseas service would not be a necessary or an effective step. Let me say that so long as this Government may be in power, no such measure will be enacted. We have full faith in the readiness of Canadian men and women to rally for the defense of their country and their liberties, and to resist aggression by any country seeking to dominate the world by force. There is in our people, in every part of Canada, a deep sense of duty, a power of facing realities, a tenacious courage, that would rise to any emergency.

I have spoken a good deal of war and the possibility of war. In a review of foreign affairs, under present world conditions, it is necessary to give that subject special emphasis. I do not wish, however, to go further in that direction than is absolutely necessary. There is no doubt that the outlook is disturbed. The heaping up of rival armaments, the clash of new doctrines, the concentration of power in a few hands, are factors which make it necessary to become prepared for whatever may happen. It is not possible to ignore that situation. But while there is no ground for an easy-going optimism, neither, I believe, is there ground for persistent pessimism. We should be on our guard against reckless rumors and the credulous acceptance of rumors. I do not believe in the prophecies of inevitable wars and forecasts of the inevitable collapse of civilization and a return to the Dark Ages or worse. We must not permit ourselves to drift into a fatalist and defeatist mood, which more than all else, hampers business recovery and political stability, and puts people in a mood to accept any end to prolonged tension.

It is not a break-down of civilization with which the world is faced; it is a period of profound readjustments, both domestic and international. We are living in one of those decisive periods of human history when new forces gather momentum and break through the crust of custom, when new tendencies develop with startling speed. The relations between peoples have been upset by scientific developments which have brought them suddenly into immensely closer daily contact, before they had developed the new political machinery, the new political attitude, the new political experience and capacity that are required for living together in such close quarters. After centuries of economic struggle, we have largely conquered nature, we have succeeded in developing the material equipment for more abundant living, but while progress is being made, and made much more rapidly than many with short memories realize, the world has not yet adjusted its economic machinery to secure the full utilization of its new opportunities. These developments should be viewed as opportunities, not as calamities; any disturbances they involve may well be growing pains, not signs of decay.

May I repeat my belief that, despite the strife and turmoil and reaction of today, human society is moving forward. In our short-time judgments we are sometimes misled by a lack of perspective. We may forget or never have known what were the real conditions of a generation or a century ago, or may have idealized the past, seen it through a romantic and obscuring haze. We overlook the fact that many of the things that trouble us always existed, existed in worse degree, but were not known at all, or not known till long after the event, were merely local issues, whereas today fact and rumor and propaganda from every quarter are thrust into our eyes and ears hourly and incessantly, insisting upon our attention. And we forget also that today we judge both international conduct and social conditions with more awakened consciences, more advanced standards of measurement. It is only when we are perfectly contented with things as they are that we will be going backward.

These developments involve clashes between conflicting ideas, ideals, and ambitions. The conflict is being fought out in the open; all the world's the stage, and all the peoples have become close spectators. But, while there is the danger, it does not necessarily follow that these clashes must lead to world war. As I have said earlier, there is among the peoples a passionate desire for peace, based on a wider knowledge of what war would involve. There are objectives of the peoples have come to believe are worth striving for, but they do not necessarily consider them worth dying for. There may be nations which are prepared to take great risks to attain national ends. There is the danger of getting too near the edge of the precipice in the expectation that the opposing country will draw back first. But that danger is lessened as peoples become aware of how near to the edge they have been brought by their leaders, and as armaments are equalized and pressure creates new resistance.

There is a deep difference between the democratic and the totalitarian states. Neither type can at present expect the other to abandon the way of life that seems good to it. That difference, fundamental and important as it is, that rivalry, inevitable as it may be, does not mean that a decision must be sought on the field of battle. War would settle nothing, prove nothing, help nothing. The decisive test which faces both democracies and dictatorships is the task that faces them at home.

Countries, like our own, which have chosen the democratic way, must be prepared to stand up for their ideals, to resist the contagion or the attack of totalitarian isms of whatever color. But it is first and foremost at home that that defense must be made. Democracy is not an easy system of government to establish or to maintain. It is a system that makes great demands on the intelligence, on the tolerance, on the patriotism of the whole people. It is an active, not a passive way of life. It demands an appreciation of the value of freedom and a resolution to defend it from all encroachments. It calls for the hardest and, at the same time, most enduring form of discipline, self-discipline; for the most difficult form of cooperation, free cooperation, born of devotion to common ends. That is why not all peoples have been able to achieve it. That is also why we or any other democratic people cannot be certain of maintaining it, unless we are prepared to give to public affairs the interest and the attention that the activities of the modern community demand. We cannot hope to maintain democratic institutions unless we are ready to refrain from the temptations to intolerance, to cheap cynicism and indiscriminate criticism, and from regarding the state simply as something to be squeezed. That way lies disunion and demoralization. Often times criticism may seem too free, too reckless, too malicious, but I believe democracies will survive too free criticism much more effectively than dictatorships will survive the lack of criticism.

So far as rivalry exists, it may be hoped that it will take a more constructive, a more conclusive form. Let it be a rivalry in doing most for one's own people, not most against another people. Let it be a contest in determining which way of life does the most for the ordinary man and woman, which can best give both opportunity and security, which can most effectively raise standards of living, and standards of thinking, which can most effectively lessen human suffering and human want, which can best reconcile individual liberty and community obligation.

Recognizing that the present is one of the great epochs of transition in the history of the world, there is need, as well as opportunity, for every country to play a distinctive part. It will take time for the waves of emotion, set up by war and revolution, to calm down. Of this we may be assured, and it is something in which the humblest equally with the greatest may play an effective part; peace and security for all will be attained only as each country strives to add nothing to the dangerous flood of hate and hysteria, but seeks to add something to the world's stock of understanding, confidence, and goodwill.

THE TORIES OF '76 RIDE AGAIN

The recent testimony of Henry L. Stimson, Mr. Hoover's Secretary of State, before the Senate Foreign Affairs Committee, was a shocking demonstration of the subservience of many influential minds in this country to French and especially to British influences. Mr. Stimson and those who share his curious brand of Americanism are not recent arrivals on our shores; for much the most part their families have been rooted in our soil for centuries. And yet today the descendants are exerting all their thought and all their influence to reestablish a servile colonial attitude in America.

They are more British than the British, as is characteristic of colonials. Senator REYNOLDS asked Mr. Stimson if it were not true that Germany, Italy, and Japan today are doing precisely what Great Britain and France have done on a grander scale. It was a rhetorical question; obviously the differences are negligible. In Mr. Stimson's lifetime he has seen the greater part of Africa and substantial chunks of Asia divided between Britain and France. And yet Mr. Stimson had the hardihood (which few Englishmen would have shown) to attempt a denial of the validity of Mr. REYNOLDS' point.

"You are going pretty far back into history," said the former Secretary of State of the United States. It was the voice of a feudal dependent, bound to defend the honor of the British Crown against all who would disparage it.

Henry Stimson was born in 1867. He was 19 years old when the British seized Nigeria; he was 20 years old when they took Somaliland; he was 21 when they took British East Africa, later to be called Kenya; he was 22 when they grabbed Rhodesia; he was 26 when British Central Africa, later called Nyasaland, was brought into the empire; he was 29 when Uganda was captured.

In 1899, when Mr. Stimson was 32 years old, the British sent an army of 350,000 men to South Africa to steal the country with its vast wealth in gold and diamonds from the Boers. Mussolini can excuse his conquest of Ethiopia by pretending that he is bringing civilization to a benighted people, but there is no parallel excuse for the crushing of the Boers, who were white men and were giving offense to no one.

A year or so before, General Kitchener (later a field marshal) had been busy killing Sudanese natives with his machine guns in order to take their country from them. Mr. Stimson was 31 years old when, at Fashoda on the upper Nile, British and French armed forces faced each other in hate, both seeking to extend their African dominions. That was only 41 years ago, but in Mr. Stimson's reckoning it was "pretty far back into history."

And that was by no means France's first venture, or her last, into the business of colonial expansion. As Germany was humiliated in 1918, so France had been humbled in 1871. France sought to regain her prestige and self-respect by colonial expansion and, it might be added for purposes of contrast, was encouraged in this course by Bismarck. Accordingly, in 1887, when Mr. Stimson was 20 years old, the French seized Annam and Tonkin from China and Laos from Siam. These territories were half again as large as France and contained a population of 20,000,000, who have rebelled occasionally in the intervening years, but their uprisings have been put down by armed force.

France's imperial expansion took place chiefly in Africa. When Mr. Stimson was 11 years old the French grabbed Tunis. He was 18 when the French obtained their first foothold in Madagascar, and he was 29 when the whole island, with an area larger than that of France, was annexed. He was of voting age when the French took Djibouti and Dahomey. When the French made their secret deal for Morocco Mr. Stimson was about to become a member of President Taft's cabinet. While he was Mr. Hoover's Secretary of State he must have heard at least an occasional reference to the grab of Germany's colonies and the Arab dominions in Asia and Africa under the guise of mandates.

Great Britain, with an area of 88,000 square miles and a population of 44,000,000, rules an empire of more than 18,000,000 square miles and a population of nearly half a billion. France, a country of 212,000 square miles, rules an empire 20 times as big with a population more than twice her own, most of it acquired in Mr. Stimson's lifetime. Yet the British and French colonial offices are no more convinced of the eternal justice of all this land-grabbing than is Mr. Stimson. He expresses no alarm at the prospect of risking American lives to defend the imperial possessions from the nations which covet them. There are even feudal-minded Americans who would go to war for Britain to keep the Germans from ruling the German city of Danzig, as if America had any interest in the matter.

It is profoundly to be hoped that the common sense of our people will not desert them. If the so-called democracies of Europe wish to hold Italy and Germany in check, they can do so with their own men and their own resources. The nations immediately endangered by the Rome-Berlin axis have the preponderance of strength. If they want to defend their imperial conquests they can do so without our help.

AMENDMENT OF TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY ACT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1796) to amend the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, we now have under consideration in the Senate a bill introduced by the distinguished Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] known as Senate bill 1796, on which a report and a recommendation have been made by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The bill provides an authorization of a hundred-million-dollar bond issue for the T. V. A. I understand that the purpose of the bond issue is to allow the T. V. A. to acquire various properties for which negotiations have been going on. Let me take just a moment of the Senate's time to refer them to the minority views of the T. V. A. investigating committee. I quote first from section 2 of the measure which authorized the joint committee:

It shall be the duty of the joint committee to make a full and complete investigation of the administration of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933, as amended, including the following, but not excluding any other matters pertaining to the administration and policies.

I shall not take the time of the Senate to go into the minority views at length, because they are very long; but I should like to quote two or three sections very briefly.

I quote from page 268 of the minority views:

We are of the opinion that the committee has failed to fulfill the task assigned to it with that completeness the Congress had a right to expect of it.

I now quote again from the minority views on page 296, where the minority of the committee says:

This study concludes that not only will it be impossible to operate the T. V. A. power project at present rates in such a manner as to break even, but, evidently, there must be a large loss.

I quote from page 323 of the minority views:

From the evidence adduced before this committee, particularly the financial statements of the Authority, we conclude that judged by accounting methods and cost charges applicable to private industry, the electric rates of the Authority do not provide a logical, honest "yardstick" of equitable rates of private industry by reason of the following advantages enjoyed by T. V. A. but not available to private industry.

The minority views of this committee, signed by the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] and the gentlemen of the House, Mr. JENKINS of Ohio and Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey, are clear; and I commend to the Senate the reading of those minority views.

In the light of the general T. V. A. situation, I have not raised any objection to the consideration of this bill, but at this time I desire to offer an amendment. It is a simple amendment, and I ask to have it read and considered. All that my amendment proposes to do is to limit the amount of the bond issue which is to be authorized to apply upon purchases of properties already acquired or in process of being acquired.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator desire to have the amendment stated at this time?

Mr. BRIDGES. I do. I send it to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 5, after the word "act", it is proposed to insert:

Under agreements entered into prior to the date of enactment of this amendatory act.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I now suggest the absence of a quorum, because I shall ask for the yeas and nays on this particular amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Capper	Harrison	McCarran
Andrews	Caraway	Hatch	McKellar
Ashurst	Clark, Idaho	Hayden	McNary
Austin	Connally	Herring	Maloney
Bailey	Danaher	Hill	Mead
Bankhead	Davis	Holman	Miller
Barbour	Donahey	Holt	Minton
Barkley	Downey	Hughes	Murray
Bilbo	Ellender	Johnson, Calif.	Neely
Bone	Frazier	Johnson, Colo.	Norris
Borah	George	King	Nye
Bridges	Gerry	La Follette	Overton
Brown	Gibson	Lee	Pepper
Bulow	Gillette	Lodge	Pittman
Burke	Glass	Logan	Radcliffe
Byrd	Green	Lucas	Reed
Byrnes	Gurney	Lundeen	Reynolds
Russell	Smith	Townsend	Wheeler
Schwartz	Stewart	Tydings	White
Schwellenbach	Taft	Vandenberg	Wiley
Shipstead	Thomas, Okla.	Wagner
Smathers	Thomas, Utah	Walsh

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-six Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. BRIDGES obtained the floor.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. NORRIS. Has the Senator from New Hampshire the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire has the floor.

Mr. NORRIS. I did not know that.

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not care to have the Senator yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. That is entirely satisfactory to me.

Mr. President, the amendment I have offered is a simple amendment, providing that on page 2, line 5, after the word "act", there be inserted the words "under agreements entered into prior to the enactment of this amendatory act." It merely places a limitation on the $100,000,000 bond issue for T. V. A., providing that the money available be limited to purchases of property as to which there are at present existing agreements.

It is a simple, straightforward amendment, and I can see no objection to it, unless the T. V. A. has a wholesale program for further expansion into other territory which they want covered by this blanket $100,000,000 issue.

I hope the amendment may be agreed to. At the proper time I should like to have the yeas and nays.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, as a matter of fact, I do not suppose any legal contract has been entered into between the T. V. A. and the Commonwealth & Southern. I saw the contract after the public announcement that it had been agreed to. It was not formally signed. For various reasons the parties felt that in the negotiations which Mr. Willkie had to go through in order to get all the various corporations and bondholders to agree, and in the negotiations through which the T. V. A. had to go, they might find some point where it would be advisable, or even necessary, to change the contract. If that turned out to be the fact, the amendment, if it meant anything, would merely nullify everything and kill the whole measure.

There is another consideration however. I wish to tell the Senate the object in providing for this $100,000,000 bond issue. It does not increase the amount authorized in the law. Fifty million dollars is provided for in one section and $50,000,000 in another. This bill would repeal both those sections and substitute in lieu thereof one section, and make the amount $100,000,000 instead of $50,000,000 in two different places.

The bill does away with the privilege accorded Panama Canal bonds under existing law, provided for in section 15 of the original T. V. A. Act.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. DAVIS. Will the bonds be subject to State and municipal taxes?

Mr. NORRIS. No; the bond provision is not changed in any particular, except that the bill gives the T. V. A. authority to issue bonds for the purchase of existing generating systems, the property owned by the Tennessee Valley Power Co.

Under existing law the T. V. A. could issue bonds and build the plants; but there is question whether they can purchase the plants when they have been built by others. It may be a doubtful question; but, in order to be sure about it, and have no doubt about it, this measure has been offered.

There are other properties which it is thought might be acquired in the same way. Everyone must admit, whether he be an enemy or friend of the T. V. A., that the method pursued by the Commonwealth & Southern, represented by Mr. Willkie, and the T. V. A., has been the method which all critics of the T. V. A. have said ought to be followed.

They sat around the table and negotiated a sale. The amount agreed upon was satisfactory to both sides. Now there is no authority in T. V. A.—though it is not specifically stated—to issue bonds to purchase the existing generating systems. There is no doubt that they have authority now to buy all the transmission lines, but they have not authority to buy the generating systems. To remove any doubt, the bill has been introduced.

The critics of the T. V. A. have been saying from the beginning that we ought not to go into this territory and generate more electricity, and build more transmission lines because it is already covered and served by private lines. It has repeatedly been said that we ought to buy the private lines if we go into a certain territory. That is what the bill provides for.

There is one exception to that. One of these generating plants is on a tributary of the Cumberland River, as the report will show. While there is nothing in the law which specifically says that the T. V. A. shall not have a generating plant outside of the Tennessee River or its tributaries, yet the whole law is built on the theory that they are going to develop the Tennessee River and its tributaries for flood control, for navigation, and for generation of power.

The Tennessee Power Co. owns one hydroelectric generating plant, not of very much importance, on a tributary of the Cumberland River. The plant is located in Tennessee. I think that tributary is farther South than some of the tributaries of the Tennessee. It happens to be a tributary of the Cumberland River. I have felt that the T. V. A., under the general theory of the entire legislation, was confined to the Tennessee River and its tributaries, and I feel that an act of Congress is required to permit the T. V. A. to buy this particular generating system. The T. V. A. cannot carry out the contract, cannot buy the Tennessee Electric Power Co., unless all of its property is taken. So in order to accommodate the company, in order to make it possible for the sale to go through, the T. V. A. must buy this one hydroelectric generating plant which is southeast of Nashville in the State of Tennessee. The proposed legislation will be for the benefit of the private power company more than for the benefit of the T. V. A. The T. V. A. proposes to do what the critics of the T. V. A. have continually said should be done—buy these properties and take them as a whole, not piecemeal here and there. The bill undertakes to make provision for that.

There is another reason why the provision for $100,000,000 should remain as it is now in the bill, and why the amount should not be decreased. The same negotiators, the Commonwealth & Southern, represented by Mr. Willkie, on one side, and the T. V. A. on the other, are negotiating now with respect to similar properties in Alabama of the Alabama Power Co., which is also a subsidiary of the Commonwealth & Southern.

The same kind of a situation exists in Alabama. It is thought the negotiators can agree on the terms of sale of that property, and if they do the T. V. A. will have to issue bonds, and therefore the amount provided in the bill should be allowed to remain as it is. If the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire should be agreed to, then such a sale would be absolutely impossible under the bill. The Senator ought to see that. He ought to withdraw his amendment. If he wants to do what the minority members of the investigating committee said ought to be done, he should withdraw the amendment.

The Senator from New Hampshire read extracts from the minority report of the investigating committee, a report signed by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], as was stated. There was not anything in what the Senator read which had any bearing directly or indirectly on the pending bill. I shall read to the Senate from the same minority report a paragraph which applies directly to the proposed legislation and cannot apply to anything else. It cannot be construed as anything but a vindication of the pending bill. I read an extract from the same minority report, and I commend it. It is as follows:

> We are of the opinion—

This is the minority speaking, and it is from the same report that the Senator from New Hampshire has read with approval, the report signed by one of our brethren, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS]:

> We are of the opinion that if and when the Federal Government considers it advisable to establish publicly owned power facilities in localities already served by private companies, the Federal Government, in order to avoid duplication of such service, should purchase the properties involved at a fair price determined either by negotiation, arbitration, or condemnation.

The value of the property was determined by negotiation. The negotiators sat around the table, and finally, after many months, I think after more than a year of deliberation, consideration, and consultation, reached an agreement. The extract I read from the minority report I take it is an endorsement of the pending bill. Both sides are agreed upon the bill, and it seems to me it should be supported by anyone who wants to be fair, and who has heretofore yelled himself hoarse saying, "If you want to get this property buy it; negotiate for it and pay for it." That, Mr. President, is what we want to do, and the bill provides that it shall be done.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LA FOLLETTE in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Bearing upon the Senator's statement with respect not only to the purchase of the property of the Commonwealth & Southern Co., in Tennessee, but also on the prospective purchase of property in Alabama, I wish to read a dispatch in the afternoon Washington Star, which has just come to my desk, with a New York Associated Press date line of April 13, as follows:

> T. V. A. AND WILLKIE NEGOTIATORS AGREE ON CONTRACT—TENNESSEE PROPERTIES OWNED BY SUBSIDIARY OF C. & S. INVOLVED
> NEW YORK, April 13.—The historic "public versus private ownership" fight between Commonwealth & Southern Corporation and Tennessee Valley Authority was one stage nearer peaceful solution today after representatives of both sides had reported they had agreed, after long negotiations, on a contract.
>
> This pact, not to be signed until June 20, after more than a score of intermediate ratifications are obtained, provides for sale to T. V. A. and associated municipalities and rural cooperatives of electric power properties owned by a C. & S. subsidiary, Tennessee Electric Power Co.
>
> Among other obstacles to final completion of the agreement Congress must change national law to permit T. V. A. to buy the properties, and negotiators said they feared spirited opposition to the pending Norris amendment on the part of coal interests and a group of taxpayers which alleges the State would lose from $3,000,000 to $3,600,000 yearly in taxes if the deal goes through.
>
> However, Wendell L. Willkie, president of C. & S., praised the "spirit of amity which prevailed" during the technical negotiations here in working out details of the contract.
> T. V. A. and C. & S. negotiators will meet again here, it was said, in about 2 weeks to commence negotiations for sale of northern properties of Alabama Power Co. and Mississippi Power Co., also C. & S. subsidiaries, to T. V. A.

That article corroborates what the Senator has just said, that if the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire were adopted it would make it impossible and futile to pursue further negotiations as to the purchase of other properties in the Tennessee Valley.

Mr. NORRIS. I thank the Senator. If we are to carry out what the majority want to carry out why should we be hampered or interfered with by someone who has some malicious enmity against the T. V. A. and all its relatives?

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. DAVIS. I take it for granted, then, that the Senator endorses that part of the minority report which he read?

Mr. NORRIS. I do endorse it. I always have. I have never believed, and the T. V. A. has never believed, that any other action should be taken. The T. V. A. has leaned backward in order to buy this property rather than to duplicate it and bring on injurious competition which would injure both sides.

Mr. President, it is necessary that the proposed legislation be enacted soon unless we want to see the contract fail and the fight continue. Take, for instance, Chattanooga, the second largest city involved in this matter. Two or three years ago it voted to issue bonds for the purchase of the distribution system and to buy power from the T. V. A. The Tennessee Electric Power Co. owned the distributing system. It owns it now. It is a part of the systems that Wilkie is now selling to the municipalities and that are to be turned over to them. The generating facilities and the transmission lines are sold to the T. V. A.

The municipality cannot wait much longer. I had a conference this morning with two representatives from Chattanooga, and I put the question squarely to them, "How long can you wait? You have voted your bonds. You have commenced the construction of a distribution system." And they said, "We will soon have to go on with the construction of a distribution system to take the place of the distribution system we are seeking to buy under this T. V. A. agreement with Mr. Willkie. Unless this is done within a very reasonable time we cannot purchase the distribution system owned by Mr. Willkie. We shall have to go on with the construction, and the result will be two distribution systems in Chattanooga, with endless competition, which will injure both the private party and the T. V. A."

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. WILEY. I know that the distinguished Senator is a reservoir of information on the subject of the T. V. A. The majority leader read something which suggested to me a question which I should like to have answered. He suggested that there was some opposition because probably something like three and a half million dollars in taxes would be lost to the State of Tennessee, or something to that effect.

Is the set-up of the T. V. A. so arranged that the T. V. A. will take care of the tax burden, and will pay to the municipalities or to the State of Tennessee what would have been paid had not the T. V. A. gone into the picture?

Mr. NORRIS. The bill before us does not deal with the question of taxation.

Mr. WILEY. I realize that fact.

Mr. NORRIS. I have already talked with some Senators outside the State of Tennessee on the tax question. Money in lieu of taxes is provided by section 13 of the original T. V. A. Act. That section provides for the payment of 5 percent on the gross income from sales in Tennessee and Alabama, and in addition, 2½ percent on a generating plant in Tennessee which increases the power in Alabama. In reality, the operation works out so that the T. V. A. always pays 5 percent, and in some cases 7½ percent, on the gross receipts from the sale of electricity.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. Let me finish the answer. The Senator asked me a very proper question, although I do not think it has anything directly to do with the bill before us. I know it does not. However, it is an important question, and one to which I have given much study. Something is wrong which ought to be rectified.

When the T. V. A. started to make contracts with municipalities, the contracts provided that from the income received from the sale of electricity the T. V. A. should pay to the municipality a sum of money equal to what it would have to pay as taxes if it were privately owned. That plan is being carried out in Tennessee. The section referred to, which I concede ought now to be amended, and which, in my judgment, will be amended just as soon as we obtain the necessary facts to do it, was one which I myself drafted, and which has the weakness which I can now see. When the original act was passed I assumed that the money paid by the T. V. A. to the State, and the money which the contractors and municipalities paid in lieu of taxes, would be distributed in Tennessee or Alabama in the same manner as the money would have been distributed if taxes had been paid in that area.

However, that has not been done. That is not the fault of the T. V. A. It is the fault of the States. The State receives the 7½ percent and keeps it. It does not distribute it down through the counties and districts and different taxing authorities as I thought it would. When the municipality receives the money in lieu of taxes, it keeps all of it. The money ought to go out to the counties and other taxing units in the State of Tennessee; and the State of Tennessee ought to rectify the situation by a law of Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I suggest that at the present time the officers of the T. V. A. and the officers of the State government are undertaking to work out a plan in reference to taxation which will equalize and adjust the differences which have been mentioned by the Senator from Wisconsin. Unquestionably those matters will be ironed out by consent. I do not think there will be any trouble about the matter. The T. V. A. is now engaged in trying to work out the problem. Just a few days ago I received a letter telling of the work and stating that the solution was being expedited as rapidly as possible.

Mr. GEORGE and Mr. MILLER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. NORRIS. I will yield in a few moments, but not right now.

I thank the Senator from Tenessee for calling my attention to something which ought to be mentioned, and which he has mentioned. For several months I have been in negotiation with the T. V. A. on the tax problem. I have been in negotiation with private parties who want the taxing arrangements of the T. V. A. Act changed. To me, it is perfectly clear that section 13 of the original T. V. A. Act ought to be changed; and I think the solution will be reached by agreement.

The T. V. A. Board has employed tax experts. I think one of the experts is a professor in St. Louis, who occupies a chair of political economy, or something of the kind. He is an expert on taxation. Other experts have been employed from other universities. The experts have been in consultation with the taxing authorities of the States. An effort is being made to work out the problem. Good progress is being made. When both sides sit down at the table, as in the case of Willkie and the T. V. A., they will reach a fair conclusion, because they all desire to reach the same conclusion. I do not now know, and I cannot know until the experts solve the question or come to an agreement, just what would be a fair provision in the national law to meet the tax question. When the question has been thrashed out by the experts and an agreement has been reached, especially if the bill goes through and the contract goes into force—because the question will be more important then than it is now—there will be no question about the matter. Unless somebody else does so, I expect to follow the pending bill with a tax bill as soon as we can reach an agreement which will be fair.

Before I yield, let me state another thing. One other reason why section 13 is not fair on the tax question is because it applies only to Alabama and Tennessee. Take Mississippi, for example, or Georgia, or North Carolina. Under existing conditions, if the T. V. A. builds a transmission line and sells electricity in those States, the only thing that is paid in lieu of taxes in those States is the amount paid by the municipality. Mississippi, for example, has a considerable number of miles of transmission lines owned by the T. V. A. upon which no taxes whatever are paid. The municipality is the only source of money in lieu of taxation, which money is paid under the contract with the T. V. A. The T. V. A. has done everything it can, so far as I can see; and I assure Senators who have any doubts that I am just as anxious about the matter as they are. The T. V. A. officials have never exhibited to me, in any conferences I have ever had with them, any inclination to do otherwise than to meet the problem.

On the other hand, it must be remembered that there are those who are trying to throw monkey wrenches into the machinery. They are doing everything they possibly can to defeat the program, including proposals with regard to taxes which are simply abhorrent. A proposal from a great association of Tennessee says, in effect, "Let the T. V. A. property be subject to taxation the same as everybody else's property." On my desk now there is a printed amendment intended to be offered which provides that all property of the T. V. A. shall be subject to taxation everywhere under the local laws of taxation. If we go to that extreme, Senators can see that the T. V. A. would be out of business in 3 months. It would be subject to a school-district tax. The people, realizing that the money is coming from the Federal Government, would go the limit on the taxation question. If that proposal is reasonable, then we ought to pay taxes on every post office in the United States. Under a proposal of that kind, when the T. V. A. builds a harbor, say, in Chattanooga in order to provide possibilities for shipping goods in and out of Chattanooga, or any other town in the Tennessee Valley, it would have to pay taxes on the lumber and material in that harbor on the Tennessee River.

We must remember that the property in question is the property of the United States Government. When the T. V. A. buys anything, it is directed under the law to take title in the name of the Government of the United States, and the Government owns every particle of property that the T. V. A. owns. We say the T. V. A. owns it. As a matter of fact, it only manages it for the Government; and we cannot permit that property, which we control, to be subject to local taxation of boards, commissions, counties, and other local taxing authorities, without our having any control whatever over it, unless we want the whole thing to fail.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GEORGE. I thank the Senator from Nebraska.

In the course of his remarks the Senator stated that he had talked with other Senators regarding the matter of taxes on properties presently owned by the Tennessee Electric Power Co., which properties it is proposed that the T. V. A. take over. I have talked with the Senator; and on the Senator's assurance, which he has publicly verified on the floor, I am content to leave the matter, because I feel that an equitable adjustment of the taxes can be made.

However, I ask to have inserted in the RECORD at the conclusion of the Senator's remarks a statement showing the five counties in Georgia which will be rather seriously affected by the transfer of the property to the Government or to the T. V. A., unless the taxes are adjusted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Georgia? The Chair hears none, and the statement may be printed in the RECORD.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. HILL and Mr. MILLER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield first to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, the Senator from Nebraska has well said that the pending bill has nothing whatever to do with taxation in any shape, fashion, or form. However, since so much has been said about taxation, I wish to state that the Legislature of Alabama, which is now in recess, just before it recessed some 2 or 3 weeks ago, set up a special recess committee to study the matter of the taxation of T. V. A. properties and to endeavor to work out a plan of taxation in cooperation and collaboration with the officials and the experts of T. V. A. Like the distinguished Senator from Nebraska, I believe that the representatives of the T. V. A. and of the several States sitting around the table together will be able to work out a system of taxation that will be fair and equitable both to the T. V. A. and to the States and subdivisions of the States.

Mr. NORRIS. I thank the Senator. I now yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question. I find by the terms of the bill that it is limited to the purchase of the Tennessee Electric Power properties. It is contemplated, as I understand the policy, that the T. V. A. may extend its purchases even into other States; and, after all, my State is within the transmission area of the T. V. A. I was merely wondering if it is necessary to confine the operations of the bill to the purchase of one particular system?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator I am very glad he has brought that question up in the way he has done. The bill does not do that, but if the amendment now pending, offered by the Senator from New Hampshire, should be adopted that would be its effect exactly. That is one reason why we should not adopt the amendment under any circumstances.

Mr. MILLER. The Senator from Arkansas was out of the Chamber when the amendment was presented by the Senator from New Hampshire, but if that is the effect of the amendment I should oppose it.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator, I think, is laboring under a slight misapprehension, because the language of the bill says "including the purchase of the electric-utility properties of the Tennessee Electric Power Co." The reason that was put in, as I explained before the Senator came into the Chamber, although I did not then say it was one of the reasons, was that there was one comparatively small hydroelectric plant in Tennessee that the Tennessee Electric Power Co. owned, and that is included in the sale.

Of course we cannot ask them to sell all their properties except that one, and I thought that without putting in that language it would be very doubtful whether the contract would go through, because they were purchasing something not on the Tennessee River or not on its tributaries. Does that make it plain to the Senator?

Mr. MILLER. Yes. The point I desire to be certain about is that by the passage of this bill we do not foreclose ourselves from purchasing other properties of other systems. Very frankly, let me say I wish to extend the system into my own State.

Mr. NORRIS. Under the law, it is possible to extend the system, limited only by the amount of electricity which can be produced within transmission distance of any generating system.

Mr. MILLER. Very well. I do not want the bill limited in its operation to any particular area.

Mr. NORRIS. The amendment now pending would limit the issue of the bonds to include only plants in connection with which a contract had been made before the bill was passed. Of course that would exclude the Senator's State, as well as Mississippi, Alabama, and Georgia, where negotiations are now under way with Mr. Willkie.

Mr. MILLER. Certainly, that being so, the amendment should not be adopted.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, before I pass from the tax question, I wish to make an appeal to the Senate. When I say that I am in favor of remodeling section 13 with respect to the tax question, and that I am in sympathy with doing so, let me say that there are some demands made by taxing authorities that I think are unreasonable and which I would oppose. I do not think the Senate wants to adopt a provision which would tax post offices and turn them over to the local authorities. I do not want to have courthouses taxed, nor do I want roads taxed, which in some places where we build them would be subject to taxation if the same doctrine were applied to them.

I wish to say to the Senate that in all the conferences I have had with the T. V. A. they have shown the same disposition I think I have to meet the tax question. They want to pay what is fair in lieu of taxation. One is likely to get an exaggerated idea now because the States have not done their duty with the money they now get. There would not be any difficulty if the money were properly distributed under existing law. So they are to blame, I think, more than is the T. V. A. A proper taxing bill, if passed, would extend the power to relieve situations that are now not relieved on property outside the generating systems not in the State of Tennessee or the State of Alabama.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, as part of my remarks at this point to insert in the RECORD the report of the committee, which I took a great deal of pains in drafting. I desired to be careful to state nothing but what was correct, and yet I wanted to state it all; I wanted to lay the cards on the table and let the Senate see that if we wanted to do what the enemies of T. V. A. have said we ought to do, then we ought to pass this bill without a single vote in opposition.

There being no objection, the report (No. 189) was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1796) to amend the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933, as amended, having had the same under consideration, beg leave to report it back to the Senate with the recommendation that said bill do pass.

The bill provides for the amendment of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933, as amended, by striking out of said act sections 15 and 15a, and inserting in lieu thereof section 15.

The purpose of the bill is to make possible the consummation of the transaction in which the properties of the Tennessee Electric Power Co. and the Southern Tennessee Power Co. are to be purchased by the various municipalities and the Tennessee Valley Authority. All of the generating properties and transmission lines are to be purchased by the Tennessee Valley Authority. All of the distribution systems are to be purchased by the several municipalities. The negotiations for the purchase of these properties have been going on for more than a year between the Tennessee Valley Authority, on the one hand, and the Tennessee Electric Power Co. and the representatives of the Commonwealth & Southern Corporation on the other, the latter in reality being the owner of the properties to be so purchased. These properties include local distribution systems, transmission lines, and generating plants. The local distribution systems, if the plan is completed, will be purchased and operated by the various municipalities. The transmission lines and generating plants will be purchased and operated by the Tennessee Valley Authority.

Under the existing Tennessee Valley Authority Act, as amended, the board of directors of the Tennessee Valley Authority are empowered to issue bonds and use the proceeds thereof for the construction of dams, steam plants, or any other facilities to be used for the generation and transmission of electric power; also for the construction or acquisition of transmission lines, and for making loans to municipalities and cooperative organizations for the purchase of existing transmission lines and distribution properties. The authority under the law to issue bonds for the "purchase" of existing generating plants is extremely doubtful. It is this defect in existing law which the proposed amendment is mainly designed to remedy. The Authority has now, under existing law, authority to issue bonds for the "construction" of generating plants, but there is no express authority for them to issue bonds for "purchasing" existing generating plants. Practically the only additional authority granted by the proposed amendment is the power to use the proceeds of the bonds for the "purchase" of existing generating plants as distinguished from the power to "construct" generating plants.

The total amount of the bond authorization is not increased. Under existing law the Authority is authorized to issue a total of $100,000,000 in bonds. Of this total, $50,000,000 is authorized under section 15 for the construction of dams, steam plants, and other properties, and for the purchase of transmission lines; and $50,000,000 is authorized under section 15a for loans to municipalities and cooperatives. The proposed amendment merely combines these two sections into one authorization of $100,000,000, the proceeds of which may be used for the purposes already authorized under existing law, and, in addition thereto, the one additional purpose of acquiring existing generating facilities.

Section 15 of the existing law provides that the bonds issued thereunder shall have all the rights and privileges of Panama Canal bonds. This provision is omitted from the proposed amendment. This omission is made because of the objection of the Treasury Department to the issuance of any more bonds having the rights and privileges of the Panama Canal bonds.

Under existing law the authority to issue bonds under section 15a will expire on the 31st day of August 1940. The proposed amendment would extend this time until the 1st day of January 1941. The Tennessee Valley Authority and the Commonwealth & Southern Corporation are now negotiating for the sale of some other properties now owned by the Commonwealth & Southern, and this extension of time is thought wise, in order to give more time for the perfection of such negotiations.

In trying to bring about the consummation of the agreement referred to for the sale of the Tennessee Electric Power Co. properties, there is one comparatively small hydrogenerating plant, located about 50 miles from Nashville, Tenn., on a tributary of the Cumberland River. This is one of the properties included in the proposed sale. While there is no express provision in the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933, as amended, prohibiting the purchase of a generating plant on any stream other than the Tennessee River or any of its tributaries, it is nevertheless believed that all the powers of the Tennessee Valley Authority are confined either to the Tennessee River, or some tributary of the Tennessee River, and it is the opinion of your committee that the purchase of this one hydrogenerating plant on a tributary of the Cumberland River is not authorized under existing law. The purchase of this hydroelectric plant on a tributary of the Cumberland River is of minor importance, but it is one of the properties of the Tennessee Electric Power Co., and it would be unfair to expect the Tennessee Electric Power Co. to sell its entire system of generation, transmission, and distribution of electric current, and not dispose of this one minor generating plant. In fact, the Commonwealth & Southern Corporation, as owner of the Tennessee Electric Power Co., would not and could not be expected, in all fairness, to dispose of its other properties and have that property still remaining on its hands.

It can, therefore, fairly be stated that the proposed amendment, if enacted into law, would, in addition to the powers it now has under existing law, give to the Tennessee Valley Authority power as follows:

(1) To purchase this one generating plant on the tributary of the Cumberland River;

(2) To issue bonds and use the proceeds thereof in the "purchase" of existing generating plants, as distinguished from the "construction" of generating plants;

(3) To extend the power to issue such bonds from the 31st day of August 1940 to the 1st day of January 1941; and

(4) To eliminate from existing law the Panama Canal bond privilege now possessed by Tennessee Valley Authority bonds issued under section 15 of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933.

These are the only changes made in existing law.

Ever since the enactment of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act there has been a constant controversy existing in the courts between the Tennessee Valley Authority and the Commonwealth & Southern Corporation, representing its various subsidiaries, and a great deal of expensive litigation has been the result. The agreement reached by the Commonwealth & Southern Corporation and the Tennessee Valley Authority to carry out this sale of the Tennessee Electric Power Co. properties would end all such controversies and do away with any possible competition between the parties. The price agreed upon for the sale of these properties amounts to $78,600,000, and has been agreed to by the representatives of the Tennessee Valley Authority and the Commonwealth & Southern. The proposed legislation is, therefore, agreeable to both the Tennessee Valley Authority and the private power companies. The principal objection that has always been made by the private power companies is that the Tennessee Valley Authority should not, in conjunction with municipalities, construct competing transmission lines or competing distribution systems in piecemeal, but that the Tennessee Valley Authority should purchase an entire system, such as the Tennessee Electric Power Co., at a value satisfactory to the private owner of the property, and thus refrain from doing an injury to the owner of such private electrical property. The tentative agreement of sale which the bill in question would approve meets this objection. The bill, therefore, is designed to give protection to the private owner and amend the law so that such protection can be brought about.

Therefore, the purpose of the proposed amendment is more for the protection of the private owner of electrical facilities in the Tennessee Valley than it is for the benefit of the Tennessee Valley Authority. The price agreed upon for the sale of these properties is liberal. It is admitted by Tennessee Valley Authority officials that the price is liberal and is probably greater than the value of the property to be purchased. When it was announced after the long negotiations that had taken place that an agreement for the sale of these properties had finally been reached, such agreement was given almost universal approval by the foes, as well as the friends, of the Tennessee Valley Authority. The price was admitted to be a very liberal one even by the enemies of the Tennessee Valley Authority, and the Tennessee Valley Authority agreed to such liberal price on the theory that it would end all litigation and useless and unnecessary, as well as destructive, competition. The committee feel, therefore, that the passage of this bill will give satisfaction to all interested parties.

Sections 15 and 15a of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act, as amended, and which this bill would repeal, are as follows:

"SEC. 15. In the construction of any future dam, steam plant, or other facility, to be used in whole or in part for the generation or transmission of electric power the Board is hereby authorized and empowered to issue on the credit of the United States and to sell serial bonds not exceeding $50,000,000 in amount, having a maturity not more than 50 years from the date of issue thereof, and bearing interest not exceeding 3½ percent per annum. Said bonds shall be issued and sold in amounts and prices approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, but all such bonds as may be so issued and sold shall have equal rank. None of said bonds shall be sold below par, and no fee, commission, or compensation whatever shall be paid to any person, firm, or corporation for handling, negotiating the sale, or selling the said bonds. All of such bonds so issued and sold shall have all the rights and privileges accorded by law to Panama Canal bonds, authorized by section 8 of the act of June 28, 1902, chapter 1302, as amended by the act of December 21, 1905 (ch. 3, sec. 1, 34 Stat. 5), as now compiled in section 743 of title 31 of the United States Code. All funds derived from the sale of such bonds shall be paid over to the Corporation.

"SEC. 15a. With the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Corporation is authorized to issue bonds not to exceed in the aggregate $50,000,000 outstanding at any one time, which bonds may be sold by the Corporation to obtain funds to carry out the provisions of section 7 of this amendatory act. Such bonds shall be in such forms and denominations, shall mature within such periods not more than 50 years from the date of their issue, may be redeemable at the option of the Corporation before maturity in such manner as may be stipulated therein, shall bear such rates of interest not exceeding 3½ percent per annum, shall be subject to such terms and conditions, shall be issued in such manner and amount, and sold at such prices, as may be prescribed by the Corporation, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That such bonds shall not be sold at such prices or on such terms as to afford an investment yield to the holders in excess of 3½ percent per annum. Such bonds shall be fully and unconditionally guaranteed both as to interest and principal by the United States, and such guaranty shall be expressed on the face thereof, and such bonds shall be lawful investments, and may be accepted as security for all fiduciary, trust, and public funds, the investment or deposit of which shall be under the authority or control of the United States or any officer or officers thereof. In the event that the Corporation should not pay upon demand, when due, the principal of, or interest on, such bonds, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to the holder the amount thereof, which is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and thereupon to the extent of the amount so paid the Secretary of the Treasury shall succeed to all the rights of the holders of such bonds. The Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, is authorized to purchase any bonds issued hereunder, and for such purpose the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to use as a public-debt transaction the proceeds from the sale of any securities hereafter issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and the purposes for which securities may be issued under such act, as amended, are extended to include any purchases of the Corporation's bonds hereunder. The Secretary of the Treasury may at any time sell any of the bonds of the Corporation acquired by him under this section. All redemptions, purchases, and sales by the Secretary of the Treasury of the bonds of the Corporation shall be treated as public-debt transactions of the United States. With the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Corporation shall have power to purchase such bonds in the open market at any time and at any price. No bonds shall be issued hereunder to provide funds or bonds necessary for the performance of any proposed contract negotiated by the Corporation under the authority of section 7 of this amendatory act until the proposed contract shall have been submitted to and approved by the Federal Power Commission. When any such proposed contract shall have been submitted to the said Commission, the matter shall be given preference and shall be in every way expedited and the Commission's determination of the matter shall be final. The authority of the Corporation to issue bonds hereunder shall expire at the end of 5 years from the date when this section as is amended herein becomes law, except that such bonds may be issued at any time after the expiration of said period to provide bonds or funds necessary for the performance of any contract entered into by the Corporation, prior to the expiration of said period, under the authority of section 7 of this amendatory act."

The new section which the proposed bill seeks to enact into law is as follows:

"SEC. 15. With the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury the Corporation is authorized to issue bonds not to exceed in the aggregate $100,000,000 outstanding at any one time, which bonds may be sold by the Corporation to obtain funds for the construction or acquisition of dams with appurtenant facilities, generating plants, transmission lines, rural-distribution lines, and other electric-utility properties as authorized by this act, including the purchase of the electric utility properties of the Tennessee Electric Power Co., and for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of section 12a of this act. Such bonds shall be in such forms and denominations, shall mature within such periods not more than 50 years from the date of their issue, may be redeemable at the option of the Corporation before maturity in such manner as may be stipulated therein, shall bear such rates of interest not exceeding 3½ percent per annum, shall be subject to such terms and conditions, shall be issued in such manner and amount, and sold at such prices, as may be prescribed by the Corporation with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That such bonds shall not be sold at such prices or on such terms as to afford an investment yield to the holders in excess of 3½ percent per annum. Such bonds shall be fully and unconditionally guaranteed both as to interest and principal by the United States, and such guaranty shall be expressed on the face thereof, and such bonds shall be lawful investments, and may be accepted as security, for all fiduciary, trust, and public funds, the investment or deposit of which shall be under the authority or control of the United States or any officer or officers thereof. In the event that the Corporation should not pay upon demand, when due, the principal of, or interest, on such bonds, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to the holder the amount thereof, which is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and thereupon to the extent of the amount so paid the Secretary of the Treasury shall succeed to all the rights of the holders of such bonds. The Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, is authorized to purchase any bonds issued hereunder, and for such purpose the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to use as a public-debt transaction the proceeds from the sale of any securities hereafter issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and the purposes for which securities may be issued under such act, as amended, are extended to include any purchases of the Corporation's bonds hereunder. The Secretary of the Treasury may, at any time, sell any of the bonds of the Corporation acquired by him under this section. All redemptions, purchases, and sales by the Secretary of the Treasury of the bonds of the Corporation shall be treated as public-debt transactions of the United States. With the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Corporation shall have power to purchase such bonds in the open market at any time and at any price. No bonds shall be issued hereunder to provide funds or bonds necessary for the performance of any proposed contract negotiated by the Corporation under the authority of section 12a of this act until the proposed contract shall have been submitted to and approved by the Federal Power Commission. When any such proposed contract shall have been submitted to the said Commission, the matter shall be given precedence and shall be in every way expedited and the Commission's determination of the matter shall be final. The authority of the Corporation to issue bonds hereunder shall expire January 1, 1941, except that such bonds may be issued at any time after the expiration of said period for refunding purposes or to provide bonds or funds necessary for the performance of any contract entered into by the Corporation, prior to the expiration of said period, under the authority of section 12a of this act."

It will thus be seen, from an examination of existing law and the proposed amendment, that this bill, in effect, reenacts section 15a as it now exists, in its entirety. The only changes made therein are to give authority to "purchase" existing generating plants, as well as to "construct" generating plants, and by its terms expressly authorizes the purchase of the properties of the Tennessee Electric Power Co., which corporation now owns the one hydroelectric generating plant above referred to, on a tributary of the Cumberland River. It also changes said section by extending the limitation for the issuing of such bonds, from August 31, 1940, to January 1, 1941. It also increases the amount of bonds to be issued under said section to $100,000,000, but inasmuch as the bill strikes out section 15 of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act, there is no increase in the amount of bonds which can be issued.

If this bill is enacted into law, it will decrease the amount of appropriation hereafter to be made by Congress for carrying out the objects of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act to make the Tennessee River navigable to the depth of 9 feet from Knoxville, Tenn., to the mouth of the river, because all of the purchase price of the properties included in the contemplated sale will be paid for by the Tennessee Valley Authority from the moneys received from the sale of electric power to municipalities. The largest hydroelectric plant included in the properties to be sold by the Commonwealth & Southern Corporation to the Tennessee Valley Authority is the Hales bar generating plant on the Tennessee River, a short distance below Chattanooga. This is the only privately owned dam on the Tennessee River, and in order to carry out the provisions of law included in the Tennessee Valley Authority Act it will be necessary for the Tennessee Valley Authority to purchase this dam and to increase its height, or to build another navigation dam between Hales bar and the Chickamauga Dam, located a short distance above Chattanooga. If this sale is consummated, it will therefore follow that this dam will be purchased by money received from the sale of power, instead of by appropriations from Congress. It will thus lessen appropriations necessary to be made by the price of the purchase of Hales bar dam, or, in lieu thereof, the cost of a navigation dam between Hales bar and Chattanooga. It is estimated that if this contemplated contract is consummated, moneys received from the sale of power will be increased in the neighborhood of $5,000,000 per annum, with the result that the total revenue received by the Tennessee Valley Authority from the sale of electric power would be between $11,000,000 and $12,000,000 per annum.

The appropriations hereafter to be made by Congress to give effect to the Tennessee Valley Authority Act will also be greatly lessened by the purchase of transmission lines included in the contemplated sale, all of which will be paid for out of revenues received from the sale of power.

Notwithstanding the liberal price to be paid for the properties included in the contemplated sale, both the friends and critics of the Tennessee Valley Authority, as well as the Commonwealth & Southern Corporation, the real owner of the property to be sold, are satisfied with the price agreed upon for the sale of such properties. The elimination of potentially wasteful competition in this area would be a factor of major importance. An audit of the properties to be purchased, made by the engineers of the Tennessee Valley Authority, indicated that the value of the properties involved in the contemplated sale were not worth more than $70,000,000. The difference between this sum and the total consideration of $78,600,000 agreed upon can be regarded as the cost of eliminating this destructive competition, a competition damaging and injurious both to the Tennessee Valley Authority and to the private owner of the properties to be purchased.

It is extremely important, if this contract of purchase is to be made possible, that the legislation proposed be enacted into law as speedily as possible. Some of the municipalities in the area mentioned have already taken steps to build competing distribution systems. Such attempts are being held in abeyance, awaiting the consummation of the contract between the Commonwealth & Southern Corporation and the Tennessee Valley Authority. Chattanooga is an instance which illustrates the importance of speedy action. Something over 3 years ago Chattanooga voted by an overwhelming majority to take Tennessee Valley Authority power, and, in order to do so, to issue bonds for the construction of a distribution system in Chattanooga or to buy of the Tennessee Electric Power Co., through the Commonwealth & Southern Corporation, the existing distribution system in that city. Lengthy negotiations between the municipality and the Commonwealth & Southern have not resulted in the sale of the distribution system, and the municipality has already commenced the construction of a municipal distributing plant in order that it may get the benefit of cheap Tennessee Valley Authority power. This work is being held up until it is ascertained whether the tentative contract of sale will be carried out. But the city cannot wait indefinitely, and unless the legislation proposed is speedily enacted into law, the city must of necessity go ahead with the construction of the competing distribution system in Chattanooga, which would be to the detriment both of the city and of the Tennessee Electric Power Co.

The purchase of the properties involved in this tentative sale would bring to the municipalities of a large section of Tennessee Valley the cheap electric rates of the Tennessee Valley Authority, and thus save to the citizens of more than 100 municipalities millions of dollars in the purchase price of electric current.

Since the proposed change to be brought about by the enactment of this bill into law is agreed to by the officials of the Tennessee Valley Authority, is satisfactory to the private owner of the properties to be purchased, and is likewise agreeable to the public generally, and since the bill's enactment would reduce by many millions of dollars future appropriations to be made by Congress, your committee believes the speedy enactment of the bill into law is very desirable.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I regret that I was not in the Senate Chamber to hear the entire discussion of the able Senator from Nebraska on this very important subject; but I am concerned with the taxation question, which has been debated briefly since I have been in the Chamber.

I should like to ask the Senator whether or not the record discloses at the present time how much money the local municipalities would lose in local and State taxes in the event that the T. V. A. took title to all these properties?

Mr. NORRIS. The Federal Government or the T. V. A. do not take title to distributing systems. The Senator understands that they do not own distributing systems; they own the generating plants and transmission lines.

Mr. LUCAS. I understand that, but I understood from the Senator's remarks that this bill purported to take over certain property.

Mr. NORRIS. I see the Senator's point, and it is very pertinent. It is a sort of three-sided contract. Certain property is owned by the Commonwealth & Southern through two or three subsidiaries in this case, but one that owns the generating systems is the Tennessee Electric Power Co. That company owns the distributing systems as well as the transmission lines and the generating systems. The contract made by the T. V. A. does not take over the distributing system; it takes over the generating plants and the transmission lines.

But the municipalities, the larger ones, at any rate, such as Nashville and Chattanooga, and so on, which were represented in the conferences which were held, will take over the distributing systems. So the title to any distributing systems never goes to the T. V. A. If the municipalities do not take them over—and there is no compulsion on them, although it is thought they practically all will take them over—if they do not take them over, the Commonwealth & Southern will still own them, but will have no generating plants left when the contract goes into effect. Therefore, the contract provides that as to any municipality that does not buy a distributing system the Commonwealth & Southern will still operate as they do now, with the exception that they will buy power from the T. V. A. over the transmission lines that they will have sold to the T. V. A. to supply them with electricity to carry on municipalities that do not buy distributing systems.

Mr. LUCAS. I think I follow the Senator's thought, but, if the Senator will pardon me, I should like to ask a further question, in order that I may get the matter straight in my own mind. There are certain properties under this bill that the Federal Government will take title to, as I understand, upon which taxes are now being assessed by local communities in the various States.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. LUCAS. I should like to know whether or not the record discloses at this time the total amount of such taxes?

Mr. NORRIS. No.

Mr. LUCAS. Can the Senator give me any estimation as to the total amount of taxes that are now being assessed by local communities which would be taken away?

Mr. NORRIS. No. Even if we do not pass this bill, under the language of section 13 of the act of 1933 generating systems would pay 5 percent of the gross receipts of sales, and the T. V. A. wherever it sells to a municipality requires that municipality to be paid in lieu of taxes the same amount that they would be paid if the systems were privately owned. So that the tax question is not serious, outside of a few counties which happen to be located where a great deal of their territory is overflowed by the construction of dams, which is true in several counties. In such cases it is a very difficult problem to solve. The T. V. A. is now working with various State authorities and officials, on such problems. As the Senator from Alabama has said, the Legislature of Alabama appointed a special committee to confer with the T. V. A.

I was told yesterday that in addition to that the T. V. A. had already called to meet with them a conference of the Governors of the seven States involved. When these parties agree—as they think they will do in the course of a month or so—and when they have all this study made, I propose, if somebody else does not do so, but I have told them I would, to introduce a bill amending section 13 of the original act so as to carry out a tax scheme that will be fair to the Federal Government and to the States and localities.

Mr. LUCAS. I take it, then, from the Senator's remarks, that he agrees that there is a real emergency in certain counties with respect to taxation that goes to local communities.

Mr. NORRIS. There are now a few cases of that kind. Much of that difficulty could have been avoided if the States had done their duty, and had distributed the money they received. In some places it would have been full payment. In some places probably it would have been too much; but the States have not done it. That is one of the duties they have to perform. When this contract goes through, if it does, there will be quite a number of additional cases of that kind. I admit that the problem then will be more acute than it now is. But I desire to pledge to the Senate that so far as I am able to influence the matter—and I think it is coming out all right; I have never seen any objection on the part of the T. V. A.; they want to solve this difficulty we shall have, if this deal goes through, before the present session of Congress adjourns, an amendment of section 13 will rectify all the evils that now exist.

EXHIBIT 1

Amount of taxes paid by Tennessee Electric Power Co. for the year 1938 to the following counties and the State of Georgia

Walker County	2,889.30	1.00	2,890.30
State of Georgia	10,684.92	5,000.00	15,684.92
Total	68,512.61	5,227.88	73,740.49

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, before a vote is taken on the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire, I desire to say that I am very much opposed to the amendment, and hope it will be voted down. It is wholly unnecessary and wholly impracticable, because the contract has been agreed upon but not yet executed, waiting upon this bill; and the bill would entirely fail of its purpose if the amendment were adopted.

I also desire to say that time is of the essence of this contract; and I hope the Senate will pass the bill this afternoon, because it is intensely necessary that these power companies and the T. V. A. get together and perform the contract they have already agreed upon. It is very necessary. Time is of the essence of the contract; and I hope we may have a vote at this time.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, when the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] had the floor, I rose to ask him a question. I now do so.

From the statement made by the Senator, I got the idea—perhaps my interpretation was wrong—that the Government of the United States is the owner of the T. V. A., that title is in the United States, and that there seems to be no limitation upon the authority of this imperium in imperio, this new agency of the Government, to extend its operations outside of the Tennessee Valley. What I am inquiring about is, what are its territorial limits. May it go into some other State? May it attempt, with the charter it has, to develop power plants in the Ohio Valley, or in other parts of the United States; or is it limited exclusively to the Tennessee Valley?

Mr. NORRIS. The Tennessee Valley Act provides that the T. V. A. may carry electricity anywhere within transmission distance of any of its generating plants. That may require it to go into another State, or through another State into a third State, if such a narrow condition should exist, as it does in some places.

Answering the other question, the T. V. A. Act provides in specific terms that all property taken by the T. V. A. shall be taken in the name of the United States Government. I am speaking of the statute from memory. I have not looked at it or read it recently, but I do not think there is any doubt about that statement being true.

Mr. KING. I repeat, Is the authority in that act sufficiently broad that the T. V. A. may go into Ohio, Illinois, or Missouri and construct generating plants, and then extend its activities into other States?

Mr. NORRIS. No; they could not build a generating plant on the Ohio River, or any of the Ohio River tributaries, other than the Tennessee River, which of course itself is a tributary of the Ohio. They have no authority to go beyond the Tennessee River or its tributaries.

The limitation on the sale of electricity is based on an entirely different theory, and that is the ability of man to transmit electricity. That, however, is very nearly settled by the amount of electricity that is demanded, and the amount the T. V. A. can produce. If they produce the maximum amount under the law they cannot go very far out of the Tennessee Valley in supplying it, because the demand is going to take up all of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I send to the desk another amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 4, after line 13, it is proposed to insert the following new section:

SEC. 2. Section 13 of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 13. After the date of enactment of this act the Tennessee Valley Authority and all of its property shall be subject to State, municipal, county, and other local taxation in the same manner and to the same extent as private corporations are taxed."

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, we have heard a good deal of discussion this afternoon about taxation of these properties, and even the distinguished senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], who, I think, will accept the title of grand champion of the T. V. A. in Congress, admits that something is wrong. Therefore I am offering an amendment which in a very simple manner will subject the properties of the T. V. A. to taxation by municipal, county, and State authorities.

To substantiate what I have to say on this subject I refer to a communication from the Tennessee Taxpayers' Association which I shall read, and I call the attention of the Senators from Tennessee to this communication:

TENNESSEE TAXPAYERS ASSOCIATION, INC.,
Nashville, Tenn., March 18, 1939.

DEAR SENATOR BRIDGES: Congressional consideration and appropriate action appear to be required if the people of Tennessee are to obtain a sound, equitable solution of one of the serious problems confronting them.

In brief, the problem requiring your aid in its solution is this:

Privately owned electric utilities have been one of the large taxpayers in 93 of Tennessee's 95 counties and in more than 140 of the municipalities. Approximately 90 percent of these properties have been or are being purchased by the Tennessee Valley Authority and the related local electric distributing agencies which are being created.

The purchase of these utility properties by public agencies brings our State and local government in Tennessee face to face with the problem of replacing the $3,500,000 of annual revenues which will be lost through the exemption of these properties from taxation unless remedial legislation is promptly enacted.

The taxes now being paid on properties which have already passed or will pass to the Tennessee Valley Authority (as distinguished from those passing to municipal distributing agencies) will require replacement in 76 of the 95 counties. In a number of counties the revenues lost represent from 15 to 40 percent of the county's entire property tax revenue. And in Tennessee, as in most of the States, property tax is the principal revenue dependence of local government.

Since Tennessee's constitution makes our counties and municipalities largely and fixedly dependent upon this property tax, the utility-tax problem facing the people of our State resolves itself into choosing one of two alternatives. These are:

(1) Increasing heavily the taxes levied upon homes, farms, and other taxable property of rural and urban people in order to present consumers of electric current with a second and in this case an artificially created reduction in electric rates; or

(2) Securing from the Tennessee Valley Authority and the municipal electric distributing agencies a continuation of the tax payments which have heretofore been made by the privately owned electric utilities. State executives in Tennessee have been told by T. V. A. engineers that the present T. V. A. rate structure probably provides a margin sufficient to cover a continuation or replacement of all State and local taxes now being paid by the privately owned electric utilities.

Under an existing Federal statute the State of Tennessee is now receiving a sum equal to 5 percent of the gross proceeds of the sale of T. V. A. current produced at Norris Dam, in Tennessee, and 2½ percent of that portion of the sales of current produced at Muscle Shoals Dam in Alabama, through certain overseasonal flows due to Norris Dam feedings. These payments now amount to but around $10,000 a year. At most, in 1945, after all Tennessee dams are completed and the product sold, these payments, according to T. V. A. engineers, will amount to only about $625,000 a year. Even at the eventual top level, these payments will replace only about 18 percent of the present revenue losses of State, county, and municipal government in Tennessee.

The insertion in Senate bill 1796 and in H. R. 5068 of mandatory provisions for continuing to State, county, and municipal government all the present tax payments on those electric utilities sold to the Tennessee Valley Authority would assure the citizens and taxpayers of Tennessee of an equitable solution of the grave problem now pending.

A copy of the 20-page report prepared by this association to present the significant factors of this problem is being sent to you under separate cover today. It is hoped you will give this report a careful reading upon its receipt.

Your usual thoughtful consideration of this problem—which is not confined to Tennessee—and your cooperation in prescribing and applying a sound and adequate solution will be appreciated by the citizens and taxpayers of Tennessee, and, we feel sure, by those of the other States similarly affected.

Yours truly,

C. W. BAILEY, President.
WM. R. POUDER, Executive Secretary.

Mr. President, that very clearly states the problem of the farmers and home owners of Tennessee, when they see property after property taken without returning taxation, and the provisions made at present are entirely inadequate. Therefore, my amendment now presented, making the T. V. A. properties subject to local, county, and State taxation is a simple solution. I commend it to the Members of the Senate, and I commend it to the Senators from Tennessee, who should have at heart the interests of the farmers and home owners and taxpayers of that State.

I ask for the adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska a question. I had thought to offer an amendment providing that the bonds which may be issued for the acquisition of the properties in contemplation should not be guaranteed by the United States but should rest solely and exclusively upon the T. V. A. and its property. Does the Senator understand that the Government of the United States would be back of these bonds as a guarantor?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. The bill does not change existing law in that respect one iota. It reenacts word for word the law in reference to the bond question. The property is the property of the Government of the United States, and the theory is that the Government of the United States ought to guarantee the bonds, although the law has been on the statute books as applied to the T. V. A. ever since we amended the act in 1935. That has been the law. The pending bill makes no change whatever in existing law in that respect.

Mr. KING. Assume we passed the pending measure and there were a default in the payment of the bonds by the T. V. A.; then resort could be had to the Treasury of the United States, and the Government would have to pay?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; just the same as in the case of any other bonds. I do not know what will actually happen. Bonds have already been issued under the authority given, but I do not know whether the Government retained them or sold them. It could sell them, and I presume it does sell them, as it does any other bonds.

Mr. KING. Of course, if the Government should sell, the guaranty of the Government would accompany the bonds and enure to the advantage of the vendee.

Mr. NORRIS. That would insure the sale of the bonds at as low a rate of interest as that paid in the case of any other Government bonds. Therefore it would save to the T. V. A., which is the Government of the United States, a large amount of interest on any bonds which might be issued.

Mr. KING. Then, obviously we are incurring a national obligation, though it is in futuro, not in presenti, of approximately $100,000,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Tennessee Valley Authority already has power to issue bonds to the extent of $100,000,000. This is merely a substitute for that authority, so as to cover what they desire to do; that is, purchase properties of private companies.

Mr. KING. But I understand that, while the bond authority exists now by virtue of a preceding act, no bonds have been issued to take up the $100,000,000, and now it is contemplated that bonds in the amount of at least $74,000,000 of the authorized issue of bonds which are to be guaranteed by the Government, shall be issued in order to acquire the property in contemplation.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not know the exact amount, but it is not $74,000,000. It is about $44,000,000. If they make another contract in Alabama—and I assume the Alabama properties are in the same situation with those in Tennessee—they would issue some more bonds, up to $100,000,000.

Mr. KING. I relied on a statement of the able Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], who seems to know just about as much on this subject as the Senator from Nebraska knows, and that is stating a great deal. The Senator from Tennessee said to me that it was seventy-four to seventy-eight million dollars.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Senator misunderstood me. The $78,000,000 is the price which the various cities in Tennessee will pay for the private companies. The T. V. A. does not pay for all of them. Chattanooga will pay for the one in Chattanooga, and various other cities will pay for theirs; but the T. V. A. gets a part of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SECOND DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. REYNOLDS obtained the floor.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, as I understand, there is nothing before the Senate. I therefore move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 5219, the second deficiency appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5219) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, and for prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1939, and June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "Title I—General appropriations—Legislative," on page 2, after line 2, to insert:

SENATE

For miscellaneous items, exclusive of labor, fiscal year 1939, $75,000.

EUROPEAN CONDITIONS AND AMERICA'S FOREIGN POLICY

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I was in the Chamber for a short time today when the distinguished Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] addressed himself generally to the situation in Europe. I was exceedingly regretful that I was not present to listen to all the Senator said, which I am confident was interesting. However, I shall take the opportunity tomorrow of reading in full the Senator's remarks.

I was present when the Senator from Utah made interesting reference to what had been going on in Czechoslovakia, and when he also interested those who were present with remarks concerning other incidents in Europe. Before proceeding with what I have to say, which is in a sense parallel to the remarks of the Senator from Utah, I wish to state that I was not at all surprised, nor was anyone else in this Chamber who knows anything about the European situation surprised, when we read in the newspapers that Hitler had taken more territory which did not belong to him, and that Hitler had taken out of the banks of Czechoslovakia from eighty-five million to ninety million dollars in gold, money which belonged to the Czechoslovakians.

I may add that I was not surprised, and no one within the sound of my voice here today was surprised when we read about Mussolini going into Albania, because everyone who is familiar with the European situation knows that for the past several years Mussolini has been preparing to do the very thing he did do by lending a great amount of money to Zog and his government. As a matter of fact, he loaned a great amount of money to Albania when it was a Republic, and when Zog was President of the Republic, long before the assembly, the Albanian Congress itself, proclaimed him King. Furthermore, we all know that Mussolini had spent millions of dollars in drilling into oil pockets and in developing the mineral resources of the country and in reclaiming several hundred thousand acres of land. We all know that after King Zog ascended the throne the Italian Government continued to put money into Albania. After all, in view of events that have recently taken place in Europe, revolving around the so-called Berlin axis, it was perfectly natural for Mussolini to take over Albania, because by taking over Albania he has truly made of the Adriatic an Italian lake. Eastward, only about 175 miles distant, is the Greek border, and only a few miles farther is about the most important commercial city of Greece, and that is Salonika. That leads to Turkey, of course, in which both the totalitarian states and the democracies are interested. It might be interesting to note in passing, Senators, that that great man, Ataturk, who did more for Turkey than any other man since Turkey was established as a nation, happened to be born in Salonika.

Mr. President, it was not a surprise to us that Mussolini took Albania, because looking east from it is Bulgaria, and to the north, or left of it, is Yugoslavia.

I make mention of that situation, Senators, for the reason that I wish to bring to the attention of the Senate a matter to which I have repeatedly referred in the Senate Chamber and outside of the Senate Chamber, that the people in the world who are most excited about what is going on in Europe are the people of the United States, and the reason why the people of the United States are so excited, and are going crazy and losing their balance with respect to what is going on in Europe, is because in this country innumerable persons are bringing about excitement within the minds of the American people. I am glad that at least one person in the world agrees with my statement. I am rather proud and happy to be able to bring to the attention of this body the name of a man who is a world traveler, who is one of the finest newspapermen that we have in America today, and that man is none other than Mr. Roy W. Howard. Mr. Howard is an executive of the Washington Daily News. I understand he is an executive of a national organization which is interested in the publication of a chain of newspapers. I happen to know Mr. Howard personally, having met him in the Philippine Islands in 1935, at which time a number of my colleagues on the floor were in the Philippines, among them being the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING.]

I picked up the Washington Daily News as I came into the Senate Chamber, and I saw the following in its issue of today, Thursday, April 13, 1939. The heading is: "Europe Less Jittery—Roy W. Howard Says United States Would Be Wiser to 'Play Back' Instead of 'Running Interference.'"

Those are expressions used in football parlance.

The article is dated Paris, April 13, and reads:

An optimistic view of the European situation was professed by Roy W. Howard, of the Scripps-Howard newspapers, in an interview printed today in the Paris edition of the New York Herald Tribune.

Mr. Howard, who recently visited six major capitals of Europe—Rome, Berlin, Moscow, Warsaw, London, and Paris—was interviewed as he embarked for the United States on the Ile de France.

"As far as I have been able to observe," he was quoted as saying, "the French and British people, who are closest to the danger zone, appear less jittery, less inclined to hysteria, than certain ultra-vocal elements at home."

Mr. Howard continues:

"For the moment, I think, Americans can contribute more to peace by keeping their shirts on than by taking their coats off.

"If belligerent statements from America were confined to those who expect to do the actual fighting in the event of war, there would be some eloquent silences from the other side of the Atlantic that would be less jarring on European ears than some of the sounds now being wafted over the ether waves.

"It is probably inevitable that the United States should be mixed up in some fashion in this war game, but it seems to me that it would be smarter for us to play back for a while instead of running interference, as some American politicians and some American editors appear to be doing."

In other words, Mr. President, Mr. Roy W. Howard, eminent and prominent newspaper editor and correspondent, says that the only people in the world who are jittery, the only people upon the face of the earth who are running wild with hysteria about war, are the people of the United States of America. I believe that statement to be true. As a matter of fact, if I may be permitted to say this without its being construed as a personal reflection or without being criticized, I was talking with a lady this morning who represents the New York Post, and who is here for the day. We were discussing the same situation. I said to her, in view of the fact that she had been in Europe last fall, that it was my observation that we today are giving more time and attention to European affairs, to controversies over there, than are the people who are closest to the scenes where war perhaps will come in a year or two.

Mr. President, in proof of that which I have just said I wish to call attention to what I read in a newspaper this morning. As is my custom before leaving my house in the morning I endeavor to glance, as do the other Members of this body, over the columns of the newspapers, because a great deal of the information which we derive from day to day we must glean as we run, because of the innumerable duties we have to perform here, at least a great many of us, particularly those of us whose States are close to the National Capital, and whose populations are large. From 100 to 125 people a day call upon us, and it takes a considerable amount of time to greet our friends courteously, and to give them as much time as they gave us when we were running for office. And we must not forget them.

This morning I read the Times-Herald. In order that I may create no ill feeling on the part of the other Washington morning newspaper, I may add that I am also a subscriber to the morning Post, and also I read it. I have before me page 10 of the Times-Herald. I am merely trying to prove my case. This is the editorial page. I find here two columns devoted to an editorial entitled "Mr. Roosevelt's foreign policy."

Then I find a cartoon depicting "Death," a cartoon occupying three columns. It depicts "Death" extending an invitation to Uncle Sam again to wade Europeward for the purpose of becoming involved in another World War.

Below that, occupying three columns, I find the Voice of the People. Of the six articles addressed by writers of the Times-Herald to the editor of Voice of the People, four are concerned with the European situation; all of which, it will no doubt be agreed, goes to prove the statement I have just made, and which I have made on innumerable occasions, to the effect that the people of the United States of America are exercising themselves more energetically—and foolishly, I might add—relative to the European situation than are the people who reside on the banks of the Seine in France or on the banks of the Thames in England itself.

I go further than that. I ask any Senator who is present this afternoon to pick up tonight the local Washington newspapers, the New York newspapers, or the newspapers from his home town and look under Voice of the People, or in the column in which the readers of the respective home-town papers write to the editors thereof. It will be found that four out of six, or eight out of ten letters written to the newspapers are concerned with the foreign situation; all of which goes to prove that we truly are affected with war jitters. In other words, we are giving so much thought to the subject that we cannot sit still. We cannot think about our business at home. Instead of looking after our knitting in these trying times, and endeavoring to help our President and the officers of this administration, we are doing what? The American people are devoting all their thoughts to European matters.

I have had only about 5 minutes to glance through this particular newspaper. On page 8, in the extreme left-hand corner, I find a dispatch from the city of New York, by Mr. Bainbridge Colby, former Secretary of State of the United States. To the right, to prove how jittery we are, and how serious the war jitters have become, I find to my sorrow a dispatch from Los Angeles, dated April 12, 1939, headed "Ends Life to Avoid War. Fear Drove Boy of 17 To Hang Self, His Mother Believes."

I know that every Member of this body, regardless of his political affiliations, is primarily interested in keeping the United States out of war. Regardless of political affiliations, we all of necessity must admit that war hysteria in the United States is doing more damage to the United States than anything else at this hour.

I am extremely happy this afternoon. I know that none of my colleagues is envious of me in that happiness, because this is a body of unselfish men. I am extremely happy, particularly because I saw in the Washington Daily News of today a statement by a Member of this body whom we all admire, a man for whom we all have and will ever maintain the deepest affection, an affection as deep as that which was portrayed for our beloved comrade who has passed to the Great Beyond, and whose seat now is being occupied by the junior Senator from the State of Indiana [Mr. MINTON]. I speak of our beloved and departed friend, Hon. James Hamilton Lewis, of Illinois.

The man of whom I am about to speak is the senior Senator from one of the great States of the West, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]. I desire to read what the Senator from Idaho said. I know Senators will listen to his words, because they are profound. When he speaks in this body we all listen, because we know that his words are the words of wisdom, like the words which fall from the lips of that great American, that great statesman, GEORGE W. NORRIS, to whom we have just listened.

I am not flattering the Senator from Idaho. I am not trying to curry favor with the Senator from Idaho. However, I am taking advantage of repeating as often as I can the name of the Senator from Idaho, because I know that his name and his words carry weight, not only in this body but throughout the entire length and breadth of the United States.

I am bringing his statement to the attention of the Senate in the form of a letter recently written by him. I share his opinion. I have stated innumerable times the very same things which the Senator from Idaho says.

I wish to read:

Senator BORAH, Republican, of Idaho, denounced European democracies today and advised youth that any war arising from the issues of the current crisis would be "sordid and imperialistic."

This is the Senator from Idaho talking.

Senator BORAH expressed his views in a letter to students of St. Olaf College, of Northfield, Minn., who asked advice of the veteran isolationist and member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, because of "the growing war menace."

Senator BORAH said the issue in any war would not involve the question of democracy or totalitarianism. He contended that the European nations were all alike in their dealings in international affairs.

A SPOILS TREATY

"It was the democracies of Europe which wrote the secret treaties by which all the spoils were divided even before the (World) War was closed," Senator BORAH said. "It was the democracies of Europe which wrote the Versailles Treaty, not a peace treaty, but a spoils treaty. It was the democracies which for twenty-odd years refused to make any changes in the Versailles Treaty looking toward peace.

"These European powers, whatever may be their idea of ideology or political views, pursue one and the same course when they come to deal with international affairs. They all alike violate treaties, disregard the most fundamental principles of right, pursue methods which inevitably lead to war, and then call upon the United States, Canada, and other nations to save them from their own intolerable and vicious methods."

FIGHT HERE

This Nation abhors the doctrines of nazi-ism and communism, Senator BORAH said, but American youth should deal with them when they become a menace in this country and not abroad.

That is good advice.

Senator BORAH counseled youth to "investigate for yourselves as to the real issues which threaten to involve us in another European war.

"A thorough investigation will disclose to you that a more sorbid, imperialistic war could hardly be imagined than this war, should it unfortunately come," he said.

"HAD THEY FOLLOWED * * *

"Reflect for a moment how much better the condition of the world today would be had the spoils of the victors never been incorporated in the Versailles Treaty and all had followed the far-seeing statesmanship of the then President of the United States.

"The courageous Prime Minister of Canada, Mackenzie King, said a few days ago—

This is the Prime Minister of Canada now speaking, Mr. President.

" 'The idea that every 20 years this country, which has done all it can to run itself, should feel called upon to save periodically a continent which cannot run itself seems to me a nightmare and sheer madness.' Again he said: 'In a war to save the liberty of others, and thus our own, we should not sacrifice our own liberty or our own unity.' "

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], who is now presiding over the Senate, will recall that this afternoon the able Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD], who is now in the Chamber, read extracts from a speech delivered in the Parliament of Canada by the Prime Minister of Canada in which the Prime Minister of our neighbor to the north said, in effect, "Let us look after our own knitting; let us take care of our own chickens; let us look after our own sons and daughters; let us concentrate our thoughts upon our own industry; let us confine our activities to mental and physical needs and the desires and the benefit of the citizens of Canada." The Prime Minister of Canada said, in effect, "Let Great Britain take care of herself; we are tired being called upon every 20 years to send the youth of our land, the sons of our Canadian mothers, to Europe to save the so-called democracy of Great Britain."

That was not the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] speaking; that was not I speaking; that was not the able senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] speaking; that was the Prime Minister of Canada speaking, who says that today it is the duty of Canada to take care of Canadians and let Mr. Chamberlain and the Parliament of Great Britain take care of the 49,000,000 people constituting the population of the British Isles.

Here we are exercising ourselves—about what? Exercising ourselves now because we cannot get into a war. The war hysteria in this country has become so strong as a result of propaganda from abroad that the truth about the matter is that our people have been thrown into such a state of great unrest that they almost want to go to war.

Now, let us see about that. Let us face the facts, Senators. Let it be understood now that you and I and all of us are interested in only one thing under God's sun, and that one thing is to keep the United States out of war. I want to keep it out. I will never cast a vote to embroil America in war.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. I should like to ask if the Senator knows of any Senators on the floor who want us to go to war?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Not a soul.

Mr. MINTON. Does the Senator know of any Members of the House of Representatives who want us to go to war?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Not one.

Mr. MINTON. Then who is it who wants us to go to war?

Mr. REYNOLDS. That is what we are trying to find out.

Mr. MINTON. Is it anybody in official life who wants us to go to war?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Not that I know of.

Mr. MINTON. Then, who is it that wants us to go to war?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I read some articles—and I assume the Senator knows that there are some activities on the part of units or groups in this country who are doing their best to get the United States of America to declare that it will join its physical and moral forces with Great Britain and France in case they have a war.

Mr. MINTON. How about the bund?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I will say to the Senator I am opposed to any organization in this country preaching any doctrine that is contrary to American doctrine. I am highly in favor of the passage of the resolution introduced in the other House of Congress by the Honorable JOHN J. DEMPSEY, of New Mexico, and in this body by that great patriot, the Honorable TOM CONNALLY, of Texas, which would expel from our shores any alien who by word of mouth seriously advocates the overthrow of the United States Government. In that connection I wish to take this opportunity to congratulate the membership of the other House upon passing that resolution without a single dissenting vote.

Mr. MINTON. I will ask my friend from North Carolina if he considers the bund one of the un-American organizations?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I certainly consider un-American any organization that advocates anything other than 100-percent Americanism.

Mr. MINTON. The Senator is familiar with the bund. What does he say about the bund?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am not familiar with the bund. All I know about the bund is that the bund had a meeting in New York and 27,000 packed Madison Square Garden at a dollar apiece, and on the outside there were about 27,000 opposed to the Nazis and to the Fascists. That is all I know about it, and immediately after the holding of that bund meeting, with 27,000 people present, I suggested that American patriotic societies, not only in New York, but in Chicago and Los Angeles, where bund organizations and the Communist organizations have been meeting, hold patriotic meetings to outbalance and to overcome the results of what might have remained in the minds of the people throughout the entire United States who had read of the meeting held by and under the control and supervision of organizations of that sort.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, does the Senator know whether it is a fact that the oath of allegiance to the bund organization, whatever it is, requires them to accept Hitler as their leader?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I have not the slightest idea.

Mr. MINTON. Suppose that that were true; would the Senator put the bund in the category that he condemns?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Of course, I would.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Certainly.

Mr. BONE. I may not be able to make any contribution to the thought the Senator is expressing, but if any Member of the Senate has any illusions as to whether or not many people are hell-bent on putting us into war all he needs to do is to read the cufrent issues of the newspapers and magazines, for there is apparently a very studied effort on the part of a large group in this country to thrust the United States of America into the conflicts of Europe by force of arms. That has been apparent, and a meeting recently held in New York is typical of the kind of junk that is coming out of the press of America. We are advised by this meeting, headed by some very well-known gentlemen, that we now confront the choice between liberty and slavery. In other words, we are going to become slaves unless we get into the European war that is now brewing.

Mr. REYNOLDS. And fight right now.

Mr. BONE. "We should let the little fellows over there" in Europe, say these gentlemen in New York, "know that we accept the challenge, and that if they want a fight they can have it." In publication after publication these articles shriek bellicosity. Then, this story winds up by using terms like this about Americans who have not the "guts" to fight:

> During the last 6 months the word "democracy" has become a byword for cowardice, for downright stupidity, for a complete lack of that leadership which has the courage of its own decision, and for deliberate betrayal of every given promise—if that act of treason—

Act of treason? For God's sake, is anyone guilty of treason because he does not want to go into another war in Europe and send our boys there to be butchered?

That is the sort of propaganda that is being smeared all over this country in thousands of pages day by day. Any Senator who suggests that the Senator from North Carolina is not correct in view of this volume of propaganda that is being poured out cannot read.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank the Senator very greatly for his contribution.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President——

Mr. REYNOLDS. Before yielding to the Senator from Indiana, I want to ask the Senator from Washington to favor me and to favor the American people by inserting the article to which he has referred into the RECORD as a part of his remarks as a contribution to my warning to the American people.

Mr. BONE. I will say to the Senator it is not an article; it is merely a story in the newspapers similar to thousands of others.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President——

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. MINTON. I have developed to my satisfaction, of course, that the Senator from North Carolina does not know of anyone in official position who wants to send the United States into war. Of course the newspapers are powerful in this country; we all know that; but they do not vote on whether or not this country shall go into war.

Mr. REYNOLDS. No.

Mr. MINTON. The Senator from North Carolina, the Senator from Washington, the Senator from Indiana, and the other Senators will have something to say about that. So, the Senator from North Carolina says he does not know anybody in this House or anybody in the other House or anybody in the administration who wants to drag the United States into war. I want him to tell us who it is in authority who wants to do that?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Oh, certainly, I do not know of anybody in the Congress who wants us to go to war. Nobody would want us to go to war, because the Members of this body have in mind the mothers of America who would have to send their sons to war. However, I wish to say again, in support of what the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] has just stated, that everybody here who can read knows as well as I do that propaganda is being spread everywhere in this country for the purpose of getting us interested in again saving the so-called democracies of Europe.

We talk about a referendum. I think the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] is the one who circulated here a proposal for referendum, which would grant the American people the right to vote; that is, to say whether or not they would send their sons and pay their money to go over to Europe to save a lot of ungrateful people who now owe us $13,000,000,000. I inquire if the Senator from Washington is the one who did that?

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Yes; I gladly yield to the Senator from Washington; I should like to have his contribution.

Mr. BONE. I cannot claim for myself credit for having circulated it, but I would not absolve myself from responsibility for being one of its sponsors. I believe sincerely in the principle. I do not want the boys of America to be involved in another crazy venture overseas. We went over there once and "came home in a barrel," and the next time the boys will not come home to anything as tangible and real, for there will be no republic here then.

Mr. REYNOLDS. And I am told as to the ones who were killed over there, that the Frenchmen made us pay for the holes in which they were buried. That is how much gratitude they had.

I wish to say that, as a matter of fact, I have about made up my mind to support the resolution to which I have referred, because I think that the American people, the ones who provide their sons as cannon fodder, and the men who pay the taxes for war, should have something to say as to whether or not we shall enter into another foreign war.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BONE. The Senator, I am sure, and everyone else who is thinking coldly and objectively about this question, will find something to challenge them when they analyze the opposition to the referendum proposal. It comes from very high places. Why is it that men in high places object to a bill that will give the mothers and fathers of America an opportunity to vote on a measure that would permit them to have something to say about whether their boys shall go to Europe or Asia to fight in a foreign war? That proposal is being fought from very high places. That ought to have some significance to Americans who are doing any thinking. If men in high public places do not want war, if they want to keep our boys from foreign shores, then, in God's name, why are they fighting that kind of a proposal? When Senators answer that question in their own minds we shall have much more enlightenment on this question than we now have. I say to the Senator from Indiana that if he wants to know who is fighting these proposals, let him read the newspapers and he will ascertain whence the opposition comes.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President——

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. MINTON. Where are they being fought—in the newspapers?

Mr. BONE. Our own Government officials, this administration, fought that issue.

Mr. MINTON. Who is doing so? Name him.

Mr. BONE. We have the Secretary of State objecting to it, if you please. I am astonished that the Senator from Indiana should ask that kind of a question.

Mr. MINTON. Objecting to what?

Mr. BONE. Objecting to the referendum that the Senator from North Carolina has mentioned. I am astonished that the Senator from Indiana is not aware of that.

Mr. MINTON. I should be in favor of any referendum that the Senator from North Carolina is for. [Laughter.]

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank my good friend very, very much.

In that connection, Mr. President, I have a suggestion to make. We can act on such a referendum more quickly, and we can save the American people money, by doing this: Let us provide that only American mothers shall have a right to vote as to whether or not they will send their sons to death, whether or not they will sentence their sons to be murdered. If Senators will accept that amendment, it will not take us long to hold such a referendum, and not another boy will ever be sent from America to Europe to be killed for the benefit of ungrateful people, and not another son will ever be sent over there to be buried beneath the soil of France, or anywhere else, at the cost of the American Government.

Mr. President, a moment ago the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] requested that I yield to him. I could not do so at the time, because the Senator from Indiana had requested that I yield prior to the time I noticed the senior Senator from Georgia. I am glad now to yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I merely wish to say that undoubtedly there has been propaganda in this country—very widespread propaganda and very subtle in its nature—to get us into war; that is, to create the war sentiment and mold the war mind here in the United States. The issue of peace and war, however, lies right in this body and in the body at the other end of the Capitol. It ought to be made abundantly clear and plain that we do not propose to carry the country into war; that when that issue arises, there are those of us here, humble though we may be, who will not vote to have the country go into war.

Mr. President, I desire to take occasion to say that anyone, whether in high or in low place, who gives assurance to European nations that this country is ready to go to war and will go to war, is simply misleading European nations, because the Congress of the United States and the American people have no idea of again engaging in a foreign war. They are highly resolved, I think, upon that course.

Mr. President, there is no need to gloss over the matter. Within less than a week the President of the United States, in bidding good-bye to the people of my own State, said: "I will see you again at Thanksgiving if we do not have war." That declaration, made by the President of these United States, will arouse and has aroused a genuine fear throughout this Nation that somebody has afforded some encouragement to the distinguished English statesman who today said that the United States was in full sympathy with, or fully shared, the expressions that had just been made in the House of Commons by the English Premier.

Mr. President, I speak very humbly here; but when the issue arises I will stand back of this desk and cast my vote against any participation in any war anywhere that means carrying our boys to foreign soil; and I believe Congress will do the same thing. The issue at least is here in the Senate and in the House, and it ought to be made abundantly clear to the American people and to the peoples of Europe that we do not propose to enter into any European war.

I thank the Senator from North Carolina for permitting me to make that statement.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Carolina yield to enable me to ask a question of the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. PEPPER. I wonder if the Senator from Georgia understood or if anyone could have understood the President to have been referring to the question of whether or not war might come in the world generally, or in Europe generally, and not necessarily war to which the United States would be a party.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not know; but I will say to my friend from Florida that my mail today is full of appealing letters from mothers and fathers who did understand the President to suggest that he would be back unless "we" went to war; and I say that undoubtedly America is entitled to know how we in this body stand, and so is Europe.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, the Senator does not deduce, does he, from any conduct on the President's part that the President is attempting to lead the American people into a war?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I am making no statement with reference to the President's purposes or motives; but the American people have not forgotten that many months ago the President at Chicago said that the thing and the only proper thing to do with certain aggressor nations was to quarantine them. The people of these United States have not forgotten declarations which have been repeatedly made by men in high official position; and consequently when good men and women, fathers and mothers, read the statement of the President, issued last Sunday, that "I will be back here at Thanksgiving unless we have war," they were excited; they were disturbed; and I am justified in my place in saying that I will not vote for war.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I think it is important that the country should have some idea of what the President could have meant when he spoke of quarantining certain nations.

What happens in case of a quarantine? Is it an aggressive or a negative action with respect to the quarantined person or place? Is it consistent with quarantining a given area that people may simply let it alone, and dissociate themselves from it? I mean, is that a possible interpretation of the President's statement in regard to quarantining aggressor nations?

Mr. GEORGE. It may be a possible interpretation of the President's statement; but I want to go further right now and say that I will not vote for any measure which will enable the President of the United States to declare who is the aggressor, to say nothing about quarantining the aggressor, because, in my judgment, when we take that stand, we shall take a step toward war.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, does the Senator from Georgia make no distinction as to what our commercial relations should be between, for example, Germany and Italy at the present time and England and France?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, our commercial relations are one thing, and they are governed by such laws as deal with and establish our commercial relationships; but I do say that we should take no part in any European war. In my honest judgment, there is at this time the least possible excuse that has existed at any time in our history for the United States to engage in a war with nations of Europe.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, does the Senator make a distinction between the exertion of our moral force, and perhaps the conduct of our commercial policies, and physically entering into actual participation in a war with men and guns?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, certainly I do; but I do not make any hair's-breadth distinctions that will not stand up. I now say that when we name the aggressor, and when we insist upon treating the aggressor as an aggressor, we have taken the first step toward war, and within 6 months the streets of American cities will again resound to the marching feet of American boys unless we here in the Congress have the courage to say that we do hold the issue of peace or war, and that we will not go to war.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, is it a permissible inference that unless we perhaps do lend our moral strength, and perhaps some of our assistance less than physical participation in war, toward stopping the aggressors, the deplorable situation which the Senator imagines may come about upon the face of the earth, and that surely we shall do nothing to minimize that probability if we just stick our heads in the sand in the way that it is supposed the ostrich does, and do not contribute anything toward peace by our own efforts?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, the Senator may make whatever contribution he believes he is able to make; but, so far as I am concerned, I will not support any measure which gives anyone under our form of government the authority to name and designate and declare aggressor nations in quarrels with which we are not directly concerned; that is, when our interests are not directly involved. I myself do not care to argue the question, because I know that when this country undertakes, as between all belligerents, to name the aggressor, then this country will take a step toward war. I do not propose to have my country take such a step, if I can prevent it. To the utmost of my power I will fight against the United States going into war, and I will fight against our being dragged into a state of war. I think that I am discharging my obligation to the American people in saying that I recognize my responsibility here to determine in a humble way and in small part the issue of peace and war.

I venture the statement, Mr. President—and I venture it without fear or hesitancy—that if we let Europe alone there will be no war.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Carolina yield to me?

Mr. REYNOLDS. If the Senator will pardon me for just a moment, I have heard on numerous occasions from people who are well read, from people who spent last year in Europe; I have heard from them by letter and by word of mouth; and, incidentally, if Senators will pardon a personal reference, when I was in Europe in November and December I was told by everyone who was in the "know," to employ the parlance of the street, what the Senator from Georgia has just stated, that if we will keep out of European affairs and let Europe alone there will be no war in Europe, and if there is a war in Europe, then war will be declared on American soil, because Europe will never go to war unless England and France know that we are going to furnish them the materials of war and back them up to the hilt, to the limit.

I wish to answer the question the Senator from Florida has directed to the senior Senator from Georgia.

Mr. PEPPER. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I desire to answer the Senator's question first, the question that was not answered by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President——

Mr. REYNOLDS. If the Senator will pardon me, I have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina declines to yield.

Mr. REYNOLDS. And I wish to have the privilege of answering the Senator, if he will pardon me.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina declines to yield.

Mr. PEPPER. I thought perhaps I could simplify the Senator's responsibility, because he is not answering me, since I have not attempted to make any suggestion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the Chair will protect any Senator in his right to the floor. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Gladly, Mr. President.

Mr. PEPPER. Am I to understand the Senator from North Carolina to say that he will not in any case agree to American soldiers being sent beyond American soil?

Mr. REYNOLDS. On no occasion would I send a son of an American mother to Europe to fight for any other government of the world.

Mr. PEPPER. May I ask the Senator whether in case the Monroe Doctrine were violated the Senator would agree that American soldiers might be sent——

Mr. REYNOLDS. That is altogether a different proposition. I am a firm believer in the Monroe Doctrine; and I go further than that; I say that, as a firm believer in the Monroe Doctrine, I would stand by those who believe that we should protect the Western Hemisphere.

Mr. PEPPER. Do I understand the Senator from North Carolina to say that if it were necessary in order to defend the Monroe Doctrine to send soldiers of the United States to South America, he would be agreeable to such a course?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Of course, that would depend largely upon the conditions which brought about the sending of our soldiers to the south. In view of the fact that we have gotten into that subject, and that the Senator mentioned our keeping our heads in the sand, let us be reasonable. I know the Senator is.

The Senator from Florida spoke of the Monroe Doctrine. In that doctrine we embody the thought and make the assertion to the world that here in the Western Hemisphere, where are located Canada—and the President of the United States included Canada—and the United States of America, the West Indies, Mexico, Central and South America, we have given notice to the world that this is our playground, this is our territory, this is our slice of the melon of the world, and we are the big boy with the big stick over here. That is what we are telling the world. To show the inconsistency of the attitude we now assume, with one breath we say, "This is our country, boys. Stay over where you are. If you come over here we will beat hell out of you." [Laughter.] That is what we are telling the world. In the same breath we are telling Japan that she cannot create for herself an empire in the East. We are telling her that she cannot do that which we have already done.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, does the Senator favor letting Japan take the Philippine Islands?

Mr. REYNOLDS. The Philippines have been the greatest liability the United States has ever had. Consisting of hundreds of islands, with a population of about 16,000,000 people, they have cost the taxpayers of the United States millions upon millions of dollars. We have built fine roads for the Filipinos. We gave them such educational advantages and facilities in the form of schoolhouses as no other country of the oriental world has ever had the opportunity of enjoying. We have there constructed great fortresses and military posts; we have developed oil wells and great gold mines with American capital. We have been very generous with our investments there, and we have been very generous to the Philippine people, who are a fine people. But I do not think that we as a nation have any business in attempting to rule the world. That is the position I take in reference to that.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the able Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Does not the Senator think that we ought to settle the real-estate titles of Europe and the boundary disputes in Europe? Does not the Senator think that when people get to quarreling about a boundary line in Europe, whether the line ought to be in one place or another, we should take our heads out of the sand and stick our noses into the fire and settle the dispute? Ought we not to go right over there and settle the real-estate titles and 2,000-year-old boundary disputes of Europe? Ought we not go over there and say how things are to be done in the Old World? They have not been able to settle their quarrels for more than 2,000 years. We thought we were settling them during the World War, but we did not settle them very well. Should we not go over there and try to settle them just once more? Or how many times should we go over there?

Mr. REYNOLDS. In further reference to the Philippines, I like the Filipino people. I think they are a very fine people. I know a great many fine Filipinos. I was there with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON], I was there with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY]——

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. REYNOLDS. I beg pardon; not with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] but with the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING].

Mr. BARKLEY. I would have been delighted if I had been there with the Senator.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank the Senator very much. I am sure that if the Senator had been there with me he would have had a wonderful time, because I did not get a great deal of sleep, and the things I enjoyed, knowing the Senator as I do, I am sure he would have been right along with me enjoying. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, I like the Filipino people. I know some very charming Filipinos, some very fine Filipinos. I know the President of the Philippines, President Quezon. I was in the Philippines and witnessed the inauguration of the first President of the independent Filipino Commonwealth. I wish to say to the Senator that, despite the fact that I respect the Filipino people, despite the fact that I wish that we were rich enough to support them eternally, despite the fact that I wish that we had sufficient money to send them millions upon millions of dollars every year—perhaps, from the pockets of the taxpayers of the United States—I would not take from the bosom of the humblest American mother her son and send him to the Orient or to Europe to save the Philippines or any other country.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Would not the Senator be willing to send that son to the Congo, or somewhere else in Africa? The Senator did not mention the Congo.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Why should we send our money to the Filipinos? Why should we have our sons spill their blood for the Filipinos? I like the Filipino people. So do other Senators who have been there. They have learned to like those people. But, Senators, I ask the question, which is being asked today by the American people, Why should we worry ourselves to death about the other people in the world when we ought to be doing just what the Prime Minister of Canada said he was doing for his people? We ought to be taking care of the people of the United States. That is what we ought to be doing, instead of worrying about the people in the Philippines, or worrying about what is going to become of Chamberlain, or the people in London or the people in France. We had better be worrying about what we can do to help the people of the United States.

Mr. President, I sometimes think we have gone crazy. There are 11,000,000 people out of employment in the United States. In addition, there are 26,000,000 people who are working only part time. In addition to that, there are 3,000,000 people on the W. P. A. rolls. In addition, there are 300,000 youngsters, fine boys, in the C. C. C. camps.

In addition to that, there are 4,000,000 people working for the Federal Government, the 48 State governments, the more than 3,200 counties, the more than 10,000 municipalities, and the more than 20,000 political subdivisions in the United States. And here we are, with an indebtedness of $40,000,000,000, worrying about what is going to become of the poor Filipinos, or what is going to become of the boys over in London or those in Paris. My God, have we gone crazy?

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. In confirmation of the able Senator's statement, I will say that I had occasion to place in yesterday's RECORD, or that of the day before, the figures of the American Federation of Labor for the last 10 years, by months, as to unemployment, and they wind up with the figure for February 1939, of 11,470,000. The Hamilton Institute of New York gives the present figure of unemployment at 12,882,000, which is still higher.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank the Senator, but I want to be very conservative in my statement.

Mr. LUNDEEN. The statement of the Senator is amply borne out by the greatest bureaus that we have for determining unemployment. I do not know the exact figure on unemployment of our own congressional census, but it was nearly 11,000,000, and that certainly provides ample opportunity for the scope of our legislative talents. We have all we can do to attend to the job over here, and I should hope that we have the good ordinary common sense to attend to our own business.

Mr. REYNOLDS. But, Mr. President, have we?

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. BONE. I have always entertained a very high regard for the able and distinguished Senator from the State of Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], but when on this floor a moment ago he uttered sentiments that I think are very close to the hearts of the people of America, the average human beings in America, my admiration and respect for the Senator from Georgia deepened immeasurably.

I can only say, sir, that when he utters such sentiments there speaks a man. Thank God, there are in the Congress of the United States those who have the moral courage and the statesmanship to rise in this body and speak as he has spoken before we are met with another slogan such as "He kept us out of war," and other sentiments of that character, at a time when a man may utter his views without going to jail; for if this wild hysteria continues, it may not be safe for even a United States Senator to utter sentiments such as have been uttered this afternoon by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE].

Mr. President, if this mania for interfering with other people's business continues, it will not be safe even for a Member of the Congress of the United States, who speaks for the people of his State, to stand in his place and utter sentiments of this kind.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Pardon me; but I want to warn the Senator now that he had better guard his remarks, because if he uses too strong language on the floor of the Senate or elsewhere in his endeavor to try to keep the United States out of the European trouble the first thing he knows he will be labeled a Nazi or a Fascist. The Senator had better be careful! [Laughter.]

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, it is highly revealing to discover on the pages of American history that have been written in the past that only a few years ago we were arming Germany, the Germany we appear now to hate so much. We were arming Germany in the air with our own American airplane facilities.

The committee upon which the able Senator from Georgia serves developed the fact that private American munitions manufacturers were at that moment sending hundreds of the finest American military airplanes into Germany.

On November 3, 1934, nearly 5 years ago, Mr. Bryce Oliver, now a prominent radio commentator in the city of New York, wrote a very enlightening article in the Macfadden Weekly, which was headed: "United States and Britain Arm. Munitions Makers Sow Dragon's Teeth as They Prepare to Sell 2,500 Battle Planes to the Hitlerites for 'Defense Only.'"

We were at that time arming Mr. Hitler in the air and creating this Frankenstein monster that now apparently rises to torment so many people. Those of us in the Munitions Committee who dared stand on the Senate floor and protest were chided, and not always gently, sir, by Members of this body, for being alarmists.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the article to which I have referred, which is now nearly 5 years old, written by Mr. Bryce Oliver at that time, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Macfadden Weekly of November 3, 1934]

UNITED STATES AND BRITAIN ARM GERMANY FOR AERIAL WAR—MUNITION MAKERS SOW DRAGON'S TEETH AS THEY PREPARE TO SELL 2,500 BATTLE PLANES TO THE HITLERITES FOR "DEFENSE ONLY"

(By Bryce Oliver)

WASHINGTON.—Shocking as they were—those grim revelations of the Senate munitions inquiry—there was other evidence, even graver in character, which has been suppressed in fear and trembling of a world-wide conflagration.

It is concerned with official American recognition of certain contracts, under which American and British firms are swiftly rearming Germany in violation of the Treaty of Versailles, to which both nations are signatories.
